PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 99th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE—Friday, June 20, 1986

(Legislative day of Monday, June 16, 1986)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

God of all comfort, we commend to Your care and compassion Stu Balderson, financial officer, and his wife, Marie, in the tragic death of their son yesterday.

And so we remember the family of Len Bias and all who loved him.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters. he restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou annointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.—Psalm 23.

Thank You Lord for this beautiful psalm from one of history's great rulers, King David. Thank You for its promise of rest, restoration, and fearlessness, even through the valley of the shadow of death for You are with us. Help us to hear and believe and live. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able and distinguished majority leader, Senator DOLE, is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer, Senator THURMOND.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, under the standing order, the leaders have 10 minutes each. I know that the distinguished minority leader will not be available until about noon, so I ask that his time be reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Following the leaders' time, there will be special orders in favor of Senators HATCH, PROXMIRE, HATFIELD, GORE, MELCHER, and STEVENS.

There will be routine morning business, not to extend beyond 10:15 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak for not more than 5 minutes each.

At 10:15, the Senate will resume consideration of H.R. 3838, the tax reform bill, under a previous unanimous-consent agreement. I think the record was made rather clear last evening that there will be no more than four rollcall votes. It is hoped that there will not be four. There may not be one, two, or three.

In any event, we agreed that if there will be more than four, they will be put over until next Tuesday.

We will be on the tax bill today. There could be rollcall votes. We hope, according to the managers—Senator PACKWOOD and Senator LONG—to dispose of 15, 20, or 25 of the amendments that are on the list.

Again, I caution my colleagues that I would not plan on waiting until Tuesday, because on Tuesday we will have about 6 hours before final passage. So if you have an amendment that you want to discuss, today would be a good day to do it.

It is also our hope that there will be no record votes after, say, 2 or 2:30 this afternoon. But, again, I am advised by the managers that that does not mean we will stop work at that time. It means that we stop rollcall votes; and we hope that either before or after that time, there will be a number of Senators on the floor to work out their amendments with the managers, because I understand that many amendments can be accepted and some may be withdrawn.

In any event, we really need to make progress today. Otherwise, there will be a number of Members who will be very upset, come Tuesday afternoon, when they have not had an opportunity to call up their amendments. They could still call them up and have a vote, but there would be no debate.

BACK TO THE ROOTS OF TAX REFORM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, based on the bipartisan agreement last evening, there is no question that we are on the way to enacting real tax reform legislation in the Senate. It has been debated and discussed, amendments have been offered; and every major amendment has been defeated, in accordance with the plan of the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator PACKWOOD.

Across the country, there is a feeling of relief on the part of American taxpayers that we are finally discussing real tax reform. We have read editorials in the big city newspapers in support of tax reform. We have heard the commentators. Yes, there have been some disagreements, but the call for true reform is almost universal. In my home State, we have had an encouraging response from our newspapers, and I would like to share these words with my colleagues.

The Hutchinson News perhaps said it best: "Wow! It's Reform." That is what the people want and what they have come to expect of the Senate bill. In my view, because of the cooperation on both sides of the aisle, we have accomplished that goal. It has not been altered to any great extent. It puts the Senate in a very strong position in conference, so we can insist on the Senate rates and to work out some of the other problems that deal with real estate and many of the transition rules Members are sponsoring.

Overall, it is my view that we are on the way to a substantial—but not unanimous—vote in favor of this revolutionary legislation.

KANSAS TALKS TAX REFORM

Since the historic reform package crafted by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee arrived on the Senate floor, we have spent half the time "watching grass grow," and the other half battered by an almost round-the-clock amendment blitz. And there was not exactly a shortage of speeches, either—especially in prime time. Much of the activity has been technical and—in the tradition of this body—confusing. And I am certain our new TV and radio audience is hungry for an interpreter.

But despite all the confusion, the reasons for tax reform remain the same: Fairness and simplicity for the American taxpayer. And amid all the flurry, we should not lose sight of those compelling reasons for this legislation.

Mr. President, if we need to be reminded as to what we have been pursuing these long, long days and nights, I suggest we read some common sense from the heartland of America. I am talking about the opinions of tax reform from Kansas newspaper editors. These opinion makers know a good thing when they see it, and they knew they saw a good thing when the Finance Committee produced the remarkable bill we have been considering these many days.

One editor, from the Hutchinson News, said it best: "Wow! It's Reform."

And there is more Kansas wisdom, such as these words from the Iola Daily Register:

The Packwood bill—just as it is—would make the income tax much fairer and give the U.S. economy an enormous boost. If the 90-percent of the population who would benefit under its provisions would rise to its support, it could be written into law this year.

The Wichita Eagle-Beacon also was quick to underscore the popular theme of our bill:

The measure significantly would reduce personal and corporate tax rates, remove millions of poor people from the tax roles, abolish many of the current system's abuses and make economic productivity, not the Tax Code, the primary rationale for many financial decisions.

Writing for the Johnson County Sun, John Uhlmann recognized that history could be in the making:

All too often, it is claimed that a piece of legislation will be great for the people and the future of this country. Watch closely and enjoy, for this is one of those rare occasions where that claim will come true.

Mr. President, we are on the verge of a major breakthrough for the beleaguered taxpayer. Let us heed some common sense from the Newton Kansan:

The package as the committee wrapped it is a good one. The Senate should not unwrap it.

I ask unanimous consent that the complete text of these tax reform editorials be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Iola Daily Register]

TAX REFORM BILL NEEDS PUBLIC SUPPORT

A radical tax reform bill sailed out of the Senate Finance Committee with a unanimous vote Wednesday and appeared headed for passage by the Senate next month.

Most Iolans would pay less federal income tax if it becomes law. The dollars they saved would be paid by big business—and by a relatively small number who have been sheltering high incomes under the present tax code.

Under the bill there would only be two tax rates, 15 and 27 percent, and many of the deductions now being used by those who itemize would be eliminated.

Perhaps the most controversial change proposed is elimination of the deductibility of money invested in individual retirement accounts by persons enrolled in pension programs at work. The change, it is charged, would discourage saving by millions of middle-class families.

Sen Bob Dole of Kansas disagrees with this assessment, however, Sen. Dole, who is a member of the finance committee, said dropping the tax rate to 15 percent for families with moderate incomes would more than compensate for loss of the IRA deduction.

Dole's point can be made as an answer to all of the other complaints that will be lodged by those who will lose the advantage of deductions they now are taking. The lower tax rates should compensate for the loss.

The only individual taxpayers who would pay more under the new code would be those with high incomes who had been able to take high deductions under the current code. They would be able to afford the increase.

The money saved by families and individuals would be made up primarily by profitable businesses which would lose deductions, such as investment credits on the purchase of new equipment.

The bill is designed to bring in as much money as is now produced by the income tax, so it will have no effect on the federal budget.

The reform measure was written by Sen. Bob Packwood, chairman of the committee, after a far more complicated measure he first proposed was picked to pieces. His second effort offers changes as sweeping as that proposed by the Reagan administration last year.

Like the Reagan proposal, Packwood's bill would exempt about six million more American families from the income tax altogether and, by lowering all other rates and eliminating many deductions, change the way business decisions are made in this country.

Today tax consequences weigh heavily when businesses and individuals consider whether and when to buy equipment, build or improve buildings, expand or contract their operations. If Packwood's reform passes, such decisions would turn far more on business reasoning. The result should be a more efficient, productive ecomony.

The lowered rates would allow millions of lower and middle-income Americans to keep more of the money they earn. The additional spending power created would be a powerful stimulus to business and could prolong expansion of an economy which appears due to slow down next year without a new shot in the arm.

Despite all those pluses, the Packwood bill will be under tremendous pressures. Those who would benefit the most from it—lower and middle income families—belong to the vast majority who only contact members of Congress when they feel threatened.

They'll stay on the sidelines, silent, while all those who have something to lose if the bill becomes law pour into Washington to make their pleas.

It will take all of the resolve the good ladies and gentlemen who write the laws can muster to stay the course.

Their task would be much simpler if that silent majority would bestir itself this time and speak up.

The Packwood bill—just as it is—would make the income tax much fairer and give the U.S. economy an enormous boost. If the 90 percent of the population who would benefit under its provisions would rise to its support it could be written into law this year.

TAX REFORM: LOBBYISTS VS. PUBLIC

Armies of lobbyists are being recruited to defend the tax shelters and preferences threatened by the tax reform bill drafted by the Senate Finance Committee.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole now stands as a tribune for tax fairness, simplicity and economic good sense against the hordes of privilege. If Mr. Dole can steer tax reform through the Senate and eventually into law, he would do much to dispel the popular perception that Congress is beholden to economic special interests—and their political action committees.

The Senate Finance Committee bill is clearly beneficial to most Americans and to the nation's economy. The measure significantly would reduce personal and corporate tax rates, remove millions of poor people from the tax roles, abolish many of the current system's abuses and make economic productivity, not the tax code, the primary rationale for many financial decisions.

Realizing that Congress doesn't always put the national interest above the special interests, the Finance Committee put some "lobby-proofing" in the tax reform bill. The committee measure says a final Senate bill must be "revenue neutral," meaning that any amendments that cost the Treasury must include a way to replace the lost money.

Without that discipline, the Senate undoubtedly would turn tax reform into an auction of special-interest tax breaks. Now, however, a senator wanting to preserve the deduction for Individual Retirement Accounts, for example, must gore someone else's ox to get it.

Some special interests would prefer to kill tax reform entirely rather than lose their loopholes. The current system has allowed numerous individuals and corporations to avoid carrying an equitable tax burden. Many lobbyists have earned large salaries by getting tax breaks out of Congress. Such people are not going to surrender their special favors just to make the tax code fairer and simpler for their fellow citizens.

Mr. Dole, Finance Committee Chairman Robert Packwood and President Reagan have promised to push the Finance Committee measure. Arrayed against them are some of the most clever, determined people in Washington. Whether the people's representatives withstand the onslaught of outraged special interests could set the tone of government for years to come. Tax reform is no longer just a good idea. It has become a test of who rules Congress.

[From the Kansas City Star, May 14, 1986]

SIMPLICITY ITSELF

Simplicity. That's what the new tax bill promises, regardless of whether it will raise or lower your taxes. Even for those who would end up paying more under the proposed system, its simplicity offers some consolation.

The proposal would allow people to quit worrying about how they ought to make their money to take maximum advantage of complex tax laws. Spending decisions would also be easier for the same reason. A dollar here would be much more like a dollar there.

Fewer people would itemize. More average citizens could, at least after a year or so, figure their own taxes instead of having someone else do it. You could forget about filing away sales tax receipts. You could evaluate investments on their own merits as they relate to your life, rather than the artificial ones set up at some point in Washington.

You could enjoy weekends in early April a little more.

Simplicity is not the only requirement for a tax system. It is not even the most important one. But in an increasingly complex world, one that presents us with an abundance of information and misinformation to evaluate, simplicity is worth something. Maybe it's worth more than we realize.

[From the Hutchinson News, May 9, 1986]

WOW! IT'S REFORM

No matter what happens to the Senate Finance Committee's startling new tax reform bill, 20 U.S. Senators have given new meaning to the language and new hope to everyone weary of being battered by special interests.

The plan is truly tax reform

That alone will brush away years of cynicism about politicians' actions in Washington, where tax reform in the past has always meant tax increase.

Because it is tax reform, the plan gores most special interest loopholes in the U.S. tax code. That, too, makes the proposal so appealing.

The plan proposes only two tax brackets: 15 percent and 27 percent. Currently there are a bewildering 14, with tax rates ranging from 11 percent to 50 percent, in the midst of a complex array of deductions and loopholes geared obviously for the wealthy.

In the new Senate Finance Committee's proposal, some of the middle class' favorite deduction loopholes would be kept. They are deductions for interest paid on home mortgages and deductions for state and local income and property taxes, and deductions for charity.

But that's about it for deductions. Tax shelters would be zapped. Rich taxpayers would be tapped in other clever ways to prevent them from getting a windfall in the sharp reduction of their tax rates. Corporations would pay a lot more income taxes. And millions of poor people would not have to pay any income taxes.

A few special interest loopholes have survived (and many more, of course, will be sought in the forthcoming hassle as the special interests mobilize).

But the new tax reform bill approved near midnight in Washington Tuesday deserves an astonishing salute from the nation. It's far better than anyone would have dared to hope could ever be generated anywhere in the U.S. Congress.

The task now will be to encourage all our congressmen to fight off the frantic special interests and perfect a tax reform bill that, astonishingly, currently is a tax reform bill.

[From the Newton Kansan, May 19, 1986]

KEEPING IT ROLLING

The Senate Finance Committee has produced a good tax reform bill, supported by all the committee members. Now the bill will have to be defended on the floor of the Senate from lobbyists representing special interests.

The floor debate, which is expected to occur next month, will be the first major debate in the Senate to be televised.

Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W. Va., the Senate minority leader, has endorsed the Senate Finance Committee version of tax reform, as has the Senate majority leader, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.

Byrd called the bill real tax reform and said he doesn't expect great changes to be made in it on the floor of the Senate. He doesn't think it will become a "Christmas tree" tax bill.

If anyone could decorate this bill with tinsel and baubles for the special interests, it would have been done in the Senate Finance Committee, where the special interests have historically achieved their purposes. But it was not done. Miraculously, Sens. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., the committee chairman, and Bill Bradley, D-N.J., a champion of income tax reform, managed to get a relatively clean bill out of the committee and onto the Senate floor.

Real estate interests called the bill "a meltdown" because it destroys real estate tax shelters.

But the Senate Finance Committee bill is good precisely because it eliminates most tax shelters. If it is to be amended, the remaining ones (for the oil and timber industries) should be dropped.

The elimination of Individual Retirement Accounts for employees covered by other retirement plans is causing great commotion. The IRA tax exemption was a good idea, stimulating individual saving and investment. But comprehensive tax reform is a better idea, and it would certainly be preferable to pass the Senate Finance Committee tax reform bill intact rather than to open it up to a process of amendment which would give the lobbyists a field day.

The package as the committee wrapped it is a good one. The Senate should not unwrap it. Pass it on to a Senate-House conference committee without any amendment. That will make it harder for the special interests to tamper with it.

[From the Hutchinson News, May 19, 1986]

SURE, KILL IRA's

The tax reform bill passed recently by the Senate Finance Committee is a collection of magnificent tax reform decisions.

One of the best decisions was to kill the highly popular IRAs as tax loopholes.

The IRAs are loved by practically everyone. They have been embraced by 25 million Americans in only five years. They have been extremely popular with banks, brokers, savings and loan companies and other financial institutions. They could generate extraordinary retirement advantages for the people who have signed up.

Yet the IRAs should go, as the Finance Committee recommends.

The reason is that the IRA is a tax loophole, too. It is for special interests, mainly the more well to do. (How many poor people can afford to live on current income, let alone set aside $2,000 for retirement?)

The IRA is a classic example of subsidization of the middle or upper class by the poor, as part of a complex tax structure that favors the wealthy.

The financial community will scream at the loss of the IRAs. Let it. All the other special interests will scream at the loss of their favorite loopholes in the proposed reform bill. Let them.

Instead of compromising away some of these radical tax changes, the nation should demand more of the same. More of the surviving tax loopholes should be closed. More of the surviving special interests should be gored.

The IRA decision is a magnificent start in admitting who the special interest villains are and what needs to be done.

But we should go all the way.

The nation now should demand also that income tax deductions be ended for home mortgage interest payments, state and local taxes, and all other deductions.

If only Pogo were alive to see all this.

PACKWOOD BILL WILL HAVE A POSITIVE EFFECT

(By John Uhlmann)

Our nation is witnessing an historic event of enormous proportions. The Senate Finance Committee chaired by Senator Bob Packwood (R-Oregon) has proposed a tax bill which will have a profound and immensely positive impact on this country and the welfare of its people.

This is a tax code which almost everyone can understand. The overwhelming majority of individuals and companies will benefit from much lower rates. Lower rates are achieved by eliminating almost all tax preferences, sometimes referred to as "loopholes." Those few deductions which are left will benefit a great number of Americans such as homeowners and charities. Our senators and congressmen will be freed from the clutches of special interest lobbyists attempting to gain benefits for their organization, industry and/or company.

That the total wealth of the country will increase is self-evident, as individuals and corporations invest for the greatest financial return rather than in those activities which Congress, with the aid of special interest lobbyists, determine will return the greatest social good. Businessmen, lawyers and accountants will figure out ways to better serve the public rather than spending their efforts petitioning Washington for tax advantages to serve their own parochial interests.

A reasonable and logical question is: "If this is so wonderful, why has it not been proposed before?" To answer this question and to forecast the future benefits to the nation, we must review the current situation in its historical perspective.

In 1801, President Thomas Jefferson declared he wished to abolish all internal federal taxes and reduce federal expenditures and personnel. Alexander Hamilton was horrified. Thus began an ongoing battle which still rages today between those who would leave the nation's financial affairs in the collective judgment of the people (populists) and those who believe that the nation's important financial decisions should be determined by a small, enlightened group of brilliant people (central planners).

In the last fifty years, the Hamiltonian view has won over the majority of those in the House and the Senate. It has served them well politically by buying votes from their constituency and monetarily by raising funds from special interest lobbyists, and has stroked their egos by giving them the feeling they have the power and intelligence to direct the economy.

It now appears that the people are on the verge of a great victory. Every political faction can claim credit for this victory. Liberal Democrats can point out that this bill strikes at the rich who do not pay their fair share. Moderate Democrats, such as Senator Bradley of New Jersey and Representative Gephardt of St. Louis, can point with pride that this bill closely resembles the one they have been proposing.

Liberal and moderate Republicans, including Senator Jack Danforth, led by Senator Packwood, put together the cohesive package. This gained a unanimous (20-0) vote in committee. Senator Bob Dole played a central role in pushing this measure through the committee. Conservative Republicans, led by President Reagan and including Congressman Jack Kemp, provided the philosophical climate which resulted in the cataclysmic change to a populist approach to raising revenues.

All to often it is claimed that a piece of legislation will be great for the people and the future of this country. Watch closely and enjoy, for this is one of those rare occasions where that claim will come true.

UNITARY TAX PROPOSAL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last evening there was some disagreement on whether or not the unitary tax amendment was to be included in the list of amendments, and there was a lot of misunderstanding. I know that Senator WILSON felt strongly.

I was informed by some that had they known it was on the list, they would have objected. In an effort to reach an agreement, Senator WILSON agreed to withdraw that amendment in consideration that, in turn, he could be promised hearings in the Senate Finance Committee. That agreement was made with the chairman; and there are a number of other Senators, I assume, on both sides, who have an interest in serious hearings on that proposal.

Based on that, I indicated to Senator MELCHER and Senator BYRD that if the unitary tax proposal did come before us today, I would make a motion to table it. I want the record clear that this would not be done to interfere with any negotiations Senator WILSON is carrying on. But, frankly, I was trying to get an agreement, and the amendments were coming in fairly quickly, as I recall about 9:30; and everybody was saying at that time: "Get it quick. It's going to fall apart."

We did the best we could. Senator WILSON may have felt that we were prejudging his amendment, but that was not the case. My effort was to reach an agreement to try to bring this to a conclusion and get the Chair to say, "Without objection, the request is approved."

So I hope I did not offend Senator WILSON or anyone else. I believe I support what he wishes to do in this area.

But my larger responsibility was not to be involved in every discussion and every amendment. It was to get the agreement. That was done.

I thank the distinguished minority leader and others for their cooperation.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized.

NUCLEAR ARMS CONTROL AT ITS BEST—THE INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, when it comes to nuclear weapons, all of us, the Congress, the press, and the public can only seem to see the dangers, the failures, the threat to life. We ignore the successes, even the spectacular successes. This Senator is guilty of speaking day after day of the failure of arms control. I moan in Cassandra style about the threat of nuclear war. Rarely has this Senator or other Senators spoken of one of the most remarkable successes in preventing nuclear war. Today, in this speech, I intend to do exactly that.

I can remember standing on the floor of the Senate in the mid-1960's on one occasion when Senator Robert Kennedy of New York was speaking. Senator Kennedy reminded the Senate that the greatest threat to the survival of civilization in the nuclear age is the proliferation, that is, the spread of nuclear weapons. Senator Kennedy's brother, President John Kennedy, had previously warned the Nation that unless the international community found a way to stop the spread of nuclear weapons, as many as 15 to 25 nations would have nuclear arsenals by the middle of the 1970's. Well here it is 1986 more than 20 years after the Kennedy warning and a full decade after the Kennedy vision of 15 to 25 nuclear nations should have come about. What has happened? There are still only five full fledged members of the nuclear club. Why is that? It is partly because of the economic and technological capacity required for a full pledged nuclear power. David Fischer is a former official of the International Atomic Energy Agency. He has written an article in the June-July issue of the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists. Fischer writes that even Britain and France will have nuclear arsenals bristling with 2,000 warheads each by the late 1990's or earlier. So the cost of a nuclear arsenal that would mean full fledged in entrance into the nuclear club has gone up. Nevertheless at least 20 or 30 nonnuclear weapons countries have the economic and technological capacity to enter the club as full fledged major members if they wished to do so. And yet only Pakistan, India, South Africa, and Israel have made even a small start. This is good news for nuclear peace. It greatly diminishes the nightmare that nuclear war will break out in the foreseeable future. So far we have been very, very fortunate. Why? Is it blind luck? Or have there been forces deliberately at work to stop nuclear proliferation that have succeeded?

The answer is that it is not just a matter of luck. It is a great story of international cooperation and leadership. The leadership for this cooperation has come from the International Atomic Energy Agency. The IAEA has done a remarkably successful job of stopping the spread of nuclear weapons. What is this International Atomic Energy Agency? It is an organization that came into being in 1957 as an agency of the United Nations. It has 133 member nations. It had its headquarters in Vienna, Austria. Its mission is to accelerate the peaceful use of nuclear energy but to ensure that assistance provided by the IAEA "is not used in such a way as to further any military purpose." What has the Agency done to stop proliferation? It has very nearly stopped completely the prime source of weapons grade fissionable material crucial to nuclear weapons. That source is the byproduct of the production of nuclear energy. It has done this by reacting effectively to attempts to divert processed uranium or plutonium to military purposes.

For example, in May 1981 Israel bombed a reactor in Iraq, because Iraq had imported a sophisticated nuclear plant and material for which it seemed to have no clear peaceful use. The blame for that incident lay not only with Israel and Iraq but with the suppliers. As a result of that development, the IAEA sharply stepped up its safeguards. It doubled its budget and greatly increased the numbers of inspectors and inspections. There has been a steady increase in safeguards coverage in both weapons and nonweapons countries. The IAEA has succeeded in achieving technical progress with new fuel counting equipment. And in 1983 the Agency began unannounced, "surprise" inspections. It has also succeeded in raising the standard of training and professionalism of its inspectors.

Is the IAEA sufficiently comprehensive in its inspections to be effective in stopping nuclear proliferation? Yes. More than 95 percent of nuclear plants in all the nonweapons states are now under agency safeguards. The United States and Great Britain have opened up all their civilian plants to IAEA inspection. France and the Soviet Union have opened some. China has indicated it will follow suit.

Is the IAEA growing or declining in membership? It is growing. It has grown from 116 nations in 1980 to 133 today. Is there still a problem? Yes. But it is concentrated. There are still nine nonweapons countries operating nuclear plants outside the Non-Proliferation Treaty. Five of these plants can or will soon be able to produce weapons grade—that is unsafeguarded-fissile material. That's a serious problem. But the success of IAEA is far more impressive.

In his article in the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, David Fisher writes:

Without IAEA safeguards, an international regime to curb the spread of nuclear weapons would not be credible today. They have helped to create confidence that, at least for the present, proliferation has stopped in the industrial world and in most of the Third World. They have become the conditions for international nuclear trade and cooperation. No responsible nation will export without them and in practice, most now require IAEA safeguards on the entire fuel cycle of the importing country. They have provided the world's first experiment in systematic on-side inspection and they may serve as a breakthrough in arms control.

Mr. President, the IAEA provides a reassuring example of how arms control can and does work to keep this dangerous nuclear weapons world from exploding into the nightmare of a nuclear holocaust. We can and must build on its brilliant success.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR GORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. GORE. Thank you very much, Mr. President.

MX MISSILES

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, on Monday, I rose to discuss a development in the Senate Armed Services Committee which had been reported in the press during the preceding weekend. The development in question was a vote in subcommittee to cut the proposed funding request for the Midgetman missile in half and to divide the remainder in half yet again, by way of other requirements whose effects would be to impair what had already been impeded.

This judgment was also made by the full committee later in the week.

The consequences of these measures, if they are not overturned on the floor of the Senate or in the conference committee which would follow, have now been explained by Under Secretary Hicks in a letter.

According to Mr. Hicks, the Midgetman's schedule will be delayed at least 1 year, and that assumes a decision this coming fall in the Pentagon, to confirm the missiles design and to block further efforts at tampering.

My purpose in the earlier speech was to remind those who regard this delay as a victory of the real facts. Neither the modernization of this country's nuclear forces, nor the pursuit of its objectives in arms control can take place in the absence of a politically effective consensus. The history of our struggle over these questions, during most of the last 15 years, makes this clear.

During all that time, we have seen only one concept which promised to achieve the necessary degree of agreement. That was the Scowcroft Commission report, a document desperately needed by the President to save one weapon—the MX—which did so by proposing another—the Midgetman, a document intended to expedite force modernization—which did so by demanding more intelligent approaches to arms control.

The decision to slash funding for the Midgetman, will—if it is allowed to stand—bring into serious question whether the Midgetman will be deployed at all, and consequently, whether the fabric of the Scowcroft report will be preserved or torn apart.

If we cannot deploy the Midgetman it will inevitably call into question the deployment of the first 50 MX's, let alone any more of them as requested by the President. The Midgetman, because it is both mobile and hardened against nuclear blast, presents an extraordinary challenge to Soviet attack planners. Under even the most adverse circumstances, the price to attack Midgetman, measured either in warheads or throweight, is so great as to destroy any possibility of an effective first strike against our ICBM force as a whole, including the MX missile. Take away the Midgetman, and the MX is exposed, vulnerable, while at the same time highly threatening to the Soviets.

There is, of course, another way to defend MX missiles, and that is by defending them with some early and limited version of SDI, at vast expense, and at the risk of destroying what is left of restraint between the United States and the Soviet Union. But there are those—and they include virtually all Midgetman's critics—who believe that what this country most needs is more and more counterforce warheads, even if it mounts up to a first strike capability against the Soviets comprising a large MX deployment, much larger than now planned, and backed by a limited defensive network. Their purposes have been well served by cutting the Midgetman's budget and obstructing the rest.

All of this seems to be well understood in the other body.

In a development which has not been widely reported, the Research and Development Subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee has just voted 8 to 2 to freeze deployment of the MX after the first 10 until and unless the Midgetman goes into full-scale development.

Presumably, this same measure will have no serious trouble getting through the full House Armed Services Committee and then the full House of Representatives.

Mr. President, as a democracy we need consensus for force modernization and for arms control. The development of the consensus is always difficult, indeed tortuous. If we are to preserve the prevailing consensus, we must strengthen the logic of the Scowcroft Commission report.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR HECHT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada, Mr. HECHT, is recognized.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE HARRY CLAIBORNE

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, I wish to speak on the impending impeachment of Federal Judge Harry Claiborne of Nevada.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law." Every American is guaranteed the right to a final day in court.

The Constitution also provides for impeachment of judges to begin in the House with a trial in the Senate. As a U.S. Senator I have taken an oath to uphold the Constitution.

If Judge Harry Claiborne feels that Congress is his court of last resort, he is entitled to that forum under our Constitution.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. D'AMATO). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business.

JULIE HEW, ESSAY WINNER

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the 1986 winner of the National Journalism Contest sponsored by the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped was Julie Hew, a senior at Kapaa High School on the island of Kauai in the State of Hawaii. I recently had the pleasure of participating in an event at which Miss Hew was awarded a scholarship from the Disabled American Veterans, which she plans to use in attending the University of Oregon.

Mr. President, I share this information about Miss Hew not merely because she is a resident of Hawaii—although that is a great source of pride—but more importantly, because I believe her prize-winning essay is worthy of attention by my colleagues and the citizens of our Nation.

Her essay, "Live, Learn, and Enjoy," is a description of a leprosy victim, Elroy Malo. Victims of leprosy, or Hansen's disease, have since Biblical times suffered the societal stigma of their disease as well as its crippling effects. In Miss Hew's essay, we learn of Elroy Malo's tremendous difficulties with leprosy and blindness, but also his undiminished inner strength that enables him to persevere.

Against great odds. Elroy Malo has become an active leader of the disabled community and an inspirational figure for all. We owe much to Miss Hew for so sensitively and eloquently sharing the story of Elroy Malo's struggle to success. I hope that many others will see that in this story of personal dignity and resilience, there are many lessons for us as well.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Miss Hew's essay be reprinted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the essay was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1986 NATIONAL JOURNALISM CONTEST
WINNER—FIRST PLACE

LIVE, LEARN, AND ENJOY

(By Julie Hew)

While slowly dialing the numbers on the telephone, I glanced at the clock, 9:04 a.m. My stomach churned. What am I going to say? Should I greet him cheerfully or seriously? I hope I don't say anything insensitive or offensive. All these throughts raced through my head as the phone rang.

"Hello," came the warm voice at the other end.

"Good morning, Mr. Malo, this is Julie Hew."

"Oh! Howzit." Instantly I relaxed—this wasn't going to be so difficult after all!

Elroy Malo, a pure Hawaiian leprosy patient, has come a long way from the isolated little community of Kalaupapa where he was sent in October 1947 at the age of twelve. As a young boy, Elroy enjoyed the vast new playground and the escape from labor in the family taro patch. However, the stigma of being a Hansen's disease patient soon set in. The pain of that experience is still deeply embedded.

Hansen's disease or leprosy has been around for centuries. It attacks the nerves of the extremities leaving the fingers and toes to shrivel. Ulcers and sores develop on the arms and legs that are void of feeling and unable to indicate pain or injury. Blindness also occurs in later stages. It is frequently referred to as "the living death" because the disease itself is not fatal, but the victim lives with the physical and mental distress for the rest of his life. Today, 11 million people throughout the world are afflicted with leprosy. Most cases occur in South China, Southeast Asia, India, Central Africa, South and Central America, the Malay Peninsula, and the South Pacific Islands. In Hawaii, the disease is thought to have originated in China when immigrants brought it over in the 1850's. Hawaiians, having been isolated for so long, had little immunity to foreign disease and caught it readily. Until recently, an effective treatment for leprosy did not exist. Thus the patient was forced into isolation from the rest of society. The falsehoods that provide the stigma of leprosy depict those patients as the dregs of society, those who are being punished by God, or inhuman. But leprosy patients are people with a disease, and they have the same feelings, desires and goals as anyone else.

Elroy Malo is an example of how one can overcome his difficulties and make the most of life. Leprosy claimed his body and his sight, but not his brain or heart.

While living on Molokai, and later in Pearl City, Elroy was restricted to the grounds of a school or hospital. He was never allowed to be completely free. By nature, he was energetic and proud, and he came to resent the brand others put on him or the invisible walls that kept him from being like other people. He became very bitter and angry at the world. Rebelling, he refused assistance from his teacher and doctor, and preferred to be alone, drowning his sorrows in alcohol. His depression and negative attitude continued until 1972 when he finally moved out of the hospital. After 24 years of confinement, Elroy was ready to become an active part of the community.

Until 1971, Elroy practiced self-rehabilitation. He taught himself how to use a cane by trial and error—frequently walking into walls and banging sensitive shins. Then he started rehabilitation at Ho'opono School for the Blind and Visually Impaired. In 1972, he began attending the University of Hawaii with three goals in mind: voice training (singing is a great passion of his), learning to speak Hawaiian, and learning to write. School was a test in itself on Elroy's determination and perserverance. He had to take oral exams and tape record lectures, which meant studying twice as hard as everyone else. In 1978 the hard work paid off and Elroy received his Bachelor's degree in Hawaiian language. Two years later he was awarded his teaching certificate.

Now Elroy sits on numerous boards of non-profit organizations, sharing his views as a representative of the disabled. He has been on boards of directors for the Eye of the Pacific, Ho'opono School for the Blind and Visually Impaired, and the Aloha Council (affiliated with the American Council). He was also the representative of the disabled to the Oahu Tenants Association Council, and the second vice president for the association in his building. The Aloha Council engaged him to make speeches at rallies to various groups on his experiences and the importance of the Council. Elroy is also an active participant in the Very Special Arts group that puts on plays by the disabled for the community.

Although he lives by himself in the Hawaii Housing project, Elroy is not alone. In 1982, he was the first blind person from Hawaii to travel to Australia to get a seeing-eye dog. His trip was sponsored by the Eye of the Pacific, and it changed his life. Kieran, his full-time companion helps with traveling tremendously. Sometimes the pair don't end up in their desired location, but those times are rare and Kieran has improved Elroy's quality of life and feeling of independence.

There are approximately 36 million disabled people in the United States alone. Each year 4 million new cases of eye diseases are discovered and ½ a million are diagnosed as "legally blind." Yet Ho'opono is the only school of its kind in Hawaii and there are only 55 throughout the country.

Elroy Malo lives with two "disabiities." He has leprosy, and as a result of that is blind, but he hasn't let his physical limitations prevent him from broadening his horizons and helping others.

"Disability" is a label I question. It refers to the lack of ability and connotes incompetence, yet Elroy Malo has the ability to do many things that others cannot. He is not disabled, he is physically limited. Elroy is a special person. Some people with physical limitations are in fact disabled because they believe they are disabled, and they let others tell them so. Elroy's attitude is positive about himself and his capabilities. Being able to accept his situation has helped him overcome his anger and bitterness which in turn helps him lead a productive life.

"Don't let other people's hang-ups stop you from doing what you want," he says, "and don't be afraid to try new things, because someday you'll be happy to say, 'I'm glad I did it' instead of 'I wish I did.'"

Elroy has dedicated his life to helping others through non-profit organizations or by sharing his story so that others may benefit and learn from it. Now, he can demonstrate his courage, determination and a positive outlook on life.

Those of us who are not among the 36 million people with physical or mental limitations sometimes take for granted our everyday abilities. We quickly glance at the clock or use healthy fingers to dial the telephone. Someone like Elroy Malo has to remind us of how precious our good health is. The key to life is your attitude. The willingness to try the new, practice the difficult, face reality, and be optimistic makes an enormous difference. Because of his physical limitations, Elroy compensates by doing as much as he possibly can. He doesn't sit around feeling sorry for himself. He goes out, keeps busy, and has a lot of fun. If we all lived like Elroy, whether healthy or "disabled", and stopped thinking only of ourselves, no one could complain of being unproductive, desolate, or destitute. I admire Elroy Malo most for never giving up and making contributions to a society that at one time looked down on him with scorn. A well-known saying reminds us to "live and learn." Elroy Malo is living, learning, and enjoying it!

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF RANDOLPH-SHEPPARD ACT

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, during my service in the U.S. Senate, and particularly during the years when Senator Jennings Randolph was a leading Member of this body, I had the privilege of being the ranking member of the Subcommitee on the Handicapped of Labor and Human Resources, of which Senator Randolph was the most able, distinguished, and outstanding chairman.

During that time we had frequent opportunities to be involved in what was known as the Randolph-Sheppard Act. That was a piece of legislation which was signed by then President Franklin Delano Roosevelt 50 years ago today.

So this is the 50th anniversary of the signing of the Randolph-Sheppard Act.

I think it is appropriate for me to say a few words to remind all of us that that act was signed 50 years ago, and to note how important that has been to some of the visually handicapped people of America and to the Nation itself.

What that act did, in essence, was to provide that the blind and visually impaired people of this country who wished to do so could establish small shops—to put it in plain English—in U.S. Federal buildings. Over the 50 years since Franklin Roosevelt, as President, signed that act, some 39,000 visually handicapped people have had an opportunity to be small businessmen and women in Federal buildings here in the United States.

At the present time there are 3,875 people, approximately, who are engaged in retail activities, if I may use that popular term, under the provisions of the Randolph-Sheppard Act in this country. It is interesting to note that those people are earning an average income from these activities of $18,300 a year.

So this act presently is helping 3,800 people, in total over 50 years 39,000 people. It has allowed from 3,500 to 4,000 people a year who are either totally blind or seriously visually impaired to be productive, self-supporting citizens of the United States of America.

I wanted this opportunity to pay my respects to Senator Randolph and to the co-author, Senator Sheppard of Texas, for the conception of this act and for the long, hard work which Senator Randolph devoted to the act to make sure that it nourished in the years following its inception. I can personally testify as to how much time and work he devoted to it in the years when I served with him on the Handicapped Subcommittee of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources in the Senate.

SENATOR HART AND AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished senior Senator from the State of Colorado, Mr. HART, has been one of the most thoughtful Members of this body over the years. He has consistently displayed a vision which has often broadened my own perspective on some of the central problems of our era. At the same time, he combines his intellectual freshness with a good dose of practicality.

Mr. President, it is this quality of bold and creative thinking, solidly grounded in Rocky Mountain pragmatism, which has again marked his latest effort, a comprehensive three-part series of addresses on American foreign policy delivered on June 11, 12, and 13. His foreign policy series, entitled "Enlightened Engagement: A Foreign Policy for the 21st Century," given at the Georgetown School of Foreign Service, outlines in broad strokes a comprehensive framework—a vision—of the challenges and opportunities for this country into the next century. It is precisely this kind of analysis which is obviously and sorely lacking in the fractured and drifting ad hoc militarism which characterizes the present administration's approach to the world.

In the key regions where America's role and America's character are being tested, particularly in the Middle East and Central America, American policies and strategies are infused by no overall architecture, no broad mixture of incentives and penalities, carrots and sticks. All we seem to do these days is vote on either military assistance or arms sales. In short, this Nation is lacking exactly what Mr. HART provides in great detail and eloquent style in his address. Mr. HART is to be commended for this thoughful exercise, and I highly recommend that my colleagues and other interested individuals read this series of addresses. I ask unamimous consent that the three-part series be reproduced in its entirety in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ENLIGHTENED ENGAGEMENT: A FOREIGN POLICY FRAMEWORK FOR THE 21ST CENTURY

LECTURE ONE

Introduction

Throughout history, the fate of nations has depended on their ability to match changes in the world with changes in their sense of power, potential, and purpose. Sometimes a nation pretends it can play little role in the world when it has so grown in power that even its inaction has major consequences. Our nation made that error in the 1920s and '30s when a return to isolationism permitted the rise of aggressors in Europe and Asia.[1]

More frequently, nations cling to visions of empire that ignore changes within and beyond their borders. Austria-Hungary is this century's best example. Austria was able to play the role of great power for 200 years on the strength of the victories of Prince Eugene of Savoy. But when, in 1914, Austria attempted to act beyond its strength, reality asserted itself. The Austrian empire was wiped from the map.

In this Hobbesian world, the realities of power and change have a way of impressing themselves on even the most stubborn. Sometimes the reckoning can be put off—Byzantium delayed it for centuries. But when it comes late, it also comes hard.

For the past several decades, a reality we have not wanted to acknowledge has been knocking at our door: the reality of changing power relationships.

In 1958, President Eisenhower sent the Marines into Lebanon. The result was what we expected in the post-war world. American forces were committed, we met little opposition, we achieved our goal, and the public supported the action. It was a typical act by a Superpower in an age of superpowers: easy and successful.

In 1961, President Kennedy also expressed the confidence of a superpower when he said we would "pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and the success of liberty." His words were well received by a nation that did not anticipate a situation in which the price could be too high or the burden too heavy.

Reflecting this confidence, in 1965 we sent American combat troops to defend the Republic of Vietnam. The initial commitment a year earlier had not been controversial; the Tonkin Gulf resolution passed the Senate 88 to 2, and the House 414 to 0. Ten years later, Saigon fell to the North Vietnamese army, as helicopters plucked the last remaining Americans from the roof of our Embassy. It is a scene we will never forget.

Vietnam should have led us to reconsider our perceptions of our role and means in the world. Yet in 1982, acting as if little had changed since 1958, we again committed the Marines to Lebanon—this time, without clear purpose or support. And this time, the lesson was not a decade in coming. We suffered an embarrassing defeat, militarily and politically, in less than two years. In just four months, we went from hearing the President of the United States tell our nation that the village of Suk al-Gharb was a vital national interest to watching our troops, minus 285 dead, board their transports and sail away.

There is an important lesson here: global change in the 1960s, '70s, and '80s has outrun a foreign policy largely constructed in and for the 1940s and '50s. Our goals have not changed. As always, we seek to ensure that Americans enjoy security and opportunity; that our fellow human beings around the world live with freedom and dignity—and when they do not, that they look with hope to America's leadership; that, with the cooperation of our allies and the support of our own people, we will take any actions necessary to protect the security of our nation and the survival of our planet.

Our values and goals are constant, but the world in which we pursue them continues to change—dramatically. Because we have resisted those changes, too many of our actions in the world are irrelevant, ineffective, or even counterproductive. If we continue to ignore the world's changes, we will suffer increased conflict between our power and our commitments, our opportunities and our actions.

America still has unparalleled strengths and responsibilities. Our challenge is to unite the American people behind a vision that better employs our strengths and fulfills our responsibilities.

What are the changes that have outrun our foreign policies? What further changes will confront us in the coming decades? How can we use those changes to bring America's commitments and power into harmony?

No individual should presume to have complete prescriptions for all the foreign policy challenges that confront us. Nor should we attempt to reinvent the world.

These lectures seek to provide a direction for our thinking about the role of America in the world toward the 21st century. Even now, we can create a better framework for advancing our security, ensuring our prosperity, fostering our values, and creating a safer planet. We must sound a challenge—a challenge to seasoned practitioners and young idealists—a challenge to all Americans concerned about our role in the world—a challenge to think freshly, creatively, and constructively. For I believe we can make this time of change an American age of opportunity.

An Era of Change

Many of the major global changes that render traditional foreign policies ineffective are already apparent:

First and most important, military and economic power is distributed more widely, if not more evenly than in the late 1940s, when our current foreign policy framework emerged.

The strictly bi-polar world is gone. In its place is a world where secondary powers can defy superpowers, as we discovered in Vietnam and the Soviet Union is discovering in Afghanistan.

Many powers have arisen independent of either Washington or Moscow. China is one such. Having broken its Soviet alliance, it remains wary of allying with the United States. Brazil and the Asian nations of the Pacific Rim are emerging as regional economic power centers, increasingly less attached to either superpower.

Moreover, an increasing number of events are driven by neither superpower. Neither the Soviets' trouble in Afghanistan nor ours in Central America is caused by the rival superpower, though in each case the rival seeks advantages from them. Indeed, in the third world, forces such as religious fanaticism are hostile to both the United States and the Soviet Union.

Our two nations possess two of the world's three largest economies, and, in terms of the survival of human kind, our nuclear stockpiles are symbolic remnants of bi-polarity. But the superpower notion has become insufficient to capture the complexities of modern power relations.

The diffusion of power is the defining reality of our time. Ultimately, it can also be the greatest source of American opportunity.

Second, nationalism—which first appeared in Europe and America in the 1700s—has spread since World War II throughout most of the developing world. Between 1945 and 1980, over 80 countries became independent of their imperial rulers. In this age of nationalism and diffused power, a superpower may have the will to do something, but not the unilateral means.

In military conflict, war with even a minor state now often means war with its people, not just its government and its army. When its government is defeated, the conflict often enters a stage of terrorism and guerilla warfare—forces that are difficult to defeat, and which render a superpower's massive arsenal largely irrelevant.[2]

Third, we have witnessed an economic transformation equal in importance to the Industrial Revolution: the emergence of a global economy. At the close of World War II, less than a tenth of the world's goods and services were traded internationally; by last year, this figure had grown to nearly 25 percent. This change is keenly felt in the United States. Since President Kennedy's time, the share of American jobs dependent on exports has more than doubled, and the growth in trade now directly or indirectly affects nearly every American worker.

This economic revolution has occurred in a global infrastructure that makes trade possible: shipping costs reduced to a fraction of those of 30 years ago; an increasing knowledge of foreign markets; international communication and full telecommunications systems. The last of these has implications well beyond commerce. The communications revolution pushes far-flung tensions and conflicts onto the global stage in minutes and telescopes the time available to respond to crisis.

If these power shifts have outpaced our foreign policy, then the changes of the next few years may outdistance it entirely.

Unless we secure stronger non-proliferation agreements, the number of nations with nuclear weapons could triple, with real or threatened nuclear terrorism a distinct possibility;

In the absence of new arms agreements, a multitude of weapons in space and an additional 10-20,000 Soviet warheads beyond current stockpiles will probably be developed;

The Soviet Union's ethnic, especially Moslem, population will have grown faster than its Russian population; by the 21st century, the Soviet Union's Central Asian Republic may have the nation's highest rates of unemployment and instability;

The population of Africa will likely double. The most populous cities in the world will all be in what is now the developing world;

China will likely have quadrupled its 1980 national income levels; Brazil may be a trading power on a par with current-day Korea.

Our challenge is to adapt our foreign policy to this historic period of revolutionary change.

Unfortunately, most of the foreign policy debate within both political parties addresses only one small piece of this larger and more complicated puzzle: when and how to use American military force, and which Soviet-aligned forces to oppose with our own force. Unquestionably, these are important and difficult questions. But even if we were to divine a "correct" answer to those questions, our foreign policy would still be sorely inadequate on many fronts to steer us into the 21st Century.

A foreign policy framework for the year 2000 should tell us more than where, when, and how to send American arms and troops. It should tell us how to contain Soviet expansionism and move beyond an increasingly unproductive, dangerous, and insufficient U.S.-Soviet competition. It should tell us how to adapt NATO and our other alliances to changing times. It should tell us how to battle African famine, defuse the Latin American debt bomb, and nourish the trend toward open societies throughout the developing world. It should tell us how to make America more competitive in the world economy. Above all, it should tell us how to reach the next century safe from nuclear disaster.

I believe such a new framework—which I call a framework of enlightened engagement—has four pillars:

Management of U.S.-Soviet relations in a way that uses rising nationalism in the developing world, America's economic advantages, and nuclear arms control to advance America's interests;

Much greater reliance on international economics—not just to promote American prosperity—but also as an explicit instrument of our security goals;

Strengthening America's alliances by ensuring they are based on equality rather than dependency;

Engagement in the developing world in order to promote open societies and economic opportunity.

Enlightened engagement means translating the global diffusion of economic, political, and military power—the defining reality of our age—into an opportunity for new American leadership.

America's Past Foreign Policy Frameworks

This framework flows from America's history. In our 210 year history as a nation, we have had three frameworks for our foreign policy—three different sets of basic principles and goals that guided our relations with the world.

The first framework is generally known as "isolationism," and it guided us until roughly the end of the 19th century.[3] To be sure, we were not closed to the rest of the world like an earlier Japan. Instead, we believed that our noble experiment in democracy would energize the drive for freedom in other nations. We were also commercially active by the standards of the day. But during the isolationist pericd, we were reluctant to involve ourselves with other nations in formal alliances, in wars outside North America, or in diplomatic commitments that reached beyond supporting commercial enterprise.

It may startle some to say our Founders were isolationists. But by today's standards

[2] A superpower may still have the ability to win in an abstract sense: in theory, we could still be fighting in South Vietnam and holding on to most of that country. But, increasingly, a superpower can no longer do so at a price it can afford to pay, at home or abroad. While its will to make the initial commitment may have been strong, it cannot sustain that will in face of a price wholly disproportionate to the potential gain. One of the easiest pitfalls a major power can fall into is making a long-term commitment based on a short-term calculation of will.

[3] There is no precise date when any of our frameworks change; the rise and fall of their influence on our policymaking are gradual. But by the end of the 19th century, we had embraced Manifest Destiny, entered into war with Spain, and acquired the Philippines. America, by this point, had begun its entrance onto the world diplomatic stage. Within two decades, we would be engaged in a major European war.

they were, and they had good reasons for thinking as they did. We were not a strong nation. Our armed forces were small and weak. We did not have the wherewithal to engage in international power politics.[4]

But another element of our Founders' isolationism was related to our system of government and is fully relevant to us today.

Our Constitution was crafted with the foremost goal of preserving domestic liberty. To that end, the Founders created a government of separated powers that would be constrained by public opinion and have great difficulty acting precipitately or unilaterally. The system of checks and balances they designed remains an inspired guardian of domestic freedom, but it placed inherent constraints on our engagements abroad. Unlike monarchies of the time, our government could not make most decisions quickly and in secrecy, and then insulate those decisions over many years from domestic pressures, press scrutiny, or public opinion.[5]

The Constitution's constraints on our foreign policy were not, in practice, very constraining for our Founders. Most of them subscribed to George Washington's view, expressed in his Farewell Address, that we ought to avoid foreign entanglements.[6] Recognizing the realities of America's geographic safety, they constructed a system of of government that put the burden of proof on our leaders to form consensus for any foreign engagements.

In time, America's power so expanded that we increasingly projected our power abroad. Around the turn of the century, we entered the period of our second framework, which might best be called, "Making the world safe for democracy." The phrase came from Woodrow Wilson, but we began acting on it earlier, in 1898, when we went to war with Spain (in part over Spanish suppression of the insurrection in Cuba). Its high point was our entry into World War I and Wilson's Fourteen Points. We fought a "war to end wars," and we sought a peace based on national self-determination, justice to all nations, and the evolution of Europe into liberal democracies similar to our own.

The failure of the Versailles Treaty to embody Wilson's Fourteen Points, the Senate's rejection of the League of Nations, and the League's subsequent impotence led us back toward isolationism in the 1920s. But the tragic consequences of our political, economic, and military retreat from the world quickly became clear, and we ultimately joined the war in Europe and Asia.

Roosevelt's hopes for the post-war world marked a return to the Wilsonian vision. Unfortunately, the "long twilight struggle" of superpower politics and ideological competition outran this vision in short order. But, like out first framework, "making the world safe for democracy" had elements that are timeless and inherent in our foreign policy. As our Constitution made permanent a bias against over-commitment abroad; Wilsonianism left its own grand and guiding value: human rights.

After Wilsonianism came our third foreign policy framework: containment. It was adopted in the late 1940s, and it continues today—although we are currently in a time of transition to a broader, more current, framework.

Containment was our response to post-war Soviet expansionism. Soviet coercion of eastern European nations into satellites in 1946–'48; sponsorship of communist forces in the Greek civil war; pressure on Turkey; continued occupation of northern Iran—these shattered our expectations of a peaceful, cooperative world order. While the war-devastated Soviet Union was relatively weak compared to the United States, it was strong when contrasted to its European neighbors, who had also suffered in the war.

President Truman recognized that direct American involvement was necessary to block Soviet expansion; local powers were simply too weak to counter it effectively. In 1946, he dispatched the U.S.S. Missouri to the Bosporus as a signal of American support for Turkey, and the era of containment had begun. In the minds of many, that era has never ended.

Permanent Values in America's Foreign Policy

Each of these three past frameworks responded to circumstances that have long disappeared. In the isolationist period, for example, we lacked the power to engage our nation extensively abroad. Today that is no longer true. But each of the past frameworks also reveals fundamental and permanent values which must guide America's future framework as well.

The first framework reveals the value we place on a foreign policy held in check by our constitutional form of government. After World War II, when we first emerged as a superpower, it seemed we could exercise an almost unlimited internationalism and impose our will abroad with ease. But that ease was only possible in a post-war world where we were filling a power vacuum—where the traditional great powers had lost millions of their people and much of their productive facilities.

As global power has been diffused over the 1960s, '70s, and '80s, it has become more difficult to play the role of an omnipotent power, and we have run head-on into the constraints against entanglement our Founders built into the Constitution. On issues as disparate as trade, NATO, and terriorism, our ability to act decisively abroad is shaped (as it must be) by public and press.[7]

Our Constitution's structural bias against foreign entanglements does not mean we must or should return to isolationism. A nation as powerful as ours is inherently a factor in the international balance. Our experience between the World Wars proved the point—at great human cost. We can no longer afford the luxury of isolationism.

Nor is the solution to search for ways to circumvent the constraints our government structure places on our foreign policy. Official dishonesty during Vietnam, excesses of our intelligence community during the 1960s and '70s, unconstrained covert operations—these were inconsistent with American values and, ultimately, were destructive elements of our foreign policy.[8]

Our foreign commitments must not reach beyond what our public will support, or institutions will tolerate, or our military and economic capabilities will sustain. But an internationalist foreign policy can be sustained if the merits of that policy justify an enlightened popular consensus.

Over the past few decades as the task of engagement has become more difficult, consensus has been eroded by unprecedented partisanship and divisiveness the Executive, the Congress, and the public about or proper role in the world. The more polarized the dialogue, the more each new administration tries to disassociate itself from its predecessors.[9]

But ideology does not provide a solid foundation for inspiring fear in our adversaries, confidence in our friends and allies, or agreement among our people. As consensus over foreign policy erodes, we have veered, in the words of James Schlesinger, from "self-criticism bordering on masochism" in the 1960s and '70s to "self-congratulation to the point of narcissism" in the 1980s.

While some of our policy makers subscribe to a policy of unilateral and indiscriminate interventionism, the American people have a far different—and better—vision. They will assert America's power and prestige abroad if a compelling case is made; but they are reluctant to intervene abroad except where Americans or American security is directly challenged, as with terrorism; where success is likely to come quickly and at small cost, as on Grenada; on a humani-

[4] At the time of the War of 1812—which, it is useful to remember, we essentially lost—Great Britain's Royal Navy had more than 100 ships of the line. We had none. Sweden, Spain, Portugal, Turkey, and even the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies had more powerful navies than we did.

[5] As Alexis de Tocqueville observed in "Democracy in America," "a democracy finds it difficult to coordinate the details of a great [foreign] undertaking and to fix on some plan and carry it through with determination in spite of obstacles. It has little capacity for combining measures in secret and waiting patiently for the result."

[6] "Separated by a wide ocean from the nations of Europe, and from the political interests which entangle them together, with productions and wants which render our commerce and friendship useful to them and theirs to us, it cannot be the interest of any to assail us, nor ours to disturb them. We should be most unwise, indeed, were we to cast away the singular blessings of the position in which nature has placed us, the opportunity she had endowed us with of pursuing, at a distance from foreign contentions, the paths of industry, peace, and happiness; of cultivating general friendship, and of bringing collisions of interest to the umpirage of reason rather than force." Thomas Jefferson, Third Annual Address to Congress, 1803.

[7] The current problem with terrorism provides a good example. As Jefferson often argued, a free press is fundamental to the presevation of domestic liberty. But our free press has now become an instrument in the hands of our enemies, the terrorists. Much of terrorism's effect derives from the horrors delivered into every American living room by television. Our government is reluctant to act swiftly with military force in response to a hostage crisis when the public is bombarded nightly with tearful interviews with the hostages' families.

Here, as elsewhere, the contradiction between our institutions and the demands of the international environment is often acute. We do ourselves no favor if we ascribe the problem to congressional micromanagement or an absence of "rational" foreign policy goals and means. The root is fundamental: our government was constructed to be consistent with limited involvement in foreign matters—not with indiscriminate interventionism.

[8] Sadly, this same official disdain for openness and honesty seems to mark the current Administration's efforts on arms control and Central America. Indeed, there seems to be a facile arrogance along the lines of, "We know best, because we understand the Communist threat better than most Americans."

[9] This has produced some of the more quixotic strains in our foreign policy over the past two decades—from the Carter Administration's promises to "banish nuclear weapons from the face of the earth," to President Reagan's pledge to restore military supremacy.

The battle over the modernization of land-based nuclear missiles exemplifies this issue particularly well. The current Administration, which came to power preoccupied with the so-called "window of vulnerability" has now undercut the strong bipartisan consensus in favor of the only solution to the perceived vulnerability of our land-based nuclear forces—a mobile missile. This is politics, not strategy.

tarian basis, as in fighting famine in Africa; and, generally, where we act in concert with our allies. The public's attitude is not isolationist; but it is selectively internationalist.

To unite our political, military, and economic policies in ways that create and sustain public support for enlightened internationalism is one of the great challenges of the late 20th century. In an era of great change, challenge, and opportunity, it is less important that our foreign policies are "new." It is more important that they work—that they are idealistic in values, realistic in goals and means—and that they command the united support of our people.

The second past framework, Wilsonianism, reveals the value we place on human dignity abroad. Of course, the vision of America as an international apostle of human dignity emerged even before our founding—it was part of the reason the Pilgrims came to Massachusetts Bay, that Roger Williams established Rhode Island, and that the Catholics fled England to Maryland. Our Founders fought the Revolution over their rights as Englishmen, and they were profoundly influenced by the idea of the Rights of Man as propounded by the Philosophes of the French Enlightenment.

At times, the mantle of human rights was thrown over crass commercialism and imperialism. The "Open Door" policy for China, while helpful to the Chinese at a dark time in their history, was motivated less by moral concern than a search for American markets.

But it is easy to overstate such qualifications. The ideal of America as a moral beacon for the rest of mankind is profound and important. It has rarely been absent in our history. Indeed, nothing so defines America's character to the world as our sometimes troublesome but irrepressible conviction that our greatness must be matched with goodness. We can never overlook the tremendous power our idealism exerts around the world.[10] On America's borders, people are clamoring to get in, not out.

Human rights are difficult to export, and our expectations must be realistic. Certainly, the public is unwilling to support the sort of armed crusade for human rights that marked our entry into World War I, or to tolerate a naive view that every Third World nation could one day be a miniature of our own democracy.[11]

But the American public also resents leaders who close one eye to torture, persecution, or repression of basic freedoms—whether in the Gulag, the prisons of Chile, or the townships of South Africa—whether inhumanity is rationalized with the rhetoric of left or right.[12]

Even if we could enlarge human rights nowhere, we would still have the duty to encourage them everywhere. Indeed, America's soul always burns brightest when we speak truth to power on behalf of the powerless, when we stay the hand of those who would suffocate conscience, and when we give new wings abroad to the same human aspirations that won our own independence.

But the third past framework, containment, also reveals a positive value of American foreign policy: our healthy and determined opposition to Soviet domination and hegemony.

While the Sino-Soviet split has dissolved most Americans' fears of a monolithic communist juggernaut, Soviet imperialism remains real. Afghanistan is a brutal and ongoing example, as is Soviet repression of Poland through a standing threat of invasion under the Brezhnev Doctrine. It is right and necessary that we oppose Soviet expansionism vigorously. To be effective, our means may not always be those we used 40 years ago, but the goal is still imperative.

But there is a second notion of containment—an incorrect notion—which is less healthy. It is a tendency to believe that every hostile force is, at root, generated and controlled by the Soviet Union.

The Middle East provides an example. While the Soviet Union supports some nations and forces in the Middle East that are hostile to us, problems in that part of the world do not originate in Soviet action, nor would they disappear if the Soviet Union were not involved. Those who trace Libyan, Syrian, or Iranian anti-Americanism primarily to Moscow are in error. Moscow may be pleased by the result, but it is not the original cause. Indeed, the forces unleased by the Iranian revolution are hostile toward both Washington and Moscow.

This "credit Russia first" mentality, which sees the hand of a Soviet puppeteer guiding every movement or government hostile to us, often creates self-fulfilling prophecies. Heavy American pressure can drive such forces into the Soviet harbor as the only available port in the storm. Nicaragua is partly a case in point.[13]

A Framework of Enlightened Engagement

In sum, these are the values that guided our past frameworks. But now we must begin to create a new framework that can apply those values to a new and changing world.

Above all, a foreign policy framework for the 21st century must seize the opportunity presented by the most significant change of the past 40 years—the great diffusion of military, political, and economic power. Our framework must help us reach our foreign policy goals in a world where other nations are maturing politically and economically at a rapid pace; where Soviet expansionism continues to be a threat, but where exclusive concern with the Soviets is both insufficient and dangerous; where we still have tremendous military, economic, political, and moral power, but where, increasingly, we can only exercise that power by engaging other nations—not commanding them.

What, then, is this new framework? As we noted earlier, it might best be called a framework of enlightened engagement.

Enlightened engagement requires that we find better ways to exercise our leadership in a world where we can rarely impose our will. Rather than resisting change, we need to use it to our advantage. We must use forces such as the diffusion of power, nationalism, and the force of a growing international economy—forces largely beyond our control—to fuel our leadership and help move the world toward our goals. Enlightened engagement means allying with historic tides and channeling them toward our ideals rather than attempting to block those tides by standing in their path.

Our task now is to identify the strongest of these tides and propose how we might better use them to navigate toward our goals. There are four ways in particular.

Enlightened Engagement: Managing United States-Soviet Relations

First, we need to manage our relations with the Soviets in a way that reflects the increasing insufficiency of the notion of superpower domination.

It is natural and necessary to focus much of our attention on the Soviet Union. Since World War II, Soviet power—for the most part, its military power—has increased compared to ours. In part, this development was unavoidable, as the Soviet Union recovered from the damage it suffered in World War II. In part, it has been due to the Soviet Union's rapid technological evolution—for example, in development of nuclear weapons, and during the Vietnam era, when for 10 years we consumed immense defense resources while the Soviets invested theirs.

Yet it is only in the military field that the Soviet Union is a serious competitor. Its economy is a lumbering dinosaur, and even in past bastions of Marxism such as the French Intelligentsia, its ideology is now widely recognized as a fraud. Even when the Soviets supply arms and advice to communist forces attempting to seize power, their inability to follow through with long-term economic assistance often alienates their own allies.

As a result, there are signs of Soviet retreat in much of the third world. Angola and Mozambique have serious economic problems and have begun looking toward the west. The Vietnamese may be facing their own Vietnam in Kampuchea. The recent revolution in South Yemen revealed how difficult it is for the Soviets to exercise stable control.

Soviet military power has grown in the post-war period. But in our fixation with that fact, we have missed a major development—one that, in the long run, is more important. Other nations have grown in power relative to both superpowers to the point where the notion of a superpower has di-

[10] Our idealism exerts such power despite the knowledge of observers abroad that the United States has often engaged in folly or worse. Foreign admiration for America derives, in part, from an appreciation of our capacity for self-correction through an open and participatory political process. The American civil rights movement is an example; as William Schneider has written, it has raised the aspirations of discriminated minorities in many places abroad, most notably, Catholics in Northern Ireland and blacks in South Africa.

[11] Without question, certain rights must be considered universal—including freedom from arbitrary imprisonment, from torture, from genocide; other rights should be considered universal—freedom from want of basic needs such as food and shelter. Our unequivocal support for such rights is best expressed by our support for the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted in 1948, and by our nation's ratification this year of the Genocide Convention.

Yet we do a disservice to the cause of human rights if we insist, as some have, that the minimum standard for human rights abroad should be the full slate of rights we enjoy at home. At the margin, notions of "natural rights" will vary from culture to culture.

[13] There is little question that the Sandinistas have ambitions to establish a repressive, one-party state. Nor can we doubt their allegiance to Marxist-Leninist doctrine. There are also reasons to believe they harbor designs of regional hegemony that are contrary to our interests. But their local and regional ambitions and leftist ideologies do not necessarily translate into an equal desire to be a Soviet base or ally.

Our current designs seem to allow the Nicaragua junta to choose only whether it wishes to be ousted peacefully or by force. They are unlikely to choose either course. Since the instrument of our military efforts, the contras, also appears to have little chance of success, we find ourselves at a dead end, applying just enough pressure to guarantee a close relationship between Managua and Moscow.

minishing weight beyond the nuclear context. The rise of nationalism and the diffusion of power now mean that many secondary powers can frustrate the designs of a superpower; many regional powers are independent of both superpowers; and, ominously, several new forces are threatening to both the Soviet Union and the United States.[14]

This is a central weakness in our existing foreign policy framework. Containment focuses exclusively on the U.S.-Soviet contest. That contest is still real. The Soviets continue to be externally imperialistic and internally repressive. As the only two nations who share the capacity to destroy mankind, it will remain in America's interest to manage military and political imbalances and misunderstandings with the Soviets to protect them from leading to deadly miscalculation. Yet many nations and forces now stand outside our competition.

A major theme of a new framework must be the imperative of blocking Soviet misbehavior with one hand, while reaching out to new opportunities for American leadership with the other. President Truman was right to declare that the United States seeks to "strengthen freedom-loving nations against the dangers of aggression." But now his doctrine must be updated—to include better ways of containing Soviet expansionism, partly by rising to the foreign policy challenges outside our competition with the Soviets. For in a world where our military struggle with the Soviets is handcuffed by the arms race, our twilight struggle will increasingly be waged on political, ideological, and economic grounds.[15]

Enlightened Engagement: Economics as Foreign Policy

But enlightened engagement must also focus on the explosive growth of the global economy. The spread of trade and the changes in other economic relationships are now widely recognized, but their full implications for our foreign policy have yet to be explored.

We know how our factories and jobs have been changed by a new world market in which $2 trillion of trade and $50 trillion of capital and currency flows between nations each year. But what do these mean with regard to our competition with the Soviets, our alliances, or our effort to advance the cause of human dignity?

As we approach the 21st Century, we must elevate international economics to a primary instrument of foreign policy. To encourage peaceful economic and political development in Latin America, the debt burden that is crushing potential prosperity and new democracies must be lifted. To strengthen our ties to Canada, Western Europe, and Japan, we must stem the pressures for protectionism that threaten to rend our vital alliances.

Ultimately, our efforts in international economics must be as important to Latin America as the Alliance for Progress promised to be in the 1960s; they can be as important to our relations with Europe as the Marshall Plan was in the post-War period; they can be as important to our relations in Asia as our military forces in South Korea or our protection of the sea-lanes in the Pacific.[16]

Enlightened Engagement: Alliances Based on Equality

Enlightened engagement must also strengthen our alliances and friendships by basing them on equality rather than dependency. Our post-war military and economic alliances, NATO in particular, rank among the great achievements of human history. They helped stabilize a tempestuous European continent, contain the spread of communism, fuel the expansion of global trade, promote the spread of democracy, and protect our security in the Western hemisphere.

When these alliances and institutions of international economics were created in the 1940s and '50s, they reflected, not just local economic and security considerations, but a broad, common outlook shared by all participants. They also reflected a world in which the United States had overwhelming military and economic power, and in which our allies were weak both economically and militarily.

Today, we insist on clinging to the forms of many of our alliances, even when those forms prevent the alliances from reaching their goals. We simply can no longer ignore the dramatic changes within our relationships. Collectively, the NATO allies now have a larger population and economy than we do. Japan is the second largest free economy in the world and may be the largest trading power by the end of this decade. The economies we helped rebuild after the War are now our chief economic competitors. Our approaches to problems outside the geographic areas bounded by the alliances—for example, in the Middle East—are frequently divergent. The Western European view of the Soviet Union, and even more, of Central Europe, is often quite different from that of our current Administration.

Our formal political, military, and economic alliances cannot become like insects frozen in amber. The tension within our alliances signals an opportunity—an opportunity to strengthen our alliances by basing them on equality rather than dependency. To call for such evolution is not a threat to the values, economy, and security interests we will always share.

The threat, in fact, comes from a refusal to evolve—a refusal that generates increasing tension, mutual dissatisfaction, and, if left unresolved, will produce sharp, sudden breaks in the future. The current refusal to consider any change creates only a veneer of stability, a veneer covering growing inter-allied tensions symbolized by stalemate at economic summits, the growth of the European peace movement, and periodic congressional efforts to reduce American troop strength in Europe.

The real threats to our alliances come from old force structures in Europe that fail to reflect current military challenges; from Europe's concern that the current administration is unsympathetic—if not hostile—to the imperative of arms control; from currency regimes that allow wild exchange rate fluctuations and encourage pressures for divisive protectionism; from allocations of responsibility for foreign aid that, in some cases, reflect the strength of our allies in the 1940s, not the 1980s; and from military aid agreements with developing nations that reflect our restablished defense habits more than their emerging defense needs.

Enlightened Engagement: Encouraging More Open Societies

Finally, enlightened engagement must encourage and ally us with the growing movement toward open societies throughout the developing world. One of the assumptions of both the Wilsonian and the containment frameworks is that those nations would be friendly to us—that they would see us as the leader in the fight for freedom, the generous provider of aid, and the cultural model for their own centrist forces.[17]

Unfortunately for us and the developing world, these expectations foundered when, after World War II, the centrist forces proved weaker than expected. Indonesia, Egypt, major African states such as Ghana and Tanzania, and other rejected our democratic, free-enterprise model in favor of planned economics, single-party governments, or foreign policies with a strong tilt toward the Soviet Union. Other parts of the developing world, especially Latin America, adopted rightist, authoritarian approaches, often under military governments.

Now, 30 years later, an interesting thing is happening. Centrist forces and open societies are making a powerful comeback. Both the pro-Soviet socialist and rightist military models have failed. In their places, moderate forces, genuinely non-aligned, sometimes democratic, and increasingly market-oriented, are returning.

[14] Radical Moslem fundamentalism is the most obvious. If Iran defeats Iraq and spreads its revolution, as seems possible, it will be of serious concern both to us and to the Soviets, who share a border with Iran and who have a growing population whose heritage traces more to the Koran than the writings of Karl Marx. The Middle Eastern pressure-cooker may well explode in a way that scalds Americans and Soviets alike.

[15] Some now seem to claim the Truman Doctrine advocated—above all other instruments of containment—providing U.S. military aid to countries facing Soviet-aligned insurgencies. In fact, Truman and senior figures within his Administration stressed that aid, trade, diplomatic, and military assistance were to play coequal roles in containment. Following the Doctrine's enunciation, the Administration went to great lengths to assert it did not represent an open-ended military commitment. George Kennan, and the Policy Planning Staff of the Department of State, prepared a paper on the Truman Doctrine. It underscored the fact that the Truman Doctrine was not "a blank check to give economic and military aid to any area of the world where the Communists show signs of being successful. It must be made clear that the extension of American aid is essentially a question of political economy in the literal sense of that term and that such aid will be considered only in cases where the prospective results bear a satisfactory relationship to the expenditure of American resources and effort." Similar statements were made by Dean Acheson, General George Marshall, and Truman himself. In a conversation with Undersecretary of State James Webb on March 26, 1950, Truman was asked whether he contemplated intervention in Vietnam to the same degree he had intervened in Greece and Turkey under the Truman Doctrine of 1947. "His reply was 'Absolutely not'." George F. Kennan, "Memoirs: 1925–1950," 1967; and Robert J. Donovan, "Nemesis: Truman and Johnson in the Coils of War in Asia," 1984.

[16] In a sense, we have come full circle from the time of our Founders. They shunned foreign entanglements to avoid alienating any of their trading partners, as trade was essential to the nation's economic health. It is even more essential today. But in the coming years, safeguarding our trading interests will require more entanglement with our allies—not less: we will need to lead them into patterns of cooperation and coordination essential to the expansion of world trade.

[17] By "centrist forces," I mean political factions and forces which moderate against repression or dictatorship on either the left or right, or which push for the use of market incentives in the nation's domestic economy. Our support for centrist forces need not be reserved for Jeffersonian democrats and Adam Smith free marketers. Our relations with China, Mozambique, and many others prove we can advance America's interests through engagement with nations that have mixed economics or less-than-democratic political systems.

In Africa, nation after nation has reduced economic controls to encourage market forces. In Latin America, moderate democratic governments have replaced military rule in Argentina, Brazil, Peru, Uruguay, Bolivia, Ecuador, Dominican Republic, and—to an extent—Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador. Other examples of a move to the center include Spain, Portugal, India, Malaysia, and—most recently—the Philippines. Indeed, the long-feared "domino theory" may be working in reverse—with contagious economic and political freedom toppling repressive regimes at both political extremes.

In many places, of course, dictatorships have strengthened their hold—in Ethiopia, Iran, and Nicaragua. Yet recent history reveals that dictatorships do poorly at satisfying domestic needs, and reliance on Soviet weapons may strengthen their grip only by diminishing their popularity. We should never overlook the attraction that political and personal liberty has even—or especially—in such societies.

If we are to seize the opportunity this historic trend represents, we must reshape our patterns of engagement in the developing world—patterns that were too often closer to meddling than genuinely assisting. To some of these nations, America seemed to follow a policy of "rule or ruin"—as we now seem to be doing in Central America. We demanded too much control and opposed for many years the right of nations to be nonaligned. Too often, we dictated who would govern the nation, and what sort of economy it would have. Ultimately, by dictating too closely how developing nations should react to the East-West struggle, we undermined their energy and our own effectiveness in limiting Soviet influence.

What should we do instead? There are cases where we can significantly help developing nations, and especically their elements of political and economic moderation. But usually it is by responding to their requests rather than by imposing our own designs. Examples include: military support to supplement a country's natural, nationalistic resistance to foreign invasion or domination; extending the principles of military reform to friendly developing nations; humanitarian assistance to respond to natural or man-made disaster; and economic support that will enable the people of developing nations to participate and benefit fully from the new international economy and became self-sufficient. Our actions will take the form of economic, political, diplomatic, and—where necessary—military engagement. But they must respond to local realities if we are to succeed in advancing America's interests.

The changing imperative of U.S.-Soviet relations, the growing international economy, the maturing of our alliances, the rise of more open societies—all these energetic forces of change are only threatening to a foreign policy that is brittle with age. In the context of a dynamic, forward-looking framework, they represent a tremendous opportunity. If united correctly, these forces can help us achieve all the goals of our past frameworks—they can contain Soviet expansionism, foster a domestic consensus for appropriate internationalism, and strengthen America's leadership for economic growth, human dignity, and global peace.

In short, our foreign policy goals have not changed. If anything, our goals for the next 30 years should be more ambitious than for the last 30. But if we are to achieve those goals, we must exert America's leadership through new means, using the forces of global change to supplement our already substantial power.

And that is the essence of enlightened engagement.

ENLIGHTENED ENGAGEMENT: A FOREIGN POLICY FRAMEWORK FOR THE 21ST CENTURY

LECTURE TWO

Let us consider a new foreign policy framework that can help us use the opportunities presented by a changing world to advance our long-standing ideals and goals in two areas. One is the most sustained challenge of this century—the need to contain Soviet expansionism; the other is the hitherto unappreciated opportunity for American leadership in foreign policy—international economics.

Managing U.S.-Soviet relations

The clearest point of consensus in American foreign policy is the imperative of continued resistance to Soviet expansionism. Moscow's drive for hegemony is not likely to dissipate in our lifetime. It is deeply rooted in traditional Great Russian chauvinism, the Kremlin's interpretation of communism, empire-building urges of the Soviet military, and xenophobic Soviet desire for "300% security"—for a world in which no one can threaten its security.

The question is not whether retraining Soviet imperialism should be an American goal; clearly, it should and it is. But in a world where U.S.-Soviet military engagement could escalate to nuclear conflict, we have a responsibility to search for better means of limiting Soviet expansionism than direct confrontation. While our goals reflect a constancy of purpose, we need increasing flexibility and imagination in tactics. Military confrontation and bluster have proved no more effective than excessive efforts at conciliation.

Dramatic global changes since the emergence of containment in the 1940s and and '50s suggest important ways we can improve our strategy with regard to the Soviets. Most important in this regard are the diffusion of power and the continuing rise of genuine nationalism. Those who lament these trends and the waning relevance of the concept of a superpower miss something here. If we can move toward the kind of world we want without the U.S. attempting to play the traditional role of omnipotent superpower, that is entirely to the good. We had no responsible choice but to shoulder that burden after World War II. But worldwide diffusion of power creates a markedly different situation for us, one in which we can achieve our objectives with far less direct, unilateral intervention on our part.

Diffusion of power and nationalism have created a world in which an expansionist power is contained more by the resistance of those it is attacking—local powers—than by the actions of another superpower. The Afghans are not fighting the Soviet invasion because we are pressing them to do so. Nor does the effectiveness of their resistance depend primarily on us, as important as our aid is. We were defeated in Southeast Asia by North Vietnam and its supporters in the South, not by the Soviet Union. Vietnam itself is now bogged down in a no-win war in Kampuchea. Again, resistance is rooted in local nationalism, not intervention by another outside power.

All this means that the goal of containment, while still necessary, can depend increasingly on local, rather than American, resistance to Soviet expansionism. We should still involve ourselves in resisting Soviet hegemony in some cases. But, given the mutual interest of the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. in avoiding armed conflict with each other, fostering nationalism and the growing strength of minor powers will help us advance toward goals we share with indigenous populations.

In addition, there is danger in assuming someone else's fight on the grounds we are better able to wage the battle. In such cases, local forces may become apathetic—as happened to some extent in Vietnam. Indeed, they may even turn actively against us.

This indirect approach to containment might best be summarized by a term borrowed from the Chinese: "Resisting hegemony while not seeking hegemony." [1] In essence, we help others contain aggression directed against them, but play a secondary, supportive role so as not to turn local nationalism against us.

U.S.-Soviet relations: Self-interested cooperation

Our foreign policy framework must also enable us to re-define the nature of the U.S.-Soviet relationship in an age of declining superpower dominance. Despite the rise of nationalism, the international diffusion of power, and the development of a global economy, our relationship as hostile nuclear powers is still of the greatest importance to all humanity.

Over the past 15 years, U.S. policy has vacillated unnecessarily and unproductively between the oversold hopes of detente and the simplistic pugnacity of the current Administration. Neither extreme has moderated Soviet duplicity, domestic repression, military built-up or global adventurism. It is unrealistic to hope we can change Soviet behavior either through "better understanding" on the one hand or military bluster on the other. Instead, we must seek to manage our relations with the Soviets, and we must always rely on means that are in our own interests.[2]

Enlightened engagement suggests a threefold approach for better managing policy towards the Soviets. First, we and our allies should fortify our own conventional defenses so they are adequate to assure our security and become the principal—and most stable—bulwark of deterrence. These defense improvements must be largely in the form of military reform—within our own military and throughout NATO. Military reform is the best strategy for the United States and Europe to create a credible conventional deterrent that could reduce our reliance on nuclear weapons to defend Europe.[3]

[1] This was the title of a speech I gave on December 4, 1978 at the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations.

[2] Former German Chancellor, Helmut Schmidt, calls for such an approach in his recent book, "A Grand Strategy for the West." His approach, which he calls "cooperation on the basis of assured security," has two components. First, the free world must assure its security against Soviet aggression by its own strength, not on the basis of Soviet promises. Second, on the basis of assured security, the West should be willing to cooperate with the Soviet Union in mutually beneficial actions, as long as Soviet behavior is appropriate.

[3] The potential of military reform is a topic we address in the next lecture.

Second, we must engage the Soviets in a greatly expanded search for areas of mutual cooperation that work to our benefit.[4] The most important of these, clearly, is arms control.[5] A few points deserve emphasis.

Our immediate goal must be much more than reductions in our nuclear arsenals—although that is still a crucial step. Our goal must be the prevention of use of nuclear weapons—by anyone, for any reason. In a time of Gadhafis and Chernobyls, the first step toward nuclear Armageddon is as likely to come from terrorists, technical accidents, or superpower miscalculation as from Soviet malice.

The goal of preventing the use of nuclear weapons requires several critical steps. Reductions in destabilizing, first-strike systems; non-proliferation agreements; a freeze on weapons-grade fissionable material; jointly staffed crisis management centers; a major joint initiative to improve verification; and a nuclear test ban, must all be central to our agenda. The most critical objective is to make the notion of nuclear warfighting as unacceptable as possible for all nuclear powers.

As we pursue deep reductions in first-strike nuclear arsenals, we should make far greater use of asymmetrical agreements—asymmetrical, not in the benefit to each nation, but in the nature of the weapons exchanged. For example, to break the current stalemate each side should agree to verifiable limits on the systems the other side sees as most threatening. The Soviets must agree to substantial cuts in offensive forces, particularly their large ICBMs. We should agree to set limits on the testing and deployment of defensive systems.[6]

Arms control and crisis management are not the only areas in which we can engage in self-interested cooperation with the Soviets. We should also accelerate cultural exchanges with the Soviets, joint scientific efforts—say, into improving the safety of nuclear reactors—and joint humanitarian efforts around the world. We should challenge the Soviets to join us in combatting terrorism, stemming nuclear proliferation, and eradicating the worst of global malnutrition by the early part of the next century.[7]

But there is a third part to managing our relations with the Soviets. Enlightened engagement requires that we be flexible in tactics. We must be prepared to alter our policies when warranted by Soviet behavior—such as the invasion of Afghanistan or the Soviet-inspired repression of Solidarity in Poland. No fixed formula can determine our precise response to every Soviet action. There is a difference, however, between applying pressure on the Soviet Union in direct response to its adventurism—such as shoring up Pakistan after Soviet invasion of its border country—and abrogating cooperative efforts that are in our own self-interest.

Those who advocate nullifying the achievements of nuclear arms control because they object to the Soviet regime somehow imagine that restraining Soviet nuclear arsenals should be reward for Soviet good behavior. This is not just nonsense, it is a serious threat to U.S. security interests. Cooperation in areas of clear self interest—such as arms control—should not be used for short-term political objectives. We have more than adequate political and economic means to respond to Soviet misbehavior that do not require us to wound ourselves in the process.

Managing U.S.-Soviet relations: Regional applications

We have seen movements in Eastern Europe rising in protest to Soviet imperialist control and the incompetent management of their societies—most notably the struggle of Solidarity in Poland. Many Americans still hope these nationalist and popular movements will eventually help bring these states to independence from Moscow's subjugation. Yet Moscow's military domination must for now dim these hopes.

This kind of protest will likely increase in the future, particularly as the USSR makes more economic demands on these countries and has less to offer them in comparison to the West. While the Soviet empire in Eastern Europe is not likely to be overturned soon, the unreliable nature of the satellites will continue to keep the Soviet government off-guard.

Throughout the Third World, the exploitation of instabilities is still the cutting edge of Soviet strategy for gaining influence. The greatest danger is the risk of local crises escalating—perhaps by accident—to superpower confrontation. After a steady pattern of such confrontations in the Middle East in the 1970s—all mercifully stopping short of war—both powers learned critical object lessons about the hazards of Third World rivalry. We and the Soviets have had to recognize the dangers of heavily armed independent countries going to war in regional disputes over which we had relatively little control. Although we lack formal agreements, we and the Soviet Union must develop a far better understanding of "codes of conduct" to guide our actions in violatile areas of the world.

Ultimately, our decisive edge over the Soviet Union throughout the world is the strength and allure of our open society and economy. There is little the Soviet Union has to offer developing nations other than arms and raw commodities. For everything from tractors to trade credits to high technology, from books to blue jeans, the developing world is turning West—toward us, and toward our allies. The rigidities of the Soviet bureaucracy, ideology, and economy often hobble their efforts beyond their own borders.

A new dynamic is at work around the globe. Economic and political progress can be generated by tapping into the increasingly interdependent world economy. The "Four Tigers" of the Pacific Rim—Singapore, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and South Korea—did not achieve dazzling growth by depending on the military or economic hand-outs of either superpower. Those who have remained Soviet conscripts are still backwaters. We stand to benefit from this new dynamic. The Soviets do not. The irony of this approach would probably not be lost on Karl Marx. Enlightened engagement suggests that the bastions of capitalism adopt a strategy of letting the economic forces of history work to our advantage; time and the inherent unworkability of the Soviet system are on our side.

International economics as an instrument of foreign policy

The framework of enlightened engagement rests upon recognizing and channeling the forces of change to our benefit. The ability to use the forces of economic change extends beyond our goal of containing the Soviet Union.

International economics has been the poor cousin of foreign policy for the past twenty years.[8] The global economy can no longer be simply viewed as an arena for promoting American commercial interests. The international debt crisis threatens democratic forces abroad as directly as any political or military forces; protectionism strains our alliances as severely as any military deployment decision. Enlightened engagement requires that international economics become a primary foreign policy tool. For the rest of this century and beyond, international economics may well be our most important lever for strengthening our alliances, advancing the cause of human dignity, and supporting centrist forces abroad.[9]

[4] The importance of finding such areas of "self interested" cooperation cannot be overstated. The U.S.-Soviet competition increasingly resembles Vienna and St. Petersburg in 1914: each mesmerized by the other, seeing little else, while the world was on the edge of fundamental change. The Hapsburgs and the Romanovs could only consider the question, which of them was going to win? But the real winners were an American republic that previously had not been a great power and an exile waiting in a cafe in Zurich, Vladimir Ilych Ulyanov.

[5] My proposals for arms control are detailed in a speech I gave entitled "The Future of Nuclear Arms Control: An Agenda for the 21st Century," in Geneva in January 1984.

[6] While it is important to continue our research into defensive technologies, as explicitly provided for in the ABM treaty, there is little justification for the Administration's dramatic emphasis on the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative.

There is little in the plausible advantages of SDI that justifies its likely costs. Those costs go far beyond the estimated trillion dollar expense. They include the damaging precedent set by the Administration's "redefinition" of the ABM Treaty, which amounts to unilateral abrogation; the undoing of four successive Administrations' work in managing our nuclear rivalry with the Soviets; and the incentive SDI will give the Soviets to accelerate their efforts toward their own defensive and counter-defensive systems.

[7] Such coopertive efforts serve a variety of purposes. People-to-people exchanges help remind the people of both nations that our quarrel with the U.S.S.R. is with their government, not with their people. Cooperative efforts can also help reduce hostility. The usual pattern of each nation seeking to aggravate the predicaments of the other is not necessarily the most advantageous strategy for either. Afghanistan offers an example. It is fully appropriate that we continue and even increase our support of the Afhanan freedom fighters so long as the Soviets insist on attempting to conquer that country. However, at the same time, we should make it clear to Moscow that we will actively support an "Austrian Model" solution to the Afghan problem, in which Afghanistan's neutrality would be guaranteed after a Soviet withdrawal.

[8] As recently as a decade ago, Henry Kissinger could boast that he knew little about economics. The emphasis on economic aid in the recommendations of the commission he chaired on Central America suggest his thinking has changed. Nonetheless, international economics since the era of the Marshall Plan has become a secondary concern for too many of our foreign policymakers. Structural analyses of our foreign policy apparatus are instructive. In the State Department, "political" positions are considered far more prestigious than "economic" positions. Not since the Johnson administration has international economic policymaking been coordinated or dominated by considerations of foreign policy.

[9] We have examples of the successful use of economic policy as a broad tool of foreign policy; too few, however, are recent. In the years following World War II, we created the Marshall Plan, the GATT trade process, and, at Bretton Woods, helped establish the IMF, the World Bank, and a new international monetary system. These stand among our proudest accomplishments; they served to strengthen our alliances and helped bring about an explosion in world trade.

Effective international economic policy is also indispensable to building a consensus for enlightened internationalism at home. As long as American workers and voters see the international arena as the central cause of our economic woes, forces of isolationism will be strong.

International economics: Promoting open societies

We have seen how the strengths of our economy can be used to compete successfully with the Soviets in the third world. Understanding and influencing economic forces is also critical for our attempts to promote open societies. From Costa Rica to India to Colombia to Japan, we see how economic growth and political freedom nourish each other. From the Weimar Republic to Peronist Argentina, we have seen the political costs of economic failure.

Latin America provides a clear example of how we should use international economics to strengthen centrist forces. Today a tide of hope and democracy is sweeping that continent. Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay, and others have all made giant strides toward free government. This is a praiseworthy end in and of itself. But it also benefits hemispheric security immeasurably.

At the same time, a monumental debt crisis threatens these fragile democracies. The success of our foreign policy toward these nations may stand or fall on our ability to address that crisis so our hemispheric partners can resume their economic progress and safeguard their political progress.

In all, Latin American nations owe nearly $400 billion in international debts—over 50 percent of their combined GNP.[10] For many of these nations, ruinous interest payments, IMF austerity agreements, depressed commodity prices, and capital flight have reduced economic growth to a memory and nearly obliterated it as a dream.[11] Argentina, Mexico, Chile, Peru and others have watched their standards of living drop while their debt rises. The crisis has no end in sight. It threatens progressive leaders, like Argentine President Alfonsin, while it gives Castro and others a new platform for demagoguery.

The debt distorts political relations with our neighbors by forcing unbalanced trade. As these countries struggle to meet their debt payments, they cut their imports of American crops, cars, and computers, and lower prices on goods they sell here to raise the dollars needed to make their debt payments. According to a recent study, nearly half of Latin American interest payments were generated by reducing purchases of U.S. products. Our declining trade balance with these countries has cost the jobs of nearly a million American workers—more, since 1981, than have been affected by trade with Japan.[12]

There is a better course. Our government should act more like a leader of global growth and less like a collection agency for the overextended banks. If we help expand Latin American economies rather than squeeze them, we can increase American exports as we strengthen southern democracies and our own security. We must break the chokehold these debts have placed on the development of free economies and progressive, centrist governments. All involved parties will need to help pay for past mistakes.[13]

The debtors themselves will need to ensure that relief is used to promote broad-based development—not to finance capital flight by elites. We must begin a new round of financial reporting negotiations to make sure that new funds are not returned to London, Switzerland, or New York as anonymous deposits or real estate investments of the Marcoses, Duvaliers or Mobutus of the world.

Debtor countries must also ensure their macroeconomic, tax, and regulatory policies encourage investment and growth. We must be flexible in designing such "conditionality" programs. Local political and economic realities must be taken into account.[14] But we must also ensure that aid and debt relief is not undermined by irresponsible, shortsighted, or inefficient economic management in the developing countries.

The banks must also do their share. It is no longer enough to build 90-day solvency bridges that barely span the next crisis.[15] Selected direct debt relief and—in some cases—corresponding writedowns, extended repayment schedules, interest rate relief, and new international lending mechanisms will be needed. The banks should know that full repayment of these loans is no longer tenable as a primary goal of U.S. policy.[16]

The international scope of this crisis mandates an international solution. In particular, Japan's emerging and special role in the new world economy must be recognized. As Japan moves into a position of greater wealth and prominence, it must accept new responsibilities—just as the U.S. accepted new responsibilities for the world's economy after World War II. The debt crisis—not just in Latin America, but in Africa and world-wide—offers a clear opportunity. Japan should make a substantial contribution to a multilateral development solution. It should increase its lending and direct investment in the developing world. Perhaps most important, both Japan and the European Economic Community must open their markets to developing country exports.

The U.S. will need to take the initative in coordinating solutions. We should convene a series of negotiations, undertaken on a country by country basis, that bring together debtors, lenders, and international lending agencies. Ten year capital plans must be developed, based on realistic economic and political assumptions, that offer blueprints for growth. The entire portfolio of private and public debt—not just this quarter's or this country's crisis loans—should be put on the table.

International lending agencies should help alleviate stress on both the countries and banks after these long term agreements are established. Any new funds necessary to provide a combination of interest rate relief, guarantees, purchases, or debt-for-equity swap programs should come from a consortium of international lenders.[17]

Encouraging open societies will require more from economic policy than solving the debt crisis. We must promote broad-based and balanced development throughout the developing world. Our aid policies should promote education, health, and other investments in "human capital." We must show a greater appreciation for the importance of small-scale farmers and appropriate technologies. We must insist that efficiency and equity are both protected by the governments receiving aid. Americans will not stand for funding boondoggle projects under the guise of "development assistance."

International economics: Strengthening our alliances

In addition to providing effective competition to the Soviets in the third world and to promoting centrist forces and open societies, economic policy is a critical tool for strengthening our alliances. Economic relationships should, by rights, promote and strengthen alliances. Yet we face a world in which trade seems to be poisoning our most important friendships—with Japan, with Europe, with Canada, and with the developing world. At a time when the language of conflict dominates discussions of interna-

[10] Many of these loans were extended during the 1970s when the banking community was awash in petrodollars and growth rates in Latin America were still strong. Now, there is little prospect that the interest, much less the principal, on many of these loans can be repaid. American banks continue to participate because writing off these loans would entail massive losses. Latin American debts are greater than the total capitalization of the nine largest U.S. banks. Interest payments by Latin America to these banks are larger than their total profits.

[11] Capital flight is one of the most serious financial threats to many developing nations. Much of the free-flowing loans of the '70s never even reached the people of Latin America or Africa—they were used to swell the Swiss bank accounts of political and economic elites. More than $100 billion flowed out of the five major Latin American debtors over the past ten years; this represented more than a third of the total amount lent to the countries. Each debtor has its own history, culture, and problems, and our approach to each must respect those differences. But capital fight is an important problem in many, and our policies must take this into account.

[12] The disappearance of American jobs further fans the flames of protectionism. Yet protectionism would only compound the problem. Restricting imports from Latin America would force these countries to cut back on their purchases of our exports even more severely—and reduce U.S. employment even more.

[13] The Administration has, in the form of the so-called "Baker Plan," begun to move its rhetoric in this direction, but has backed it up with precious little in the way of long term solutions.

[14] The IMF has failed to take into account local conditions in designing many of its austerity programs. Both the long term impact of austerity on development and the short term effects on large segments of society have too often received short shrift. A similar inflexibility about means appears to be one impediment to the Baker Plan.

[15] It has become fashionable to assert that the debt crisis is all the result of "wild" lending on the part of imprudent American banks during the 1970s. This is true only to an extent. Most lending was made before international growth collapsed in the wake of the developed countries' attempt to contain inflation by limiting growth. The possibility of disinflationary monetary policies was, however, a risk the banks took.

[16] The banks continuing role in the long term solution is, however, a fundamental goal; continued lending will be necessary. Further, the stability of the international financial system is essential. A wide variety of regulatory and tax "carrots and sticks" will be needed to balance these objectives. Banks should know, however, that their solvency is ensured only to the extent that they continue to participate in long term solutions. The degree and type of debt relief will vary widely from country to country. Mexico's imminent crisis inflicted by the collapse in oil prices requires different approaches than do the long-term needs and growth plans of Brazil.

[17] Beyond the current crisis in Latin America, we must face the challenges of meeting the borrowing needs of poor countries throughout the world. Africa's debt problems involve much smaller sums than those of Latin America.The needs of flexible and dependable sources of funds are even greater. The importance of free trade with these countries is also critical. We should offer the provisions of the Caribbean Basin Initiative to all of the "LDDCs"—the least developed developing countries.

tional trade, all pressures are for less trade—not more.

If our alliances and friendships are to survive the next few decades, we must remember that protectionism is isolationism—no less dangerous to our people or our alliances or our collective security than the isolationism of the 1930s. The economic pain many of our people feel because of trade is real, as are the flaws in the world's trading system. But we must address these flaws directly, not paper them over with political demagoguery or trade restrictions that would suffocate prosperity and alliance.

We need policies that address the two root causes of protectionist sentiment. First, we must repair an obsolete and dangerously unstable system of international finance and macroeconomic cooperation. Second, we must increase and spread the benefits of trade to American workers by easing the costs of adjustment and promoting productivity growth and competitiveness.

Uncoordinated and irresponsible macroeconomic policies have caused the persistent and unprecedented trade imbalances of the eighties. U.S. federal deficits have been larger than the entire economies of all but a handful of countries.[18] Our deficits produced high interest rates and an overvalued dollar that taxes U.S. exports and subsidizes foreign imports.[19] Explosive swings in the dollar have whipsawed international prices by more than 50 percent over a period of mere months. These and other financial and macroeconomic factors rob our firms and workers from the chance to compete on the basis of their relative productivity.

Understanding the financial and macroeconomic grounding of the trade crisis is no new insight. There is near unanimity among economists (a minor miracle in its own right) that unfair trade practices abroad account for less than 20 percent of our trade deficit. Yet year after year, politicians incite resentment against our allies rather than identify and tackle the real causes of our trade woes. This tactic is not populism; it is demagoguery, and it represents one of the greatest isolationist threats to the security of th West in the coming decades. The politics of blame threaten to accomplish what the Soviets never could—the rending of the Western alliance.

The U.S. should take a lead role in overcoming these trade imbalances—first, by reducing our federal deficit. Increased revenues, decreased spending, and military restraint—not Gramm-Rudman or budget projections grounded only in fantasy—represent the clear path.

As we reduce the budget deficits, we must simultaneously encourage fiscal changes by our trading partners. Japan must also reduce its chronic trade imbalances.[20] West Germany and other countries with strong international positions must accept greater responsibility for world growth.

We can only achieve greater coordination on fiscal and monetary policies in the context of evolutions in the flexible exchange rate system. A new Bretton Woods conference—not a continuing series of high-publicity low-content economic summits—is necessary.[21] "Target zones" or some similar form of more explicit management of exchange rates must be developed. The effort of the leading industrialized nations—the so called "G-5"—to bring down the value of the dollar deserves praise. But this intervention came far too late. A target zone system would help force cooperation by leading to a set of long term institutions and mechanisms that prevent realignment from coming too late again. Such an effort will require more from our allies as well as from ourselves. The diffusion of economic power must be matched by a new allocation of responsibility.

Revamping the financial system will significantly limit protectionism threats to alliances, particularly in the short term. But expanding trade, like technical innovation, represents what the economist Schumpeter called "a gale of creative destruction." We engage in trade for the same reason we invent new ways of doing things—to increase our standard of living. As with new inventions, change results in jarring dislocations.[22]

Protectionism purports to prevent the pain of trade. Positive adjustment and productivity policies will allow us instead to reap its benefits.[23]

We need to increase the scope and effectiveness of Trade Adjustment Assistance—not eliminate it as this Administration has consistently proposed. We need new and effective job training programs. Firms that demonstrate a willingness to make the long term investments necessary to modernize should be able to receive financial and technical assistance.[24]

More important, we need to promote flexibility and competitiveness before the winds of change become destructive. Competitiveness will not materialize out of thin air. No invisible hand builds the roads, the schools, and the research laboratories necessary to move our economy into the twenty first century. We need an explicit and ambitious set of investments in our future.[25] We must invest more in specific, targeted programs even in a period of severe budgetary restraint.

Indeed, the longest term threat to our economy is the loss of productivity growth. How can we expect to grow at home or compete abroad when savings and literacy rates are too low and unemployment and dropout rates are too high? I have spelled out elsewhere a comprehensive program to improve American productivity and international competitiveness. A new High Tech Morrill Act, the American Defense Education Act, a National Corporation for Cooperative Laboratory Research, increased export promotion, and a permanent commission on competitiveness all represent effective and necessary ways to increase productivity and competitiveness.[26]

These policies must all be tempered by a clear perception of the interests involved. When we aid an ailing industry, we must ensure that any benefits it reaps from government programs are used to promote improved productivity.[27]

While we resist protectionism domestically, we must insist it not grow abroad. We must strengthen trade laws at home and ensure that they are enforced. We should establish clear definitions of what constitutes unfair practices that include consideration of other countries' trade in services, high technology, agriculture, and failure to combat counterfeiters and pirates of intellectual property. Once we determine that a country is engaging in unfair trade practices sanctions should be automatic. The President should not be able to suspend sanctions except in cases of certifiable national security threats.

We must reaffirm and expand the GATT process. International trade rules must be modernized in a new "Growth Round" of multilateral trade talks. Extending and modernizing GATT must be accompanied by strengthening its procedures for dispute settlement.

Sensible trade policy will strengthen our alliances in endless ways. By developing methods of international coordination and domestic investment, we can promote positive competition—competition that enriches all and encourages economic peace.

Conclusion

We have seen how international economic policy can help us compete with the Soviets, promote the forces of freedom and decency, and strengthen our alliances. International economics must be raised to its rightful place among the primary tools of foreign policy.

Some will think economics too dry or technical a field for such emphasis. But it is not dry or technical to the people of the world we want our foreign policy to reach. The average cab driver in La Paz sees clearly how debt payments constrain progress in his country. The average farmer outside [18] Our deficit in 1984 was roughly half the size of the economy of the United Kingdom, about the same size as the entire Australian economy, and larger than the combined economies of South Korea, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and Singapore.

[19] The dollar's recent decline is very welcome and will, in time, temporarily lessen the trade deficit. Yet as long as the fundamentals go unaddressed we have no assurance that the problem will not crop up again.

[20] Even a recent Japanese government commission recognized the importance of overcoming that country's structural dependence on exports. Japan should adopt the recommendations of its own Maekawa report.

[22] Many of these points become clear when we consider the potential impact of the entry of China into the world economy. For those who see only the threats of trade, the notion of a billion well-equipped Chinese workers, each of whom is glad to work for what Westerners would consider a pittance, is terrifying. Those who see China as a potential giant market understand that economic liberalization in China could be the sharpest spur to global economic growth in the next century. The only way the latter can occur is for the fears of the former to be addressed.

[23] The central current debate on trade is dangerously limited. Much of the discussion makes it appear as if our choices are the current Administration's laissez faire policy and the new wave of protectionism. Policies that improve our competitiveness by increasing our productivity represent the cornerstone of a better approach.

[24] My trade bill lays out a set of reforms for the TAA program, including mandating training programs after a certain grace period and better coordinating benefits with Unemployment Insurance. Title VI of the bill also includes a revamped job training and business adjustment assistance program.

[26] These proposals are described both in the comprehensive trade bill and in the Growth and Investment Initiative that I, along with Senators Chiles, Byrd, and others, proposed as a part of this year's budget deliberation.

[27] I call for the development of industrial modernization agreements in such industries. These would be compacts brokered by the President among labor, management, and sources of private capital. Under such compacts, labor would condition wage demands on productivity gains; in return workers would receive long term employment guarantees. Management would commit to long term investment and modernization in specific productivity plans.

Kinshasa fully comprehends how skewed development policies have depressed the quality of life for her family and village. And the average machine tool worker in Rockford, Illinois understands well that outdated trade rules are poisoning the way America views our Japanese and European allies. It is time for America's foreign policy to confront these realities as well.

We have no clearer way to engage our fellow men and women in productive cooperation. We have few stronger means to sustain a domestic consensus for enlightened internationalism. We have the chance to speak directly and convincingly to the people of the world about the benefits of a free and open society. And we must seize this opportunity for true enlightened engagement.

ENLIGHTENED ENGAGEMENT: A FOREIGN POLICY FRAMEWORK FOR THE 21ST CENTURY

LECTURE THREE

We have considered ways in which our foreign policy framework might view the challenges of the U.S.-Soviet relationship and the vast opportunities of the global economy within a new foreign policy framework. Now we must devise the tools needed to construct the other two pillars of the framework: alliances based on equality rather than dependency, and the encouragement of open societies around the world.

STRONGER ALLIANCES BASED ON EQUALITY

First, our alliances. Some argue that America's alliances have outlived their usefulness; that we must increasingly act unilaterally, because our alliances stand in the way of decisive, self-interested actions. In fact, in an age of diffuse economic and military power, our alliances will be more vital for our security and prosperity—not less. If our alliances are not working adequately—and in some cases they are not—our challenge is not to abandon them, but to reform, modernize, and improve them.

Even in a changing world, we still retain permanent interests, and chief among these is the prevention of war, especially nuclear war with the Soviet Union. Our strategy of deterrence—extended to our friends and allies—has been the driving determinant of our foreign policy since the dawn of the atomic age.

STRONGER ALLIANCES: NATO

NATO is and must remain key to deterring war in Europe. The establishment of the NATO alliance is a crowning achievement of the post-war era. Alleviating strains within this 16 country partnership must be a central concern of a foreign policy framework.

The importance of NATO must not preclude reforms where needed. As suggested earlier, the absence of such reforms is most to blame for current tensions in that alliance. If we continue to resist change within NATO, it may soon look like the Holy Roman Empire in its last days, with everyone wondering what still holds it together.

Our fundamental goal for NATO is to improve its ability to achieve its most basic objective—preventing war. Many of the strains in the alliance arise from the realization among all NATO partners that nuclear conflict, either initiated at the strategic level or in Europe, is not acceptable. At the same time, the only solution to this threat—sufficient conventional forces to preclude nuclear escalation—is resisted by many countries. The continued failure to field an effective conventional deterrent—conventional forces which provide for the common security and inspire confidence among both NATO governments and publics—in the key vulnerability of the Alliance.

The continued ineffectiveness of our conventional deterrent is not just the operational Achilles heel of our alliance—it is the overarching metaphor for our inability to assure public confidence in our security strategy. The knowledge that our vulnerable conventional forces might lead to early use of nuclear weapons in a crisis is no mere abstraction to the residents of Bonn, Brussels, and the other cities where war would be waged.

To improve NATO's deterrent, we need to alter dramatically its fragile "forward defense" cordon. Today, NATO's forces are deployed in a manner that resembles the French Maginot Line of the 1930s. The cordon defense is a continuing reason for our low nuclear threshold in Europe and our inability to lessen our dependence on nuclear deterrence at the tactical and strategic levels.

The lack of adequate operational reserves represents NATO's key weakness. Today, there are only two divisions in operational reserve: too few to wage an effective counterattack against a major Warsaw Pact breakthrough or to support a successful NATO counter-thrust. Quite simply, NATO does not have enough ground combat units, and no injection of technology or commitments to raise defense budgets by arbitrary percentages can make up for that deficiency.

The only realistic solution is to reform NATO's defenses, just as we need to reform our own military structure.[1] In particular, one key to the creation of a more adequate conventional deterrent is greatly increased European use of its military reserve system. We can also take steps to increase the combat capability of our ground forces in Germany, and we might consider increasing the number of U.S. divisions in Europe within current troop levels.[2]

But the foundations of common security are as much psychological as material. An inherent fallibility of the Alliance is the continued and corrosive notion of the U.S. as dominant partner—even as the other partners have grown to positions of relative equality. The myth of American domination of NATO undermines the sense of self-determination which all countries require to develop public support for their defense. And it encourages unnecessary political frictions by suggesting U.S. diktat as the reason for unpopular actions, such as modernization of intermediate range nuclear forces stationed in Europe or increases in defense budgets.

Notably, the one country which has experienced the least controversy in its defense policy is France. In large part, there is less controversy because France has taken primary responsibility for its own defense.

To adapt NATO to changing times we must return to NATO's original goal: A Europe primarily responsible for its own defense. That was quite explicitly NATO's original purpose.[3]

We must evolve from an alliance that reflects European dependency on the United States to one based on equal partnership. To that end, we should begin negotiating with our NATO allies to consider ways we might restructure military burdens in Europe in the coming decades. For example, at some time in the 21st century, the United States might assume more of the air and sea defenses and Europe, more of the burden of land defense—an allocation that would better reflect our relative comparative advantages.[4]

I stress: any move to alter NATO doctrine and forces should be evolutionary, and undertaken in full concert with our allies. But we must also make it clear we are not the Romans. We do not intend to stay in Germany for 300 years, or until we are driven out.

NATO is an enduring achievement of our post-war foreign policy. But for many, even the smallest detail in the traditional structure of our Alliance is considered sacrosanct. Anyone who suggests that it be changed or reformed is labeled irresponsible, isolationist, or a heretic. The domestic political cost which accompanies reform proposals has become so high that the debate over how we can strengthen the Alliance is forever put off to another day.

Recognizing NATO as a real partnership, rather than an aggregation of subservient states, can only result in a stronger, reinvigorated Alliance. But it also imposes some restraint on the United States. We must not attempt to alter NATO policies unilaterally.

The most recent and damaging example of droit de seigneur exhibited by American leadership has been the President's Strategic Defense Initiative. With a suddenness and rhetorical enthusiasm born of a purely domestic impulse, the Administration has attempted to recreate NATO doctrine in its own image.

The Strategic Defense Initiative has inspired real fears among NATO governments and publics. Rightly or wrongly, it has fostered the perception among some that the U.S. desires strategic superiority; that we are seeking to sunder our commitment to NATO's defense; that we have little interest in arms control; and that we ultimately intend to prosecute U.S.-Soviet differences on NATO soil.

Fueled by the U.S. failure to achieve progress in arms control, these fears have inflicted incalculable damage on NATO cohesion. The recent U.S. decision to abandon the limits of the SALT II Treaty—in spite of European entreaties—has further poisoned the atmosphere. Even as the quixotic prom-

[1] For the details of military reform strategy, see America Can Win by Gary W. Hart and William S. Lind (Bethesda: Adler and Adler, 1986). More specific proposals for NATO appear in my speech at the University of Edinburgh, January 1985.

[2] Dr. Steven Canby, one of the architects of military reform, has proposed specific ways to accomplish such objectives.

[3] As Stephen E. Ambrose writes, in Eisenhower,

"The second objection [to the creation of NATO to which Eisenhower responded] was that the United States was committing itself to an indefinite defense of Europe, at a tremendous cost that would continually go higher. Eisenhower admitted the force of the objection. 'We cannot be a modern Rome guarding the far frontiers with our legions,' he said. He recognized that the economic strength of the United States was the greatest asset the free world had, and he agreed that the expenditure of billions of dollars for defense would, in the long run, bankrupt the United States, thus presenting the Soviets with 'their greatest victory.' But he insisted that a program of support for NATO was a short-run proposition. American aid for NATO was essential now, in 1951, but it could be phased out rather quickly. To Ed Bermingham, he flatly declared, 'If in ten years, all American troops stationed in Europe for national defense purposes have not been returned to the United States, then this whole project will have failed.' " ise of the SDI recedes, the political task of rebuilding consensus for Western nuclear policies will be formidable. Unilateral and dramatic shifts in strategy are not the way to treat equal partners or achieve common security.

[4] In a White Paper issued with Senator Robert Taft, Jr., in 1977, I outlined one possible strategy—emphasizing a stronger maritime role for the United States.

STRONGER ALLIANCES: THE DEVELOPING WORLD

The idea of independent states acting collectively on the basis of mutual interests should also guide our policies toward the industrializing, centrist countries of the developing world. The notion of the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. carving out spheres of influence, based on compliant client states, has been discredited and should have been discarded years ago. From Egypt's expulsion of the Soviets in the early 1970s, or our "loss" of Iran in the late 1970s, we have seen repeated examples of how the world has evolved far beyond the concept of client states—in military, economic, or political relations.

Acknowledging the true independence of these nations—including some friends and allies—may suggest to some a loss of control by the superpowers. But only by fostering that independence can we build durable alliances in the 1990s and beyond. Independent states may appear to be more of a nuisance in the short run, but they are inherently far more reliable in the long run. A country which sees itself as a client state, in fact, will never be a reliable ally because it does not bear responsibility for its own actions.

The advent of the Nixon Doctrine in 1969 marked a watershed in U.S. relations with the Third World. Its declared objectives—to promote military self-reliance among friendly countries in place of dependence on U.S. interventionary forces—was, in theory, an appropriate response to important historic trends. The doctrine responded to nationalism in the developing world and acknowledged the declining utility of traditional instruments of American power, such as U.S. troop presence, base rights and formal security alliances.

In practice, however, the Nixon Doctrine exported military technologies wholly inappropriate to the security needs of the recipients. In Iran, South Korea, and elsewhere in the Third World, by exporting excessively complex and sophisticated weaponry, we fostered dependence even as we claimed to do the opposite.

No county is more secure as a result of purchasing F-15 fighter aircraft if the threats to its security come from guerrilla insurgencies, if it lacks the infrastructure to deploy the planes, or if its military spending reduces social expenditures necessary to stem instability and crisis. No country's security is served by merely becoming a showcase for American military technology—especially when its own military lacks the training to use this technology in combat.

In the developing world, alliances and friendships based on equality means we must provide these friendly states with realistic and effective means of self-defense. We can start by extending the principles of military reform to Third World recipients—providing affordable, rugged, and effective defense equipment suitable to their regional security requirements.

But relationships based on equality also require that diplomatic and military arrangements strengthen the hands of our friends and allies in their own region. There is no better or more important example than the Middle East.

In the last half decade, American diplomacy has ignored too many of the Middle East's internal realities and, as a result, helped perpetuate a costly stalemate. Our common interests with both Israel and the moderate Arab states—preserving Gulf security and opposing the Islamic fundamentalist revolution, for example—are extremely important.

We should support certain Arab nations in these efforts, Egypt being the foremost. But we must not reward countries that try to block peace or that support intransigence, terrorism and anti-American radicalism. We have the right and duty to use our leverage, including over arms sales, to seek to influence their policies just as we do in other parts of the world.

Here, as elsewhere, if we are to base our relations on equality, we cannot expect to simply rearrange things to our liking. Attempts to do so can backfire in the face of local nationalism. What we can do—and what the Camp David process did so well—is try to construct a framework within which the local powers can take positive, mutually beneficial actions on their own initiative, reflecting their own independence. We should be actively doing this in the Middle East today. We are not, and because we are not, we have helped to perpetuate an unstable and dangerous status quo.

To strengthen our alliance with moderate forces in the region, we should reward leaders who demonstrate flexibility in their positions—leaders, like the late President Sadat, who are willing to accept the prerequisites of regional stability—most notably, recognizing Israel's right to exist. Our commitment to the survival and security of a free and independent Israel must never be in doubt.

ENCOURAGING MORE OPEN SOCIETIES AND CENTRIST FORCES

The fourth and final focus of our framework must be encouraging the centrist forces which are the best resistance to Soviet expansionism, the strongest guarantor of human rights, and the most powerful fuel for world economic growth.

Encouraging centrist forces implies engagement—political, diplomatic, economic, and sometimes military. We take pride in many past engagements—the Marshall Plan; our help to famine-striken Africa; our diplomatic assistance in launching the Camp David peace process; or our actions in assisting the transition of power from Ferdinand Marcos to Corazon Aquino in the Philippines.

Yet the notion of intervention often grates on the American prejudice against meddling in the affairs of other countries. In part, the public perceives intervention as too expensive—as in the case of foreign aid. Such perceptions have been exacerbated by incidents of the government over-stepping public definitions of ethical behavior—the CIA's involvement in sponsoring assassinations and coups, for example.

But the American public will support engagements for which our leaders have made a compelling case. We must think clearly about how and when intervention is justified and effective, and we must actively rebuild public consensus for an enlightened internationalism.

Much as we might like, no precise prescriptions can guide such actions abroad. In each case, the nature of our engagement will be determined by questions of strategic necessity, moral justification, international law, local history and politics, and—most important—the likely efficacy of our involvement.

Such considerations must especially be at the center of our debate over military intervention and the use of force. That heavy-handed military or economic interventions that characterized our early days as a superpower will seldom be effective in a world where power is diffuse.

In some cases, of course, we will have to resort to the direct use of American force—in the event of aggression against our allies in NATO, in ANZUS, or against vital countries such as Japan, Israel, or Korea. In most cases, however, enlightened engagement will help more indirectly—it will help nationalism resist hegemony; provide a basis for seeking negotiated solutions to regional conflicts; apply pressure for human rights; promote development by helping nations participate in world trade, and take the lead in improving the rules for our international economy.

OPEN SOCIETIES; ECONOMIC ENGAGEMENT

The first type of engagement should be economic. The demands of Third World coutries have moved from ideological nationalism to practical agendas for economic emancipation. The bankruptcy of the Soviet model as an example for Third World development can be the West's strongest weapon. But this will require a change in the orientation of our own policy.

For example, our policies toward the nations of Africa have focused too much on external threats to their security and too little on the more immediate internal crises they face.

In many parts of the third world, the slow and often torturous efforts of nations to achieve modernization are confronted by critical threats. Disastrous environmental and climatic conditions, political upheaval, tattered economies and other pressures have combined to place these states on an apparently permanent downward spirial. In Africa, this tragedy imperils not only untold human lives but also the struggle of black Africans for economic enfranchisement and political stability.

Without a resurgence of American and Western commitment on behalf of African development, per capita income in Africa will continue to decline over the next ten years, even under the most optimistic projections. It is anticipated that payments required to cover interest on Africa's external debts will be equal to two-thirds the aid money directed to the continent. Without a renewed commitment to Africa, instability throughout the continent will dominate the coming decades—as we have already seen in the coups an attempted coups in Ghana, Kenya, Nigeria and Uganda in the 1980s.

We must marshal the energies of public and private development efforts. Our goal must be to promote economic and agricultural self-sufficiency: to improve the yields of local farms; to control the most devastating diseases and famine; to create the infrastructure for subsistence; and to speed the development of a healthy, African private sector. The agricultural sectors in Malawi, Zimbabwe and the Ivory Coast have made remarkable strides. Botswana and Cameroon have managed their economies well. Between 1960 and 1980, literacy more than doubled among Africa's adult population. These success stories speak volumes for Africa's spirit of resourcefulness and perseverance—and we must nourish that spirit in the coming decades. Success in the future will also depend on American leadership to achieve increases in targeted, multilateral aid and debt relief.

A very practical step to assist Africa and lesser developed economies elsewhere would involve employing our intelligence satellites on their behalf: to predict crop development; to monitor agricultural practices; to search for minerals, gas, oil, fish and other resources; and to assist in humanitarian relief efforts.

But our practical efforts to assist African nations in their development, must be accompanied by moral solidarity as well. Unless we take action within our power to end the murderous reign of apartheid in South Africa, many of our positive efforts throughout the African continent may be eclipsed.

Economic sanctions have rarely succeeded in achieving our foreign goals. The practical costs of such sanctions nearly always exceed their idealistic benefits. Recent experiences with grain embargoes demonstrate that withholding food to punish foreign nations is usually futile and ultimately counterproductive.

South Africa is a living and compelling exception. Our purpose in applying sanctions is well-defined: speeding the overdue transition to majority rule and disassociating ourselves from the repressive white minority regime. Ideally, this action should not be unilateral; for greater effectiveness, it should have the full support of our allies.

Failure to pursue an enlightened policy in South Africa will damage regional security and reduce our influence with with other African states. The imposition of such sanctions is not only morally justified; it is essential to advance America's interests in the region.

OPEN SOCIETIES: POLITICAL AND DIPLOMATIC ENGAGEMENT

Much engagement by the United States will be diplomatic and political. The restoration of democracy in the Philippines demonstrates the effectiveness of these means, however late our own efforts may have been. But engagement must mean more than providing safe passage to dictators minutes before the exhausted patience of their people turns to violence. Our policy must be capable of early, sustained and consistent advocacy for human rights and political freedom. It is not enough to respond to the crises of the moment. We must anticipate trouble spots around the world—especially where basic freedoms are denied—and be prepared to act affirmatively.

South Korea provides one of the best examples of how we should use political and diplomatic engagement. In this case, our mutual security interests are clear, recognizable and rooted in the histories of both nations. Broad political and public consensus exists in both countries about the need for a swift and strong response to any external threat to South Korea's survival and security.

Unfortunately, political progress has not kept apace of the industrial progress which has made South Korea one of the economic miracles of the post-war world. Facile parallels between the Philippines and South Korea are not instructive. But, on the other hand, we need not wait until the situation in Korea reaches crisis proportions before taking action.

The opposition New Korea Democratic Party—a democratic political force which fully appreciates the nature of the external threats to South Korea—makes no unreasonable demand by insisting that the next Korean presidential elections fully reflect the will of the Korean electorate. Responsible opposition leaders—and there are many—share our concern that internal instability not provide a pretext for external subversion or aggression. Such leaders also recognize that security and prosperity are reinforced, not weakened, by democracy.

We need not choose between a policy of timid neglect and one of choosing sides—seeing particular leaders or parties as more important than the establishment of the democratic process by which they are chosen. Instead, we have the ability and influence to encourage the moderate and pragmatic elements that exist in both the New Korea Democratic Party and the Democratic Justice Party.

By strengthening and identifying with such elements now rather than when it is too late; by using diplomacy and trade as incentives for internal accord (rather than using heavy-handed pressure which conjures up images of patron-client relationships)—by taking such steps, we exercise true leadership.

OPEN SOCIETIES: MILITARY ENGAGEMENT

Diplomatic, political and economic efforts—these are the means of choice for our intervention on behalf of open societies and centrist forces. But the United States also has awesome military strength, and it is a formidable task to decide where, and under what circumstances we should use that force. In providing for our common security and prosperity, and in defense of certain vital interests of the United States, at times we will be called upon to use American military power.

But direct applications of military power will be increasingly less effective in the face of continued diffusion of power around the world. Today, the resurgence of radical religious fundamentalism has a far more destabilizing effect on the third world than communist-inspired insurgencies. The shock waves from Tehran are reverberating from Cairo to Karachi to Kuala Lumpur. With its cadres of suicide squads, the forces of fundamentalist Islam have demonstrated the growing disutility of conventional military might in constraining those who consider death in the pursuit of their cause not only acceptable but a moral imperative.

There is no military solution—in the traditional sense—to terrorism. Together with our allies, we must use intelligence, our assets to infiltrate terrorist groups, identify their leaders and sources of support, and interdict their plans and operations by covert and para-military means. Terrorist groups must be isolated, denied financial and military resources, and effectively frustrated until they wither and disappear.

In more traditional national and regional conflicts, the use of American military force is not an instrument of choice, but one of last resort: the culmination of failure to resolve crises by other means.

The complexity and diversity of the global environment defies mechanistic prescriptions of when and how to use force. But some specific principles do exist:

First and foremost, American military forces must obviously be used to protect our security interests and those of our allies;

Second, we must clearly define what we are trying to accomplish—what are our political and military objectives. We must insist on tangible, obtainable political goals stated in concrete terms;

Third, the American people must support the use of their army (or other forces) in any sustained military operation and be fully cognizant of proposed levels of military force and potential costs—including of human lives; [5]

Fourth, we should commit our forces only after diplomatic, political, and other means have been exhausted and local forces are insufficient to resolve the conflict;

Fifth, we must be clear on how we intend to achieve our objective and what strategies, tactics, and doctrine we mean to employ; [6]

Sixth, we must have agreement on the command structure of any military engagement and insist that the role of civilians who make policy not overlap the uniformed commanders tasked with carrying it out;

Seventh, the proposed operation and our thinking about it must pass the test of simplicity—the plan of operation must be achievable in its execution.[7]

The twilight world of military engagement in a nationalistic era has been compounded by our temptation to use military force to overcome political and ideological hurdles. Too often we have tried, in our frustration, to make our armed forces a substitute for policy instead of an instrument of policy.

One astute observer has said it best: ". . . military forces . . . are designed, equipped, and trained . . . to fight and win on the battlefield. They are, in effect, a battle-ax." That puts it bluntly—but correctly. And it echoes the earlier direct distinction—lost on most American policymakers—put forward by Von Clausewitz: "Force is the means," he said. "To impose our will on the enemy is our object."

To avoid unnecessary and tragic loss of young American lives, and prevent national embarrassment and lingering Vietnam-like recrimination, it is imperative the difference between our goals—the objective—and the military force—the means—be constantly observed.

In the end, the most important guideline for military engagement must be the support of the people. Except in the necessary cases where security must attend single-stroke, rescue-type operations, secrecy is the enemy of public support. Simply put, we cannot invoke—as the Reagan Administration seeks to do—the national will in secret. Likewise, an administration which seeks overt support from the Congress for "covert" operations—as in Central America—sows the seeds of destruction of its own policies and invites widespread cynicism.

In the final analysis, the soundness of a foreign policy—including proposed instances

[5] "The American Army really is a people's army in the sense that it belongs to the American people who take jealous and proprietary interest in its involvement. When the Army is committed the American people are committed, when the American people lose their commitment it is futile to try to keep the Army committed. In the final analysis, the American Army is not so much an arm of the Executive Branch as it is an arm of the American people. The Army, therefore, cannot be committed lightly." General Fred G. Weyland, Chief of Staff, U.S. Army, July 1976. Quoted in On Strategy, A Critical Analysis of The Vietnam War, Colonel Harry G. Summers, Jr., Dell Publishing, 1984.

[6] Colonel Summers has an excellent discussion, after Clausewitz, of the dilemma between strategic defense (containment) and strategic offense (liberation), as well as between mass (NATO) and economy of force (theater of operations).

[7] Colonel Summers best outlines Clausewitz' four guidelines: objective, offensive, unity of command, and simplicity. He also shows the difficulty we face in applying them in today's world.

Careful students may note some striking parallels between the guidelines for commitment of military forces laid down here and those put forward by Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger in a speech to the National Press Club, November 28, 1984. Earlier that year—in July to be exact—I successfully fought to have principles similar to those adopted into the Democratic Party platform at its convention in San Francisco.

of military commitment—must be judged by the degree it can withstand the sunlight of public debate and engage the wisdom and common sense of the American people.

In the continuing debate over Central America, these principles serve to define a course of action. The United States has legitimate national security interests in the region. We cannot allow any country in Central America—including Nicaragua—to subvert its neighbors or become a military base for the Soviet Union. If any nation in the region were to allow itself to become a new Soviet base, we would be compelled to take any action necessary, including military force, to remove those bases.

But military force is not the most effective means for addressing Central America's current realities.

Our experience in El Salvador is instructive. There, an escalation of direct U.S. involvement would have excited and enlarged the forces of anti-American nationalism, particularly if our involvement had meant support for the oppressive, oligarchic forces of the right. Instead, as a result of pressure from Congress and the public, we conditioned aid on progress toward democracy, land reform, and human rights. We used our best advantage over the Soviets—our ability to supply economic assistance and our willingness to promote change.

But we must do more to ensure civilian control of the Salvadoran military—by making it clear to the forces of the right that our aid depends on their obedience to the government's authority, by demanding they improve civil liberties and bring to justice those guilty of past crimes, by proceeding with land reform, and by rebuilding their ravaged economy in a way that benefits the largest number of people. This approach also applies to the new civilian governments in Honduras and Guatemala, beleaguered by oppressive oligarchies and politically ambitious armies on the right and by Marxist-Leninist guerrillas on the left.

In Nicaragua, as in other cases, the direct use of U.S. military force is currently unnecessary and counterproductive; the use of force without any serious effort toward negotiations cannot help us attain our goals. We must use as leverage the three factors that are constraining the Sandinistas most: their respect for U.S. power, their knowledge that the Soviets and Cubans will give only limited help, and their inability to destroy the broad opposition by the Church, press, and citizenry within their country.

Support for the "contras" increases our leverage in none of these three areas. Militarily, even their supporters do not contend the "contras" and defeat the Sandinistas. Internationally, our support for the Contras strengthens the Sandinista's claims on Soviet-Cuban aid. And domestically, the "contras" obvious dependence on U.S. support and direction weakens their patriotic appeal, cedes the powerful weapon of nationalism to the regime, and makes it easier for the government to discredit and harass the internal opposition.

Instead of playing to the Sandinista's strength, we should be using our own. We can provide leadership and focus the pressures of our regional and European allies on Nicaragua by initiating a serious diplomatic effort. We should demand bilateral and regional agreements with Nicaragua to constrain the Sandinistas further, rally our local allies, and remove Managua's patriotic rationale for its internal controls and repression. These actions can block the establishment of foreign militay bases in Central America, and the arms race there, prevent cross-border subversion, and encourage internal negotiations among Nicaraguan political groups.

Without question, we have the means to verify any such agreements. If Nicaragua were to violate them, the United States would still have the power—and much wider domestic and regional support—for decisive action. It is dangerous to imagine the Sandinistas have good intentions; but it is naive to think they will be swept away by the "contras"; and it is ultimately foolish to claim that military force is our best means for controlling Sandinista misbehavior. Our diplomatic, political and economic strength—and that of our friends and allies—is much more effective. Indeed, a policy of military force without diplomatic skill is like the difference between a fire raging out of control and one harnessed to produce energy for a city.

For some, the idea that military force is ineffective in Central America constitutes isolationism. To the contrary, it is isolationist and reckless to ignore regional dynamics and the interests of democratic governments throughout the area who repeatedly insist that they oppose American military escalation. Those who claim we should use Central America as a battleground to resolve East-West differences are misreading reality. To paraphrase one commentator, if we were less insecure about the Soviets and more confident about the benefits of democratic capitalism, we would realize history is on our side—in Central America and throughout the world.

CONCLUSION

More skillfully managing U.S.-Soviet relations; expanding our use of international economics; strengthening our alliances; encouraging open societies—these four areas of enlightened engagement illustrate the tremendous opportunities awaiting America in this era of global change.

In every American era, one dominant feature of world power has most shaped our foreign policy. In the era of isolationism, limited military power and an ocean of distance determined we would stand largely aside from the wrangling of the old world our forebears had left behind. During Wilsonianism, the rise of our economic and military might and Europe's internal division increasingly drew us into that wrangling world. In the era of containment, that economic and military might was called upon to protect a weakened post-war world from the menace of Soviet expansionism.

In this era of dramatic change, the emerging challenge for our foreign policy is the diffusion of global economic, political, and military power. It is already defining the reality of our age. Nuclear proliferation, tensions in our alliances, global trade and communications, terrorism, and the call of the world's peoples for self-determination—we could hardly ask for more compelling evidence.

Some Americans will understand the opportunity. They will understand that America has always sailed best on open seas and on the powerful tides of freedom we share with all humankind. These Americans will welcome the waves of change and steer confidently ahead.

But some will label any movement as retreat, withdrawal, isolationism.

They couldn't be more wrong. The threat of isolationism today does not come from those of us who urge new methods in the application of American power.

The real threat of isolationism comes from those who would elevate their rejection of arms control into an ideology that destroys prospects for a more stable world.

The real threat of isolationism comes from the advocates of SDI who are undercutting the cohesion of our NATO alliance.

The real threat of isolationism comes from protectionists who would build walls around our economy and prosperity.

The real threat of isolationism comes from those who would ignore the debt crisis of Latin America and allow new democracies to perish.

The real threat of isolationism comes from those who would neglect diplomacy and thus frighten our people into believing that internationalism will always entail loss of American life.

The real threat of isolationism comes from those who would close America's heart to flagrant denials of human liberties abroad.

The real threat of isolationism comes from those who would close their eyes to nationalism and the diffusion of power as the world map evolves before our eyes.

Enlightened engagement is a rejection of isolationism; and it is a rejection of traditional, bipolar containment. It is a recognition of a fundamental new truth—that the diffusion of political, military, and economic power is an opportunity for America. Grasping this reality will vastly increase—not decrease—America's influence.

Engaging our economic partners in a search for stronger rules of finance and trade will increase America's prosperity. Engaging developing nations in their march toward self-determination will increase America's security. Engaging the world in a cooperative fight against terrorism will increase America's safety. Engaging our allies in military reform will increase our collective confidence. Engaging the Soviets in serious arms control negotiations will increase the likelihood we will reach the 21st century—and the 22nd.

Let us seize this moment. Let us navigate the currents of change and reach a new world beyond. Let America's age of opportunity begin.

COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS OF VIRGINIA LT. GOV. L. DOUGLAS WILDER AT THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, this is the time of year when commencement exercises are held and America welcomes its graduates as they assume their responsibilities in our society. It is also the time of year when families recognize fathers, the past Sunday being observed as "Father's Day."

The coincidence of these two periods prompts me today to speak of two very joyful fathers who attended recent exercises at the University of Virginia when their children were awarded degrees. The two fathers, today, friends through serving in elective offices in Virginia, once aspired to be students themselves at the University of Virginia. One, coming from a family with deep roots in Virginia, was readily accepted, and graduated in law in 1953. The other, with an equally proud family heritage with deep roots in Virginia, was summarily denied admission, for he was of the black race.

This denial, an accepted policy of the times, did not deter him from going forward to distinguish himself as a soldier fighting for freedom, a distinguished career as a Virginia State senator, and in 1985 becoming the first black in this century to be elected to statewide office in Virginia.

The two fathers returned to the university. Last year, it was my privilege to give the baccalaureate address at the University of Virginia, and for graduation this year, L. Douglas Wilder was privileged to deliver the principal address. A humble, but proud Virginian and father, the Lieutenant Governor said:

The fact that my son finished his undergraduate studies here and that my daughter is in this year's graduating class warms me with a poetic and an ironic justice.

Mr. President, on behalf of the university, the graduates, the parents, the faculty, and all others in attendance, who listened intently with a feeling of warmth and who departed with a feeling of pride, I read Lieutenant Governor Wilder's memorable speech into the RECORD of the U.S. Senate.

The speech follows:

EXCERPTS FROM REMARKS MADE AT COMMENCEMENT, UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

(By Lt. Gov. Lawrence Douglas Wilder)

Dr. O'Neil, distinguished members of the faculty and Board of Trustees, parents, friends, and especially to the graduates of the class of 1986, I am very pleased to be here today.

To say that this is just another commencement address would be false. To say that it has no effect on me would be more false. The persons who have preceded me in speaking on these occasions are of such prestige and renown that this honor, while flattering, is humbling to me.

Much has been written about my not being able to attend this University during my time. The fact that my son finished his undergraduate studies here and that my daughter is in this year's graduating class warms me with a poetic and an ironic justice.

You graduates will bear witness in some future time to the things which changed, not just during your lifetimes, but during the active period of your lives; that time when changes took place either because of or in spite of your involvement.

None of us knows what the future holds in store for us, as life is not all a summer's dream for individuals, states or nations. We are born into this world and tossed upon the sea of fate. We live on faith and we live on hope and we steel ourselves to stand the rebuffs of life; we take it as it is, as individuals with the full understanding that nations are only aggregations of individuals.

We all love this country, but more importantly we love the freedom that has come from new ideas, from a constitution made by rebels and protected by rebels, from a constitution born in strife and tempest and rebellion. We love it because of what it has been, materially and spiritually.

The radical of today is the conservative of tomorrow. Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, George Mason, Patrick Henry, to name a few, brought forth a reform that gave life and meaning to this great country as we know it today. The fruits of their lives are plain for all to see; while time shall last, men and women, sons and daughters of all of America's people, will live by the light of freedom and be inspired by the hope of liberty.

Thoreau expressed it best, "The Universe constantly and obediently answers to our conceptions; whether we travel fast or slow, the track is laid for us. Let us spend our lives in conceiving then. The poet or the artist, never yet had so fair and noble a design but (that) some of his posterity at least could accomplish it."

So today, in this setting that has inspired so many for so long, you should resolve to meet the challenges. It is fitting to turn our focus to the paramount challenge facing your generation.

What with the spiralling health-care costs, the growing threats to our social security system, plus competing forces, your generation will be the first to feel the full brunt of supporting three generations of family.

Indeed, the premier challenge of America's twenty-first century is to define and decide how to accommodate the older generation and the rising generation with striking the proper balance as you yourselves become older—and take the leadership positions.

The challenge of your parent's parents was that they had to adapt to a country that was preoccupied with appealing to youth, and providing them with the most possibilities * * * but they happily did it by sacrificing for their children and their country.

The paradox is that technology, scientific, and medical advancement have made our life cycles and expectancies longer, thank God, so that our parents and relatives, though sometimes enfeebled of mind and of body, will be longer with us, directly or at some places entrusted with their care. Some will have the means but too many will not.

In addition to providing for your children things which you may not have enjoyed and at least that which you did enjoy, you must sustain yourselves and those persons who might not otherwise be able to care for themselves.

Your energies must be directed toward finding ways to collectively address this new dilemma and to solve it. Therefore it is necessary that we not sap our strengths with blind indifference to the plight of our fellows, nor content ourselves with selfish mediocrity.

This country of ours, conceived as it were and struggling to achieve an existence is tested year after year, month after month, day after day, to live out its creed, to meet, rather than to deny its problems, and to say to that talisman of destiny that we will persist until we succeed.

Each period in history presents its own set of challenges and we must be prepared to meet them. Those who have lived have not loved freedom more; in their span they gave to a world which knew freedom not, and it is ours to continue making contributions in new areas and challenging new issues.

We have come to see that this country's insistence on right can make a change. It did so in the archipelagoes of the Philippines, it did so with the ravaged despotism in Haiti, * * * and it will and must do so, in the blood-drenched townships of South Africa.

Not one of you has come into this world with any real advantage over any other, absent impaired health, and not one of you has entered into this world with any real disadvantage, under the same circumstances. Yes, there will be those who would be temporarily advantaged by things of a material nature which would make you believe that you can afford the luxury of not needing to know the precise person that you are and to likewise fail to engage in making the commitment to doing your part in making life meaningful.

And there, likewise, are those of you who would feel this station in life or accident of birth has so conditioned your life as to make it of no meaning, having no purpose and that it renders you unable to make any contributions because you have been disfavored. I'm not suggesting that this is a perfect world as it is not, nor will it ever be; but I've come to know that opportunities do exist, not necessarily those which one sees as opportunities at the time, but those opportunities must be taken advantage of to move ahead, as painstakingly slow on occasions as that might be, but always reaching up and out and looking to climb further up the ladder.

Changes have come; we see women, not only in the work force, but occupying positions of influence at every conceivable level of government and society. That didn't just come about. Some people believed it should and worked to bring it about—and it did.

We've seen blacks rise from what was a real permanent underclass, to compete at every level, if given the opportunity so to do, and to prove wrong those who felt they were humanly unable to perform at those levels. But this did not just come about. Some people had to believe it so and fought for it to be * * * and it did.

We've seen the creation of a middle America, sometimes comfortably forgetting how it came to be and sometimes saying to you and to me that they just came about.

Family ties are what made and make this country great. Any lessening of these bonds must be resisted and rather strengthened.

The trilogy of the generations of which I speak, your parents, yours, and your children, flow inevitably from the progress of life itself. The cynics, lacking vision, will use expediency to play one generation off against the other.

We might now better be able to understand that which was prophetically proclaimed in Ecclesiates: "Generations come and they go, and the Earth abideth forever * * * but the sun also rises."

We know that there is no new thing under the sun, and that regardless of what we as mortals do, the earth will be here.

Nature and history have slowly abided, while mankind's progress enabled the trilogy of generations to co-exist. Of all the previous times, yours is the opportunity to make that contribution that history will record as the time when love and respect for those who have given, and done so abundantly, has been not only remembered and revered, but permanently enshrined in the archives of achievers.

I congratulate you and yours for standing as anchors between the high possibilities of youth and the wisdom of the ages.

THE 1986 CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a participant in the 1986 Congressional Call to Conscience. This program is designed to focus our attention on human rights violations against Soviet Jews.

In the U.S.S.R., Jews experience many hardships. They are persecuted and looked down upon because of their religion and culture. Soviet Jews are refused the basic privileges given to the dominant Soviet ethnic groups and are subjected to anti-Semitic publications and propaganda.

Jews have been harassed for many years by Soviet authorities; but since 1984, anti-Jewish brutality and persecution have intensified significantly. Jewish cultural activities and Hebrew teaching are considered antistate actions. False arrests of Soviet Jews on concocted charges occur quite frequently.

Filing an application to leave the Soviet Union makes life tougher for Soviet Jews. This simple act usually leads to even greater repression by Soviet authorities. Before one can apply to leave the Soviet Union, one must receive an invitation from a first-degree relative who lives in Israel. After this is completed, one must submit massive supporting documentation. Even if the applicant's family members themselves are not applying, letters are required from family members stating they do not object to the applicant's departure. Permission from military authorities is also required.

Most Soviet Jews who apply to leave their country lose their jobs. Professionals are often demoted and given nonprofessional work. Many of these people are subjected to surveillance by the KGB, conscription into the Soviet Army, arrest and imprisonment, expulsion from schools, and physical abuse.

The Soviet authorities frequently use the excuse of "considerations of state" in order to refuse Jews their right to leave the U.S.S.R. "Considerations of state" can preclude from emigration any healthy male over the age of 18, former military personnel who served at least 1 year, and employees who work for a "secret" industrial business or scientific institution. Many Soviet Jews have been denied emigration because the term "consideration of state" was applied to one of their relatives.

One such example is that of Vsevolod Berger, a physician specializing in hygiene and epidemiology, and his wife, Valeria, a doctor also. Vsevolod applied for a visa in 1977. His visa was refused that same year and again in 1979. The reason for the denial was that Vsevolod's father, a staunch Communist Party member and a former colonel in the Soviet Army, would not give his consent. The Bergers have no relatives in Israel, but Valeria has a brother living in Munster, IN.

Vsevolod lost his professional position after his first visa application. He was no longer able to get any other work as a doctor, so he became a guard at the same hospital where he had formerly worked as a physician.

After the Bergers' emigration denial in 1979, Vsevolod lost his position as a guard. The reason given for refusal was an "incompatible diploma." He was considered too highly qualified to do unskilled work, but whenever he attempted to obtain work in his own profession, he was told there was none in his specialty.

Vsevolod is now working part time in a sports clinic where he gives routine medical examinations to young swimmers. Valeria works in an outpatient department of a hospital.

We must let the Soviet Government know that we will not tolerate these human rights violations. There are thousands of Soviet Jews who remain in the Soviet Union, hoping and praying that their freedom day will come. We must insist that the Soviet Union permit religious freedom to be exercised by its citizens and that emigration be granted to those desiring to move to other countries.

FRANK BELLOTTI AND THE ENDURING VALUES OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I would like to share with my colleagues an inspiring recent address delivered by one of Massachusetts' all-time great public servants, Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti.

Attorney General Bellotti is leaving office at the end of 1986 after 12 years of outstanding public service. Speaking at the Democratic State convention in Springfield last month, he addressed the past and future of the Democratic Party. In bidding farewell to the convention, he sounded an eloquent call for a return to the basic values of the Democratic Party. "What endures," he said, "is the general commitment to all of our people, to their happiness and to their dignity. The purity of this commitment is the very heart of the Democratic Party."

The address is filled with eloquent thoughts from a man who himself has demonstrated unwavering commitment and unparalleled compassion in all his years of public service. Massachusetts has been generously blessed by the vision and the service of Frank Bellotti. We will miss him in the years to come and in the battles that lie ahead.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of Attorney General Bellotti's address may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL FRANCIS X. BELLOTTI AT THE MASSACHUSETTS DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION, SPRINGFIELD CIVIC CENTER, FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1986

It has been a long, hard road, with many turns, that has brought me to this time and place—to stand before you tonight with the singular honor of representing the Democratic Party.

I speak to you as someone who has truly grown up with the Democratic Party—not just because I have been in Democratic Party politics for three decades, but much more important, because growing up poor, it was my support, my source of opportunity, my inspiration.

And as we begin this convention, I can feel the same strength and vitality that made the Democratic Party the powerful force for social change that it was in those early, difficult years.

In the 20's and 30's, there were no pensions, no medical benefits, no job benefits, no child care, no elderly programs. We were a generation that grew up in a depression, trying to survive in a world where we always seemed to be on the outside.

We did not turn on the radio at night and hear editorials about the "quality of life". We did not open newspapers in the morning and read feature stories about "lifestyles". In those "good old days", we talked about, thought about and planned for—survival.

My father was gassed in the First World War and stayed in a Veteran's Hospital until I was 16, when he died. My mother supported our family on the unequal pay that women earned—so I know what discrimination is and I know that the ERA is not a feminist issue—it is a survival issue—I also know that I could not have lived—or ever have become educated without what we call social or democratic legislation.

The values we learned then were the values of human dignity and personal sacrifice. We learned that government had to protect the worker, the young, the elderly—the people.

It was during this time that both institutions and individuals had a natural alliance with a strong central government, a government that was perceived as necessary to coordinate the economic and social programs that could put our world back together again.

It was a time when liberal values and liberal assumptions went virtually unchallenged.

And then it all changed. Our party and our programs were so successful, our precepts so unassailable, that we did not see the urgency of new problems on the horizon. We had remembered all of the answers, but we had forgotten the questions.

For a while, we stopped talking to all of the people. We talked to narrow constituencies and we addressed narrow problems. We still cared, but it didn't show.

The warmth and humanity of personal leadership, with all of its frailties, was submerged. We developed a whole class of technocrats, managers and statisticians to give us supporting data for our assumptions, to help us fine tune our solutions. We formed committees and blue ribbon commissions to make our decisions.

And something very important was lost along the way. Many of our political leaders gave away their power to make the decisions and lost their will to fight for the individual.

When political leaders stopped asking the important questions and began hiring managers to give them the right answers, they became farther and farther removed from the human aspects of decision making. Managers are not chosen for their strength of character or the integrity of their personal opinions. They are asked to put aside such human elements and to rely upon "professionalism" and "expertise".

When the manager tells the politician that schools must be closed or factories shut down, the human aspect of those decisions—the price that must be paid by the children, the workers and the families—is just another variable in the equation—another intellectual problem that must be addressed in the managerial scheme and not the overriding consideration. And there is lost the fundamental purpose of all government—to take care of its people.

We, as Democratic leaders, have always seen things differently. To us, Government is not a business with a profit and loss bottom line. To us, fiscal responsibility means doing as economically as possible the things that people need to have done but cannot do themselves.

As far back as 1764, James Otis said: "The end of government being the good of mankind points out its great duties: It is above all things, to provide for the security, the quiet, the happy enjoyment of life, liberty and property * * *."

That hasn't changed and never will.

Yes, we need technical experts in a complex technological world—they play an important role. But clearly, the most important force for change must come—has to come—from the will, the drive, the spirit of our great political leaders.

And that brings us to this precise moment in time. Maybe, without even becoming aware of it, we have begun to understand this, we have begun to awaken.

In our State, particularly, we are in the midst of a renaissance. These have become good times—they will remain good times if we only know what to do with them.

So I am especially proud and honored to be able to address this convention—my birthplace—and my party—at a time when our commonwealth is stronger economically and in almost every other way than any State in the Nation. When, by virtue of the quality of its democratic leaders, it has an unparalleled opportunity to be a driving force as the national Democratic Party boldly challenges the future.

Our State and our party can be justifiably proud of their ability to produce leaders of national stature—throughout history and to this very moment.

And as we go forward from here, it is not individual issues that should consume our thoughts—they must be addressed—but they pass and new issues constantly appear. What endures is the general commitment to all of our people, to their happiness and to their dignity. The purity of this commitment is the very heart of the Democratic Party.

It is here and in strong political leadership that our hope for the future lies.

For only in a leadership vacuum would we be seeing judges and courts asked to make moral and political decisions—decisions they are not equipped to make. A process that makes people lose faith in their government. Because any social change that does not involve the people themselves in the political process is, at best, illusory and at worst, unjust.

Today, for the first time in many years, we in the Democratic Party are asking questions instead of just proposing answers. We are asking where we have been, where we are and where we want to go.

I hope we have learned that political leadership does not derive from a negotiated agenda, nor from impersonal managerial strategies, nor from articulating the perceived public will.

The political leaders we seek to carry on the tradition of the Democratic Party will not be just managers, they will not be just idealogues, they will not be just consensus takers, they will not be just power brokers.

They will be the men and women who will refuse to routinely sacrifice their judgment to public opinion, who will not be afraid to take political risks—including the risk of losing political power. Because it is not power that corrupts, it is the fear of losing power.

Above all, our political leaders of the future must be men and women who care about people, who believe that they each have a special kind of dignity. They must believe in the enduring values of the Democratic Party, values that will outlast time and temporal troubles, the values that have made it the magnificent instrument of social change that it is, the party of my childhood—and of my future.

Leaders who will understand and accept that ours is a party of turbulence and dissent—of excitement and passion—the powerful and driving force that has brought us here tonight, that is our life—and our future—that has given us the opportunity to be anything in the world that we want to be.

As you have taken me from defeat after defeat and given me the opportunity for 12 wonderful years to do what I most wanted in all this world.

In a short while, I will be leaving office—but tonight I want you to know how grateful I am to you and to the people of my state. With all of the hard times, I would not have missed it—or you, for the world.

There will, I am sure, be better attorneys general than I, but there will never be one who cares more about you than I do.

Thank you—for everything.

RECEPTION FOR AFGHAN RESISTANCE ALLIANCE LEADERSHIP

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, yesterday Senator HUMPHREY and I had the honor of hosting a coffee reception in my office for the top leadership of the Afghan Resistance Alliance, the freedom fighters of Afghanistan, who are visiting Washington and earlier met with the President.

Our guests included Burhanuddin Rabbani, the spokesman for the alliance; Sebqatullah Mojadedi; Ahmad Gailani; and Mohammed Nabi Mohammedi.

MANY SENATORS EXPRESS SUPPORT

I am pleased that a large number of Senators were able to come by to meet these Afghan patriots and to express to them the strong support they have in the Senate and in the country for their efforts to restore the independence of Afghanistan. Among the Senators who did come by were: Senators ABDNOR, ARMSTRONG, BOSCHWITZ, CHAFEE, COCHRAN, COHEN, D'AMATO, DOMENICI, DURENBERGER, EAST, HAWKINS, HECHT, LAXALT, MATTINGLY, PRESSLER, QUAYLE, RUDMAN, SIMPSON, STAFFORD, and WALLOP. If I've missed anyone, and we had such a large number, I may have, my apologies.

But the message of that large turnout was clear—the Senate supports the struggle of the Afghan freedom fighters and is prepared to lend all appropriate assistance to help them defend themselves and their country from Soviet aggression.

TRAGEDY OF AFGHANISTAN CONTINUES

As we are all aware, the bloodshed continues unabated in Afghanistan today. Millions have been killed, wounded, exiled, and uprooted in the Soviet Union's attempt to subjugate an entire nation. The United Nations' latest report on human rights in Afghanistan documents in detail the systematic brutality which characterized the conflict in 1985. More and more, the word "genocide" seems to apply to this appalling tragedy.

Despite the overwhelming odds facing the Afghan people, they have withstood this Soviet onslaught with courage, dedication, and a dignity which is evident in each member of the delegation we hosted yesterday. The Afghans want only to be left alone to live their traditional lives. But they need our help in this effort. Only with the full support of the United States can Afghanistan again rejoin the community of free nations.

MOBILIZING SUPPORT

This support must be mobilized in every area and every forum. The President said this week that "the diversity of the alliance—its roots in the faith and traditions of Afghanistan—shows that the alliance is the true representative of the Afghan people." A resolution drafted by Senator HUMPHREY, which I cosponsored and which was passed 98–0 earlier this week, sends a similar message of support.

The resolution also indicates our approval and encouragement of a process which can only help the Afghan cause, that is, the growing unity between resistance leaders and their forces in the field. Once a disparate group of commanders and political notables whose only common goal was the ouster of Soviet forces from Afghanistan, the resistance is now much more unified in its approach to the war. This stems from a realization that fierce fighting is not the only tool available in the war against the Soviets.

On the contrary, world public opinion can be just as effective in pressuring the Kremlin to end its senseless devastation of Afghanistan. The resolution and the other expressions of support the Afghan leaders received this week are elements in that campaign of pressure.

As the Afghan leaders depart our country, I hope they will take with them some encouragement from the welcome they have received and from the pledge of President Reagan to them as they departed the White House: "your goal is our goal: the freedom of Afghanistan. We will not let you down."

SENATOR HUMPHREY'S KEY ROLE

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me say one brief word about Senator HUMPHREY. He has been the heart and soul of the Senate effort to support these deserving freedom fighters. Without his leadership, we would not be providing the kind of effective support which the Congress has mandated in recent years. It was obvious that the resistance alliance leadership was aware of and deeply appreciative of Senator HUMPHREY's pivotal role on this issue, and I want to acknowledge it, too. He has my admiration, and the respect of all Americans, for his remarkable leadership on this matter.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the unfinished business.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3838) to reform the Internal Revenue laws of the United States.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1030

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2139

(Purpose: To retain the credit for alcohol used as a fuel and to advance the effective date of the taxation of certain foreign governments conducting commercial activity)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH] proposes an amendment numbered 2139.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we dispense with reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1725, beginning with line 4, strike out all through page 1727, line 8.

On page 1903, lines 5 and 6, strike "December 31, 1986" and insert "November 1, 1986".

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I will keep my remarks brief as I do not believe the amendment is controversial. The purpose of the amendment I am offering is to continue the current practice of encouraging the use of alcohols or ethanol that are made from farm grains as an additive in the production of fuels. Under current law, producers of fuel with at least 13 percent ethanol can either take a 6-cents-per-gallon exemption from the Federal excise tax on gasoline or an income tax credit of 60 cents per gallon of ethanol. Producers of fuels with less than 10 percent ethanol can only use the income tax credit.

The Senate bill inadvertently, I believe, repealed the tax credit while continuing the excise tax exemption. The Roth amendment would resolve the full alcohol provision to current law, which provides both the excise tax exemption and the tax credit, which would continue until December 31, 1992, at which time both would expire.

Mr. President, this amendment is negligible in cost. It would cost less than $5 million. However, to make the amendment revenue neutral, we propose to move up the effective date of a new provision in the Senate bill to tax the investment income of foreign governments and organizations. Under current law, income from investments is exempt from tax insofar as foreign governments and organizations are concerned. However, private foreign corporations are taxed on their investment income. The foreign government exemption exists even if the government controls a U.S. corporation and receives income from it.

Mr. President, the Senate bill essentially removes the exemption for interest and dividends where the foreign government controls the U.S. corporation. The effective date is January 1, 1987, and my amendment would move the effective date to November 1, 1986.

Mr. President, let me reemphasize that this is an agriculture program providing both essential and major new markets for surplus U.S. feedgrains. It cuts storage costs for surplus grains as it disposes of the growing and unprecedented buildup of surplus stocks that were depressing commodity prices.

The ethanol industry disposed of 250 million bushels of grain last year, and demand could soon exceed exports to Eastern and Western Europe as well as the Soviet Union. In addition, I think it is important to point out it has substantial value as a replacement for lead, benzene, and other gasoline additives that are environmentally threatening. Mr. President, everybody wins with this amendment: the consumer, the farmer, and the administration. I hope that the managers of the bill will accept this amendment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, this amendment retains current law for the blender fuel credit. At a time of severe crisis in the agricultural community, we should be helping to support ideas that find alternative use for agricultural products.

Currently, the credit allows a choice between 6 cents per gallon of a blended gasoline that contains 10 percent ethanol or 60 cents per gallon of ethanol. This choice is important. Under the Senate bill the 60-cent blender credit is eliminated. Elimination of the blender credit leaves no choice except to blend 10-percent ethanol with gasoline. There are other ways to blend ethanol at less than 10 percent but the credit would be denied under the Senate bill.

The Simplot Co., an Idaho agricultural products producer, has built two plants for the production of ethanol relying on the current law which provides the blender credit through 1992. Repeal 6 years early is unfair to companies that made investments in good faith based on current law.

The 1981 tax bill that created the credit produced the desired effect. Operations that were set up to take advantage of the credit supply the Nation with an alternative energy source and are helping alleviate the surplus of grain on the market. The Simplot Co. has established two plants to produce ethanol. The current average capacity is 6 million gallons of ethanol per year per plant.

The Simplot Co. has made substantial investments in research and is currently experimenting with waxy barley. The credit is responsible for this kind of product development—the development is necessary for our agricultural community to compete with foreign producers.

Our amendment addresses this problem and keeps faith with American producers. Again, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, this was a matter that the Senator from Delaware very generously withheld offering in the committee when we were doing the markup. It is a matter of relatively slight expense and I think with merit, and he has paid for it. The amendment is acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any further debate? If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2139) was agreed to.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee for his cooperation.

Mr. PACKWOOD. The Senator is happy to do it.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1040

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2140

(Purpose: To allow a deduction for expenses necessary to enable a handicapped individual to work, and for other purposes)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, Senator LONG, Senator DURENBERGER, Senator METZENBAUM, and Senator CHAFEE, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for himself, Mr. LONG, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. DURENBERGER, and Mr. CHAFEE, proposes an amendment numbered 2140.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 1411, line 14, strike "and".

On page 1411, line 15, strike the period and insert ", and".

On page 1411, between lines 15 and 16, insert:

"(4) any deduction for any impairment-related work expenses.

On page 1412, line 12, strike the end quotation marks.

On page 1412, between lines 10 and 11, insert:

"(c) IMPAIRMENT-RELATED WORK EXPENSES.—For purposes of this section, the term 'impairment-related work expenses' means expenses—

"(1) of a handicapped individual (as defined in section 190(a)(3)) for attendant care services at the individual's place of employment and other expenses in connection with such place of employment which are necessary for such individual to be able to work, and

"(2) with respect to which a deduction is allowable under section 162 (determined without regard to this section)."

On page 2610, between lines 17 and 18, add the following new paragraph:

(4) Section 7702(e)(2) is amended—

(A) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (A),

(B) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (B), and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and "and", and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) for purposes of the cash value accumulation test, the death benefit increases may be taken into account if the contract—

"(i) has an initial death benefit of $5,000 or less,

"(ii) provides for a fixed predetermined annual increase not to exceed 10 percent of the initial death benefit or 8 percent of the death benefit at the end of the preceding year, and

"(iii) was purchased to cover payment of burial expenses or in connection with prearranged funeral expenses.

For purposes of subparagraph (C), the initial death benefit of a contract shall be determined by treating all contracts issued to the same contract owner as 1 contract."

On page 1923, after line 21, insert:

SEC. 1003. DENIAL OF DEDUCTION FOR INTEREST ON LOANS FROM CERTAIN LIFE INSURANCE CONTRACTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 264(a) (relating to disallowance of deduction for certain amounts paid in connection with insurance contracts) is amended by adding after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) Any interest paid or accrued on any indebtedness with respect to 1 or more life insurance policies owned by the taxpayer covering the life of any individual who is—

"(A) an officer or employee of, or

"(B) any person financially interested in, any trade or business carried on by the taxpayer to the extent that the aggregate amount of such indebtedness exceeds $50,000."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 264(a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Paragraph (4) shall apply with respect to contracts purchased after June 20, 1986."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to contracts purchased after June 20, 1986, in taxable years ending after such date.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me just summarize this amendment, because I think it is one that will not be objected to. It is revenue neutral. There is a $100 million revenue loss over 5 years associated with the first two parts of the amendment, and a $100 million gain from the last part.

My part of the amendment—and Senator LONG can explain his part—restores the employee business expense itemized deduction for additional business expenses incurred at the workplace by severely handicapped individuals.

Let me indicate that this matter came to my attention when I received a letter from a severely handicapped lawyer, a quadraplegic who cannot do anything at work without an attendant, and the deductions for those expenses were going to be disallowed.

So we have been working with the chairman, with Senator LONG, and with others. I do not know of any problem with the amendment. But let me just simply explain it.

It does restore a small part of the itemized deduction for employee business expenses. It will allow a severely handicapped employee to deduct the cost of attendant care services and other expenses which are necessary to enable the employee to work at his or her workplace.

I believe the Finance Committee's repeal of most employee business expense deductions can be justified. The itemized deduction requires substantial recordkeeping for what are often relatively small expenditures. Taxpayers frequently make errors of law in determining what types of expenditures are properly allowable as employee business deductions and these errors result in substantial problems for the IRS.

In most cases, if these small expenditures are really justifiable as business expenses, the employer will recognize that fact and pay for them. The employer, of course, would then take a business deduction.

However, we failed to take into account the major expenses for severely handicapped individuals who are willing and able to work if they can obtain special assistance. Often these expenses are so large, such as the cost of attendant care, for example, that, absent the deduction, a handicapped individual might be unable to afford to take a job that otherwise would be possible.

Of course, an employer might be willing to adjust the employee's compensation and pay for the additional costs himself and then deduct these costs, but many employees may be reluctant to do so since it might be simpler to hire someone else.

This matter, as I have indicated, was called to my attention—it had not occurred to me—when I received a letter from a very outstanding lawyer, Vivian Berzinski, who is a lawyer here in town. I will not read the whole letter, but just an excerpt can describe the situation better than I can.

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: The tax reform plan approved by the Senate Finance Committee would repeal the deduction for miscellaneous itemized deductions, including employee business expenses. This would have a devastating and, I am sure, unintended impact on many handicapped persons, including me, who are presently engaged in gainful careers.

In order to pursue their careers, handicapped persons must often incur extraordinary expenses for human services and/or special equipment. For example, blind people may employ readers to assist them. Deaf people may employ interpreters. People with various types of paralysis or other physical impairment may use computers or other expensive equipment to help them do their jobs. These expenses are integrally related to the taxable salaries earned by a handicapped individual.

Because I am not familiar with specific financial information on anyone else, I will use my situation as an example. I am a quadraplegic tax attorney who cannot function without incurring extraordinary employment-related expenses—approximately $20,000 annually. Most of this consists of the salary of an assistant who stays with me throughout my work day taking notes, writing papers I dictate, and turning pages in books and documents, etc. (These employment expenses are wholly separate from the extraordinary personal expenses I incur in order to maintain my household which includes my three young children.)

In my opinion, legislation which would tax my salary without allowing deduction of the cost of an assistant would be unnecessarily unfair and harsh. Moreover, the bill would create a great tax difference between people similarly situated, because handicapped people who are self-employed could apparently deduct these types of expenses above the line.

Accordingly, I urge you to retain the itemized deduction for employment-related expenses for physically or mentally handicapped individuals. This is at least as equitable as the deductions for travel, transportation, and outside sales persons' expenses which would be permissible.

I recognize that this is a rather comprehensive tax package in which employee business expenses are but a small part. Nevertheless, I believe this is an important issue because of the potential discouragement of the efforts of handicapped persons to overcome their difficulties.

Mr. President, I think this is a small but very desirable change to the Finance Committee bill. If we are going to allow any itemized deductions, it seems to me that this should be very high on the list.

The amendment also includes a technical change in the Internal Revenue Code's definition of life insurance contracts to allow certain small burial policies to qualify as life insurance contracts for tax purposes. Congress decided to include a definition of life insurance contracts in the Internal Revenue Code to prevent taxpayers from using life insurance contracts as tax shelters rather than as protection against the economic costs associated with the death of the insured. I can assure my colleagues that this change, suggested by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], is entirely consistent with that Congressional intent.

The staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that this amendment would reduce revenues by $100 million over 5 years. To assure that the provision will be revenue neutral, the amendment also more nearly conforms the treatment of interest paid on loans from life insurance policies purchased by individuals and by businesses.

Under the committee bill, no interest paid on loans on a life insurance contract purchased by an individual will be deductible after a 4-year phaseout period. That is because interest paid on these loans is treated as consumer interest and that itemized deduction is phased out.

However, if an employer purchases a life insurance policy for an employee and then borrows on the cash value, the interest paid on the loan will be deductible.

This amendment modifies the treatment of interest paid on loans related to life insurance contracts purchased by businesses covering the lives of their employees. It would limit the employer's interest deduction to interest on life insurance related to loans aggregating no more than $50,000 per employee.

Unlike the rule for life insurance policy loans taken out by individuals, the interest paid deduction for these loans will not be phased out, only capped at $50,000 of indebtedness. This will allow small businesses to use loans on life insurance policies for their employees as a source of short-term capital when necessary. But it will not allow these loans to be an unlimited tax shelter as under present law. Of course, businesses could borrow more than $50,000 per employee if necessary. This amendment only affects the amount of interest paid that could be deducted.

I might add that, when a loan is taken out on a life insurance policy, it reduces the death benefit by the amount of the borrowing. Therefore, if the entire cash value of a policy is borrowed, much of the death benefit promised to an employee is illusory. The employee is merely depending upon the credit of his employer to the extent of the indebtedness. I might point out that, unlike most commercial loans, there is no set repayment period for these loans. The loan may remain outstanding until the employee's death many years in the future. The employer never has any obligation to repay the loan.

If we really care about encouraging employers to provide death benefits to employees, we should enact this rule on its own merit.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will agree that this is a meritorious improvement on the committee bill.

SUMMARY OF AMENDMENT

The following is a summary of the amendment:

Restores employee business expense itemized deduction for additional business expenses incurred at the workplace by severely handicapped individuals.

Allows certain small burial policies to qualify as life insurance contracts for tax purposes.

Limits an employer's interest paid deduction for interest on amounts the employer borrows against life insurance policies the employer has purchased on the lives of his employees. The limit would be interest paid on no more than $50,000 of indebtedness per employee.

The amendment is revenue neutral. There is a $100 million revenue loss over 5 years associated with the first two parts of the amendment and a $100 million gain from last part.

It would seem to me that this is an area that I think is totally justified. The amendment has been cleared.

I thank Vivian Berzinski for calling this to my attention. I know through her efforts not only would she benefit but many other severely handicapped persons would benefit.

I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I appreciate the distinguished majority leader permitting me to piggyback on his amendment to find a way to offset the small revenue loss of the one I have to offer. His had enough excess financing in it to make it possible for mine to be considered as part of his.

Mr. President, this has to do with what we fear would have been an unintended error made in the 1984 act.

In the 1984 Tax Act, Congress went to great lengths to distinguish between life insurance policies and pure investment vehicles. It is possible however, that the 1984 act has the unintended effect of disqualifying small life insurance policies bought to pay burial and funeral expenses.

What we are speaking of here are policies that are generally sold to people age 55 to 60 who are preparing for retirement.

They want to insure that their surviving spouse or their children will not be saddled with the expense of providing them with a funeral and a final resting place.

This provision will basically give purchasers of the policies inflation protection. If you buy a $3,000 policy today, you know that whenever you die you will have the same kind of burial $3,000 would buy today.

To prevent use of these policies as investment vehicles, this amendment is limited to policies which may be used to pay for burial and funeral expenses, which have a face value of $5,000 or less, and where there is a limitation on the amount the policy can grow.

Revenue loss is less than $10 million. However, as packaged in the amendment with Senator DOLE, there is no overall revenue loss from the entire amendment.

The growth limitation on the policy is no more than 10 percent of the face value of the policy or no more than 8 percent of the accumulated value in the previous year.

Mr. President, the Treasury is aware of this amendment. So far, I am not aware of an objection. If Treasury should find some problem with it, we would hope to take care of that problem in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment (No. 2140) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman, Senator PACKWOOD, and staff, and Senator LONG and others, who worked on this amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I also thank Senator DOLE and the chairman, Mr. PACKWOOD, for the consideration of this measure, and I also express my admiration for the way they are handling this legislation.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDREWS). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2141

(Purpose: To exempt income from reindeer held in trust from Federal taxation)

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] proposes an amendment numbered 2141.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2454, on line 7, insert the following new section:

SEC. 1709. AMENDMENT TO THE REINDEER INDUSTRY ACT OF 1937.

(a) TAX EXEMPTION FOR REINDEER-RELATED INCOME.—Before the period at the end of the first sentence of section 8 of the Act of September 1, 1937, insert the following: ": Provided, That during the period of the trust, income derived directly from the sale of reindeer and reindeer products as provided in this Act shall be exempt from Federal income taxation".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall take effect as if originally included in the provision of the Act of September 1, 1937, to which such amendment relates.

On page 1903, between lines 6 and 7 add the following:

"(d) Notwithstanding the above provisions the amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after July 1, 1986."

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the Reindeer Industry Act of 1937 codified in volume 25 of the United States Code, section 300, was enacted to resolve an economic conflict that existed in our State and certain range disputes that were involved in these conflicts between Alaskan Natives and nonnatives that had arisen due to nonnative involvement in the reindeer industry prior to 1937.

Congress intended to preserve at that time the "native character" of this industry and provided Alaskan Natives a means of self support by restricting reindeer ownership in Alaska to Natives.

The act also provided certain Government aid and authorized appropriations to purchase all reindeer and improvements at that time owned by nonnatives.

The objectives of the act were accomplished by granting the Secretary of Interior authority to transfer beneficial ownership of all reindeer herds to Natives in trust subject to numerous restrictions including regulating reindeer grazing, controlling roundups, handling, marking, and butchering of reindeer. The regulations are now codified by the Code of Federal Regulations found in section 4300.

Under the Reindeer Act, reindeer that remain in trust are legally owned by the Federal Government. It is because of the trust status and the intendant restrictions that the Reindeer Act was interpreted from its inception as exempting from federal taxation reindeer-related income. Both the Department of Interior and the Internal Revenue Service historically so interpreted the act.

Reindeer-related income from reindeer held in trust should be treated no differently from income from Indian-alloted lands acquired under the General Allotment Act of 1887, or those lands that are held pursuant to the Indian Recovery Act of 1934.

We felt that the Supreme Court had implied this tax exemption based upon its interpretation of the General Allotment Act. And there were specific restrictions contained in the Code of Federal Regulations that applied to reindeer herders.

Because of a recent and we believe erroneous interpretation of the policy by the Seattle office of the Internal Revenue Service this Native reindeer-related income held in trust is now considered subject to taxation. That was brought about by a decision of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit that was decided on December 12, 1984.

I quote from that opinion which is found in volume 749 of the second volume of Federal Reports, on page 567.

No clear expression of intent to exempt appears in the Reindeer Act.

In that case, those representing the Native reindeer herders, had argued that the act as a whole indicated that Congress intended this exemption. The Court found that it could not apply the exemption "absent expressed exemptive language."

The amendment I have offered now provides that exemptive language, and will carry out what we feel to be the original intent of the law. This is, in my judgment, a technical correction to this bill. It is couched as required by the Court's opinion in terms of an amendment to the original 1937 act. As long as these reindeer herds are in trust and literally owned by the Federal Government, we feel that the tax should be exempt.

Let me explain a little about these herds since some people ask questions about this. There are 13 reindeer herds on the Seward Peninsula in Alaska, and there are five in other areas. On Atka Island, Umnak Island, Nunivak Island, Hagemeister Island, and on St. Lawrence Island.

In 1985, the total number of reindeer butchered was 1,850, and the gross sales from all herding operations was $705,000. There is no real record of the expenses involved. The expenses involved the herders. There is usually one head person, a herder, involved in each one of these herds. It is usually an individual or small corporation or as in the case in question a father-son partnership who operate the herd.

I might add parenthetically, Mr. President, there are some herders now who are operating privately with animals that have been purchased. They are Native herders, but they are not handling Eskimo reindeer that are held in trust under the Reindeer Act. They are operating privately, and this amendment would not apply to them. It applies to those that are herding animals owned by the United States that are held in trust for the Alaska Natives. It is intended to apply to those herders who are managing "restricted property" as defined in Indian law.

As I said, there was $705,000 in the annual income in 1985 from 1,850 animals that were taken, and from the meat and products that were sold.

I am informed that two herders had sales of over $150,000. There were three from $65,000 to $100,000, and five from $20,000 to $35,000. The difficulty is that we have been working trying to figure out how to deal with this from the point of view of income; that is, revenue loss. This is the matter I mentioned before, and the indication from the committee was that this was an amendment that would lose $10 million, $5 million retroactively and $5 million prospectively over the period of this bill.

I seriously question that estimate. As I indicated, the gross sales were $705,000 a year for all reindeer herded by these people. We are talking about a very few people. But it is a very meaningful portion of the occupation of the people who live in the great northwest area of my State, primarily Eskimo people and some Aleut people on the islands. I think it is a meaningful amendment.

In order to make it revenue neutral for the purposes of this act, we propose to amend the same section that Senator ROTH amended previously and move that effective date back to July 1, 1986 which I am informed will provide revenue in excess of $10 million.

I think it is a de minimis kind of revenue loss if it was actually totally examined. It is brought upon us now, frankly, because this is the first tax bill to deal with income taxes that we have had since the 1984 decision. It requires an amendment according to the Court's opinion in order to carry out the original intent of Congress that so long as these reindeer remain in trust, herded, operated, and the herds controlled by the individuals who are acting in behalf of the United States under this concept, their incomes should be exempt from the total amount of revenue dedicated to the maintenance of the herd.

I would be pleased to answer any questions anyone might have concerning the amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I understand that the argument of the distinguished Senator is that the reindeer are held in trust and that the Federal Government forced the native people to incorporate. If they were not incorporated, there would be no case. So this is a case of why there should be a tax. Is that basically the case?

Mr. STEVENS. That is basically the case, yes. The basic reason for their being subject to taxation is that the original act of 1937 did not clearly express the intent of Congress that so long as the reindeer were held in trust, the income from the sale of reindeer that are taken annually is not exempt because of the failure to expressly exempt them. This is an express exemption required by the 1984 circuit court of appeals decision.

The act restricts the ownership of these reindeer either to the Federal Government or the Alaskan Native people. There are a few of these now which are held privately by people who are going into the business of animal husbandry. This will only apply to those which are in trust; the court's opinion, I believe, applied to those which are in trust.

Mr. BRADLEY. I am struck by the diversity of the country. Reindeer are not native to New Jersey, but I can see where this would be a real problem to the Senator from Alaska, relating to the citizens of his State, to the citizens of this country.

Mr. President, I have no objection other than to note that maybe this amendment could have been more favorably received and we could have debated it more fully if it were offered nearer to Christmas.

(Laughter.)

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, speaking for this side of the aisle, I am not aware of any objections on the minority side.

My information is that there is no objection by the chairman of the committee. I believe there will be no objection to adopting the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. If there be no objection, I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2141) was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1130

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, what is the business before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the tax reform bill.

Mr. BYRD. Is the Pastore rule still in effect at this hour?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Pastore rule will last until 1:15.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order notwithstanding the Pastore rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BIRTHDAY OF THE 35TH STATE IN THE UNION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, today—June 20—marks the 123d anniversary of West Virginia's admission to the Union as the 35th State.

On June 20, 1863, America was in the midst of a great Civil War—a torn, riven, and mourning country. As the nations of the world watched, brother killed brother, and neighbor fought neighbor. The issues that brought on the War Between the States were not simple. Differences of culture; differences of economy; differences of political, moral, and religious philosophy; and differences of constitutional interpretation had split the 11 States of the Confederacy from those of the Federal Union. Even within most States on both sides of the battle lines, sincere men and women differed as to how to end the war, how to settle the question of slavery, and how to draw the demarcation between Federal and State powers.

Perhaps no area was quite as divided over the issues of that long-ago era as were the counties of western Virginia. Many western Virginians were slaveholders. Many were staunch supporters of States' rights. The vast majority were proud to be called Virginians, with all that that name meant in history and tradition. And since the early days of the Republic, all had looked to Richmond as their State capital.

But when Virginia was drawn into seccession from the Union, a majority in the western counties of the Old Dominion found that their attachment to that Union was too compelling. West Virginians had shared too much history together under the Stars and Stripes to allow themselves to be mustered under the stars and bars.

Some historians have written that the only two issues finally settled without further question by the War Between the States were, first, the abolition of slavery, and second, the foundation of the State of West Virginia. Neither of those questions, one might note, was resolved without the tragic spilling of fraternal blood and the decisive intervention of President Abraham Lincoln.

In the case of West Virginia, many especially in the U.S. Senate were opposed to her admission to the Union as a separate State. But President Lincoln, recognizing the great sacrifices made by so many Union loyalists in West Virginia, and heartened that his faith in the Union was shared by such a majority in that battle-weary region, threw his influence behind statehood for West Virginia. That influence carried the day, and West Virginia took her place beside her sister States and added her own star to our National flag.

West Virginia has not disappointed President Lincoln's faith in her. Today, as in decades past, the people of my State enjoy a proud heritage of patriotic service in all of our Nation's wars, and can boast a rich culture, ethos, and tradition all their own.

So, I wish for the people of West Virginia the very happiest 123d birthday, and countless more birthdays in generations to come.

Mr. President, I will be happy to yield the floor if any Senator has an amendment.

Did I have any time remaining under the leader's order this morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 10 minutes reserved.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair. If I may then continue on another subject.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH ON ARMS CONTROL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the President spoke yesterday in Glassboro, NJ, the site of the 1967 summit, about the possible "moment of opportunity" in arms control relationship with Soviets.

He indicated the latest Soviet arms control offer, while deficient in certain ways, might be the long-awaited turning point in arms control negotiations. He urged Soviet leader Gorbachev to join him in "taking action for peace."

If the President's remarks indicate his administration at long last may have ended its internal disagreements about arms control policy, then this is a most welcomed development. Those internal disagreements have not served the President and they have hampered America's ability to negotiate effectively with the Soviets.

The President could take a further step to eliminate unnecessary complications burdening arms talks if he alters the intentions certainly of some who have spoken in the administration for the United States to violate important SALT central numerical sublimits later this year.

There is strong evidence that the majority of the Senate would support continued United States compliance with SALT's central numerical sublimits on strategic launchers, because abandonment of those limits would give the Soviets the excuse likewise to break out of those central numerical sublimits.

Not only did 54 Senators urge the President to continue compliance, but yesterday the Senate Armed Services Committee apparently also voted to send such a recommendation to the White House. The House of Representatives made its feelings abundantly clear yesterday.

Instead of working to overturn or neutralize these actions, the administration should heed the sentiments of elected representatives of the American people, the majority of whom have spoken, and adopt the policy behind which Congress, the citizens, and allies can unite.

That would be the way to establish the strongest position for our negotiations in talks with the Soviets on new arms accords and on resolving United States concerns about Soviet compliance with existing agreements.

Mr. Gorbachev should also heed the President's words and quickly agree to a summit date to permit adequate planning. I hope the new Soviet offer is an indication that the Soviet approach to arms control finally is shifting from a primarily public relations campaign to serious negotiations.

I agree with the President that both sides not just our side, but also the other side, must aggressively seize this moment of opportunity to advance the cause of peace. I will be looking for evidence from both our actions and Soviet actions that this is, in fact, occurring.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

THE TAX REFORM ACT

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I rise today to address a transitional rule in the Tax Code which is of grave consequence to the State of South Dakota. Mr. President, air service is vital to South Dakota. Air service is the link between a remote and sparsely-populated State like South Dakota and the rest of the world.

I am sure I do not have to point out to anyone in this body that South Dakota is not exactly a high volume route for air travel. We do not have the population to justify extensive air service. At the same time, South Dakotans should be afforded to some extent the basic services provided for all citizens. For years, the Federal Government has taken great pains to insure that all States have essential air service.

For South Dakota, essential air service means Mesaba Airlines. Mesaba Airlines is our essential air carrier. As a matter of fact, Mesaba is the only airline serving our State capital of Pierre, not to mention a host of other small cities in South Dakota. Without a transition rule to the investment tax credit in H.R. 3838, it is highly likely that Mesaba will go out of business and the South Dakota cities of Pierre, Huron, Brookings, and Mitchell will lose their essential air service.

Let me explain the specifics of this situation to my colleagues:

In January 1986, Mesaba Airlines made a commitment to lease $20,000,000 of new aircraft. These aircraft were financed through operating leases and all deliveries took place between March and the end of May 1986. This commitment was made to better serve the essential air service cities in the region. These seven, new aircraft offer the cities and passengers served better service, greater capacity, and more comfort.

As you can well understand, the economics of this early 1986 transaction will greatly change if the investment tax credit involved here is repealed retroactive to January 1, 1986. Mesaba's annual lease payments for this $20,000,000 transaction will increase annually by at least $324,000 if Mesaba's lessors are to lose the investment tax credit. This figure is approximately twice the average of Mesaba's previous 2 years net income of $165,000 in fiscal 1985 and $201,000 in fiscal 1986.

It has taken Mesaba 14 years of dedicated airline service to finally be in a position to lease new aircraft. This contract would not have been entered into were the ITC unavailable, and even then, this transaction came with great difficulty.

Mr. President, I believe the tax law changes in this bill were never intended to disrupt critical public services. Certainly, essential air service is critical to the public well-being. And Mesaba has indicated that they will strive to develop their markets so they can continue to be able to serve small and medium-sized communities after the Essential Air Service Progrem terminates in 1988.

Mr. President, the serious nature of this problem for my State is readily apparent. And I believe it is incumbent upon this body to take the steps necessary to preserve air service for the citizens of this country, regardless of their geographic location. I would hope the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee and the Senate will be willing to assist me in preserving air service in South Dakota.

Not only is South Dakota affected but surrounding States have a stake in this issue as well. Mesaba serves more cities in Minnesota than any other carrier. It serves cities in Iowa, Wisconsin, and North Dakota. I would hope the chairman keeps this in mind when the conference committee addresses this issue.

Mr. President, earlier in the discussion of this bill, Senator DURENBERGER and I prepared an amendment to be offered relating to an airline company which covers a number of States in our territory. The amendment was cosponsored by the Senator in the Chair, Senator ANDREWS, and Senator BOSCHWITZ, and has a great deal of interest for those who are directly involved with this airline. It is a very, very serious situation back in all our States, and particularly in South Dakota. You have to understand that between the borders of South Dakota we have little or no airline service other than that provided by Mesaba Airlines.

They provide airline service to the capital of South Dakota, Pierre, and interestingly enough, if you want to go to Pierre by air, Mesaba is your only alternative. The legislators of South Dakota depend on it entirely to get back and forth on weekends and between sessions.

Unfortunately, a situation has arisen with regard to Mesaba Airlines which could do terrible damage to the company. As a matter of fact, damage enough to cause the airline to no longer exist.

If they are not granted a transition rule allowing investment tax credits on the new airplanes they recently leased, it could very well put them out of business.

I feel sorry for the airline, but I feel even more sorry for the people from my good State who rely on Mesaba. They do a fine job, and they are doing a wonderful service for South Dakota and the other four States they serve.

I yield to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I appreciate the efforts by our colleague from South Dakota, JIM ABDNOR, and by the occupant of the Chair, to bring this matter to the attention of our colleagues.

This is one of those small potential tragedies that comes with writing a very comprehensive kind of a tax bill.

I well recall the evening in the Finance Committee when we had to make the decision about how far we were going to broaden the base in order to bring the rates to 27, 15, and 33 percent. The last decision, as I recall, that we took that evening was to change the effective date on the investment tax credit from a March date which we had presumed I think it was March 1 which had sort of been in the chairman's draft right along and moved it back to January 1.

So, this little—it is not a little, in our State it is a large, potential transportation tragedy occurred that night as we made the decision to move the date from March 1 to January 1.

This third level carrier which is one of the best in the country I think, at least one of the most stable third-level carriers in the country, entered into a $20-million lease agreement on January 20, 1986, for seven Fairchild aircraft to be used to service small communities in Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, and North Dakota. The aircraft involved seats 20 passengers. All the aircraft have been received and are now being used to provide service to these areas.

The lease contract price was based on the then available investment tax credit and on ACRS. However, Mr. President, the lease agreement contains a tax indemnity clause which, as a result of the retroactivity of the elimination of the tax credit I spoke of will increase the lease cost by $324,000 per year.

These costs, the $324,000 per year, are double this company's total net income in fiscal year 1985 which was $165,000, and it is $123,000 more than the company's net income in 1986, which was $201,000.

So, Mr. President, by an unfortunate flick of the pen we change the effective date for repeal of investment tax credit and in the process we are in a position of driving a small profitable air carrier out of business and forcing even greater hardship on rural communities in our part of the country.

I know that the chairman of the Finance Committee has been chairman of the Commerce Committee. And in that capacity it is he who has helped to bring us to the marketplace in air transportation in this country. And if there is anyone in America who will be sensitive to the needs of airline transportation, and I think particularly to the inadvertent consequences that this tax bill might have on any third-level carrier who serve the small rural communities of this country, I expect it would be the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

So I would be very much interested in hearing his reaction to our particular quandary here for this carrier.

Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. President, I am very, very aware of the problems of the smaller airlines. When we went through the deregulation, we knew the larger airlines—200, 300, 400 passenger planes—were not going to be serving towns of 20,000, 30,000, or 40,000. In fairness, it was not efficient to have 5 people boarding a plane that holds 200 people. We knew to serve those areas we were going to have to have a whole new type of airline—some call it commuter airlines, third tier airlines—a plane that holds 20 people, 30 people. They can serve those towns efficiently. They can make money carrying 10, 15, 20 people.

And if we do not have those airlines, there are going to be hundreds of towns in this country that have no service at all. Because the 747's and the 707's are not going back to the towns of 15,000, 20,000.

The issue is subject to conference and you can be sure I will do everything I can to help.

Mr. DURENBERGER. We have in the bill some transition rules for 727's and some other airplanes and for other airlines.

Mr. PACKWOOD. We have a variety of transition rules for airlines, in some cases, which placed an option to buy in 1984 but were not going to take delivery of the plane until 1986, 1988, 1990. But those are normally bigger planes. The planes you are talking about here are smaller planes. They are ordered on a shorter notice. For a plane that holds 30 people, you do not order it in 1982 and not take it until 1988. You can get those quickly. So theirs is a different situation.

But, fortunately, because we have the issue of transition of airlines and investment tax credits and depreciation in the bill, it is subject to conference.

(Mr. STEVENS assumed the chair.)

Mr. ANDREWS. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. DURENBERGER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. I came down from the chair, Mr. President, in order to make one point that perhaps has been overlooked. In the case of the Mesaba Airlines, they are a local carrier that is moving ahead because of deregulation, the very deregulation that was supported by this body. I had some doubts about it. In fact, I voted against it, but it is the law of the land.

Two cities in North Dakota, Jamestown and Devils Lake, were formerly served by major national airlines. They are now served by Mesaba.

We are providing, out of the Transportation Subcommittee, Mr. President, funding to help subsidize these airlines get their beginning. The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee was then the chairman of the Commerce Committee and helped structure all of these agreements.

Mesaba has a unique pattern of growth made necessary because of the deregulation. There they are caught in a unique problem. They are buying these new aircraft because public attention is being focused on the service they give. The acceptability is coming up and it would be tragic if we gave no recognition to these unique problems of this growing regional carrier that has been brought about because of our own legislation.

This is not the case of an airline that has been going on for years and years and years and has a backlog piled up. They do not have a backlog.

So I appreciate the assurances of the Senator, the chairman of the Finance Committee, that he will seek to find a way in the conference to take care of this unique problem faced by Mesaba.

Mr. PACKWOOD. The problem was unique, because when we passed airline deregulation in 1978, we put in what we called essential air service and we knew there were going to be some towns that would lose the major planes and there would have to be a Government subsidy. And that is what has continued for 10 years, going through the end of 1988, exactly to take care of the Mesabas and the other airlines that came up that were going to fill a void, a gap, that we knew was going to happen.

Mr. ANDREWS. If the Mesabas cannot take advantage of this tax, shall we say, the encouragement that they felt they had, then they are going to have to apply for even more from the Federal Government out of the other pots. So it is a much more important thing than most people realize. It is not a matter of giving some windfall to some airline. It is a very unique case.

I appreciate the recognition the Senator has of it and appreciate his support.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ addressed the Chair.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, just 1 second. I still have the floor, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I believe the Senator from South Dakota does have the floor.

(Mr. ANDREWS assumed the chair.)

Mr. ABDNOR. I would like to add to the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota. I remember when essential airline service came into being. I was in the House at the time and a member of the Subcommittee on Aviation, which was then a part of Environment and Public Works. As I recall, I was the only one on the committee opposing deregulation at that time. I remember very well then Secretary Coleman saying:

I want the good Congressman to know that we had South Dakota in mind when we did this very thing.

I was not quite that sold on it, but I was at least somewhat assured that South Dakota would be protected.

This company, I can say, because I was riding its airplanes from the outset, has come a long, long ways in growth. And I hope my colleagues will keep in mind what it means to the people of South Dakota, North Dakota, Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin.

If a transitional rule is not permitted, it will put them out of business. The misfortune for Mesaba would be great, but not as great as it would be for the States that rely on it and need it. As a matter of fact, Mesaba's profits, although they have been growing, will not equal the loss they would be taking under this situation if it is not remedied.

Mesaba is working very closely with Northwest Orient bringing people to Northwest's hub so that they can make a decent connection to anywhere in the United States. The planes have been upgraded. They are comfortable now. They are pressurized. It would be a calamity and a disaster to see this company put out of business because of some oversight on their part or on ours. I thank the Chair.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. I just would like to comment briefly on the colloquy. I say to my friend, the chairman of the Finance Committee, that the airline is the very essence of the reform that he was seeking when he was chairman of the Commerce Committee. It is an airline that serves a number of communities—Devil's Lake in North Dakota; Jamestown, ND; Brookings and Huron—I recently used the Mesaba when I went to Brookings—Huron, Mitchell, Pierre; towns in Minnesota, Vermillion, Grand Rapids, Brainard; towns that have no other air service and towns whose development will certainly be held back because they do not have air service.

This is an airline, interestingly, that has put it back together with Northwest. So that you can now go from Thief River Falls in Minnesota, which is up near the Canadian border, to Brookings, S.D., and get a through rate coming to Washington. Normally, it used to cost more to go from Brookings to Minnesota than it did from Minnesota to San Francisco.

Now they have worked out the gates. Their gates are a matter of fact coordinated with Northwest. So that they are on Northwest's ramp. It is just a well-done thing. It is just what you were seeking to do when the chairman brought reform to the airlines of the United States, which I think has worked perhaps even beyond our expectations.

This is a good airline that has been upgraded. That is very meaningful to our area. And it is important that we get this very small transition rule because the development of our entire area is dependent on the infrastructure. This is really one of the key elements of the infrastructure of these towns where no other form of air transportation is found.

Among these towns, I used to, Mr. President, have warehouse stores in Devils Lake, Aberdeen, Huron, Mitchell, Sioux Falls, Grand Rapids, Pierre, Brainard, all of those towns that I have personally had visits in, and have been to just scores, perhaps hundreds, of times. So I can tell the chairman that the importance of this airline in the development of the upper Middle West cannot be exaggerated. His consideration in conference would be much appreciated.

Mr. PACKWOOD. As usual, my friend from Minnesota makes a very telling argument. I say once more it was our intention when we passed airline deregulation almost a decade ago now to assure these commuter airlines, and although they have different names around the country, they are serving a vital need to every town of 5,000, or 25,000 in this country. I will do everything I can to alleviate this problem.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. I thank the chairman.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I too want to add my appreciation of the chairman of the committee for the understanding. I am sure he has probably a better understanding of the situation than any of us. Ours is a bit parochial. He knows what it means nationwide. It is self-assuring to know that it will at least be considered for a possible correction when it goes to conference.

With that, I say thanks to the committee, and release our time.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am pleased that the chairman of the Finance Committee has indicated his willingness to assist us in working out a transition rule for Mesaba Airlines in conference committee. I thank him in advance for his consideration. I was prepared to speak as a cosponsor of an amendment here to create such a rule, but agree with my colleagues that this issue would be best handled in conference.

As the essential air carrier serving seven South Dakota communities, this regional carrier provides a vital service to my home State of South Dakota. Mesaba stepped in after deregulation of the airline industry resulted in a loss of service to many of my State's communities. Since that time, Mesaba has grown and improved its service to these communities, including our State capital, Pierre. In fact, it is now the only way an individual can fly into the State capital.

In January 1986, Mesaba made a commitment to lease 20 million dollars' worth of new aircraft. These seven airplanes mark yet another improvement in air service to communities in my State, many of which might not otherwise have any air service. In my discussions with the President of Mesaba it has become clear that this contract was entered into only because the airline trusted in this body's commitment to develop tax reform legislation which did not implement provisions retroactively.

I would remind my colleagues that the Senate did indeed make such a promise to this country's taxpayers when it passed Senate Resolution 281 on December 19, 1985. That resolution expressed the sense of the Senate that the effective dates included in any tax legislation drafted by the Senate Finance Committee be January 1, 1987.

As all of us now know, the reality is that many provisions in this bill are applied retroactively. I oppose the retroactive imposition of changes as proposed by this legislation. I oppose these changes because they violate the trust the American people have placed in their Government. Mesaba Airlines is but one example of the violation of this trust. For the sake of fairness, this amendment should be adopted by the Senate.

The problem with which Mesaba is faced is the retroactive elimination of the investment tax credit. Had the airline known the Senate would violate its own resolution, it would not have committed to lease these aircraft. They could not have afforded the transaction. If the investment tax credit is not available, Mesaba's annual lease payments would essentially double.

This puts the cities, States, and passengers served by Mesaba, as well as its 300 employees, in jeopardy. It would mean that my State, which is only just now beginning to get back on its feet after the blow of deregulation, will once again face the possibility of cutbacks or elimination of air service. This transition rule affects more than one small airline. The outcome of the Senate's decision will have very real implications for air travel in South Dakota. If any of my colleagues have recently flown commercially in South Dakota, they know I am not exaggerating this point.

Mr. President, this is a straightforward problem the correction of which will cost very little in the context of this legislation. However, if it is not corrected, the costs will be great. I urge our conferees to vigorously support the establishment of a transition rule for Mesaba in conference committee deliberations and I again thank the chairman for his consideration in this matter.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, while the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee and the chairman of the Subcommittee of Finance on International Trade, Senator DANFORTH, are on the floor I would like to engage in a discussion with them regarding an amendment that I had intended to offer to this tax bill.

Mr. President, I was going to offer an amendment designed to help the potash industry in New Mexico. The amendment would have reactivated the 1969 dumping case under which the Canadians, French, and West Germans were found to be dumping. As a condition of settlement, the Canadians gave "assurances" that they would not sell in the future for less than fair market value. In return the order was revoked as it applied to them.

The amendment would have instructed the Commerce Department to begin a review of all "assurances" given in the previous potash cases. If, in the course of their review, they found that Canadian producers have been selling potash at less than the fair market value, it would instruct the Commerce Department to impose dumping duties.

The problem with the old assurance system is that once these assurances were given, there seldom was any followup. This was partially because Congress changed the dumping law but never addressed the issue of the old assurances. Therefore, there was no requirement to make sure these foreign companies were living up to their agreement.

My amendment would have clarified the status of the assurances given in the 1969 potash case by specifically reinvigorating them and required the Commerce Department to impose duties on dumped potash.

When I discussed the problem with my good friend from Oregon and my dear friend from Missouri, they were responsive to the problem and were very helpful in working out the solution.

It appears that because of our discussions with the Secretary of Commerce, the amendment will not be needed. Secretary Baldrige has agreed to a very decisive action plan which will actually accomplish more than the proposed amendment. He has written a letter to Chairman PACKWOOD stating that he will end appropriate technical advisors to Carlsbad to meet with the community leaders and industry officials and to help them prepare the necessary petition. Additonally the Secretary has decided that this case should treated as a priority and that a preliminary determination should be made within 100 days instead of the usual 160.

This approach will accomplish the objective of the amendment, but without getting into the issue of the assurances and without adding an extraneous matter to the tax reform bill.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEINZ). The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Senator DOMENICI has talked to me on numerous occasions about the problems the potash industry is having. It was an issue that the Senator brought to my attention when the Finance Committee was considering whether to grant fast-track treatment for a United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement. I also understand that the Senator has been working with the trade agreement negotiators in an effort to get the issue addressed in the context of the bilateral talks.

I can sympathize with the Senator from New Mexico because he feels about potash the way I feel about timber. Since New Mexico produces most United States potash, and since Canadian market share has grown every year since 1964, I can easily understand the importance of this issue.

I would like to send to the desk, and have included at this point in the RECORD, a copy of the letter I received from Secretary Baldrige outlining his proposed action plan.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, June 19, 1986.

Hon. BOB PACKWOOD,
Chairman, Committee on Finance, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I understand that an amendment may be offered to H.R. 3838, the Tax Reform Act of 1986, related to the treatment of imports of potash from Canada under the antidumping duty laws administered by the Department of Commerce. I have spoken with Senator Domenici about this matter and believe that an amendment is not necessary.

My staff has met on several occasions with Senator Domenici's staff to attempt to develop a solution to the underlying problem faced by the New Mexico potash industry. As I understand it, there are allegations that potash from Canada is being dumped in this country. I have directed my staff to work with the interested parties in New Mexico to see if the legal prerequisites for a dumping case are met and, if so, to provide them with information and technical assistance in developing a petition.

Because of the urgency of this problem, I have also asked my staff to direct additional resources to this case if it is filed and initiated, in order that we may reach a preliminary dumping determination no later than 100 days after filing.

Sincerely,

MALCOLM BALDRIGE,
Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I want to thank the Secretary and the Senator from New Mexico for reaching an accommodation that precluded the offering of an amendment to the tax bill.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to thank my good friend, the chairman of the committee. I clearly prefer this arrangement. I did not want to have a debate on trade on this very, very superb tax bill, but he has hit the nail on the head. He understands the dilemma we are in.

We now have a potash industry that we think is viable and our market share is going down. We now have evidence in the last 6 or 7 months that something very, very strange is going on. They are selling potash in the world market at much higher prices than they are selling in the United States markets without transportation added to it. Also, their U.S. market share is growing dramatically. Canada's share of very, very cheap potash is just growing astronomically. We have already developed that with the assistance of the Bureau of Mines and experts at the Department of Commerce. So all of that will give us a head start in the process that the Secretary has agreed to in the letter which he sent to the chairman that I discussed with him. That letter was just now made a part of the RECORD.

I thank the chairman very much.

Mr. DANFORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, let me say first that I cannot imagine anyone being more aggressive and single-minded in pursuing his constituents' concerns than has been the Senator from New Mexico in the case of potash. I cannot count the number of times that the Senator from New Mexico has discussed this problem with me. If he has been aggressive in discussing the matter with me, and I am sure with Senator PACKWOOD, he has been even more aggressive in bringing this to the attention of the Secretary of Commerce. I know that he has dealt with the Secretary of Commerce at great length about this, and it is through this very energetic approach by Senator DOMENICI that the Secretary of Commerce has written a letter to the chairman of the Finance Committee giving his assurance that he will proceed with this matter as expeditiously as possible once a potash dumping case is filed.

In my view, this is only fair. I mean, this is not something that is taking the Canadians off guard. The Canadians have been on notice at least since 1969 that we were going to be watching them in connection with dumping.

So I believe this expeditious handling that has been gained through the actions of Senator DOMENICI is a very appropriate and fair result.

It also is helpful of course to keep trade amendments off the tax bill. So it seems to me the Senator has exactly accomplished the objectives that he has, that his constituents have had, and he has done so in a way that has not gotten in the way of the forward progress of the tax bill.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank my friend from Missouri.

Today, in some respects, might I say, Mr. President, is the culmination of several months of intensive interagency cooperation and work. I want to say publicly that we frequently are critical of our agencies of Government when it comes to matters such as trade violations.

□ 1210

In this case, the Bureau of Mines, a U.S. Government agency, has impressive commodity experts who know the markets for almost every mineral on Earth. Their potash experts were always available to answer questions about mineral deposits, transportation costs, and the market in general.

I have found that they have as much information as any group of citizens, would need in this particular area. Many citizens, companies, and communities spend hundreds of thousands of dollars with lawyers and consultants to get the information that is available to them and to us by an agency as expert as the Bureau of Mines.

We have found that they have saved innumerable amounts of money, hours, effort, by giving us this information which led us to the conclusion that we clearly had the beginnings of a dumping case.

The Commerce Department—and I want to thank them also—is frequently alleged to not care or to be too busy. In this case, they provided valuable help in both the legal department of the ITA and through the Office of Investigation, and Agreement Compliance.

As a result of these discussions, there is now a whole group of Government officials committed to investigating and stopping the dumping of potash and restoring fairness to the potash marketplace.

The commitments made today should be encouragement to the people of my State, in particular those in Carlsbad in the county of Eddy.

I would also like to thank Claud Gingrich who has been working with my staff on this problem. I cannot tell you the number of hours he has donated to this case. He has been of invaluable help. He is a professional and did not have to contribute his time, but he did so gladly. Again, I appreciate it.

I would like to reserve the right to offer an amendment on the next Finance Committee vehicle or bill, whether it is a technical corrections bill or a trade bill, in the event further action is necessary on this issue. I would like to share that thought with my chairman and get his reaction.

Mr. PACKWOOD. If it is necessary to revisit this issue, I would be happy to meet with you and talk with you. We are going to have other tax bills regarding trade and commerce.

Mr. DANFORTH. Let me say if it is necessary, Mr. President, I will be pleased to be of assistance to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to thank both the chairman, the distinguished Senator from Oregon, and Senator DANFORTH, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, and, obviously, the Secretary of Commerce. I believe he has done the right thing. I think we have the evidence and clearly we hope to get results.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from New Mexico, Senator DOMENICI, for his leadership in seeking assistance for the struggling potash industry in New Mexico. I have worked with him over the past 3 years in this effort.

The industry is centered in Carlsbad, NM, an area that has, too often in the past 4 years, experienced the harsh economic realities of a community dependent on a depressed and declining industry. Since 1982, employment in potash has been slashed more than one-third. To those of us from New Mexico and familiar with the plight of the potash industry, it is clear the industry is suffering increasing injury from unfairly priced imports. There have not only been lost sales, but the effect of the unfairly priced imports has been to reduce prices and cause serious financial losses for the industry.

I understand that the Secretary of Commerce has expressed a willingness to assist us in seeking relief for the industry. He has agreed to give special attention to the unique problems facing the potash industry. Specifically, the Secretary will send a team of officials to Carlsbad, NM, to assist the local industry and community officials in preparing an antidumping petition. This petition will then be given expedited consideration and the Secretary has pledged additional resources in order to complete the review as quickly as possible. The Department has already developed the data that will be used to evaluate the antidumping petition.

Senator DOMENICI and myself have made it clear for sometime that we did not feel the procedures used by the Department in evaluating the potash case in the past were effective. I am pleased that the Secretary has heard our concerns and is prepared to take special action to assist the industry.

I am also appreciative of Senator DANFORTH's role in this effort as chairman of the International Trade Subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee. I thank him for his assistance.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the floor.

THE SENATOR FROM VERMONT SERVES NOTICE

Mr. STAFFORD. One other thought, Mr. President. The Senator from Vermont, I suppose, is naive, even after going on 26 years in the Congress—nearly 12 years in the House and going on 15 years in the U.S. Senate. I was naive enough last night to believe that today there would be four rollcall votes in the Senate because it was stated by the leadership that there would be. In consequence, I was sufficiently naive to cancel an important matter—important to me—to be here today so that I would not miss all those rollcall votes.

I understand now they may not occur. I do have to say that it destroys the credibility, in my opinion, of the leadership if the leadership wants people here on Friday, to schedule rollcall votes, announce they will occur, and then not have them.

It appears further to the Senator from Vermont—and I can understand this because it has been a very tiring week for everybody—that there will not be a rush of Senators who have amendments listed in the agreement last night to the floor today, and there may not be a rush on Monday. There may be a big rush on Tuesday.

The Senator from Vermont seldom gets steamed up about anything the way he feels today but the Senator from Vermont very well may find himself objecting to a unanimous-consent request to extend the hour past 4 next Tuesday so that amendments that might have been offered today or Monday could be considered. I want the membership of the Senate to be on notice of that.

I yield the floor.

TAX REFORM BILL CREATES AN INJUSTICE FOR BRITISH FIRMS DOING BUSINESS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, it has just come to my attention that there is a provision buried in this tax bill which effectively: first, discriminates against British-owned groups of United States companies; second, violates the United States-United Kingdom Income Tax Treaty; third, antagonizes the British Government; fourth, worsens the United States-foreign trade imbalance; and fifth, effectively raises no additional United States tax revenues. The provision I am referring to is known as the dual resident provision, section 983 of the Finance Committee's tax reform bill.

For purposes of this provision, a dual resident company is a United States corporation which is managed and controlled in the United Kingdom. Because of its dual residency status, the company is taxable both by the United States and the United Kingdom.

The discrimination resulting from this provision is blatant. If enacted, this provision would deny a United States corporation, which happens to be a dual resident, the right to file a United States consolidated tax return with its United States subsidiaries merely because some of its expenses are deductible by its British parent company for British tax purposes. Ordinary United States corporations would be segregated and punished just because they have British companies as shareholders, while their competitors in the business community would remain unaffected since they have United States parent companies.

It was to prevent just this type of blatant discrimination that caused the Senate to adopt an antidiscrimination clause in the United States-United Kingdom Income Tax Treaty ratified in 1980. This nondiscrimination clause prevents the United States from imposing any additional tax requirements on United States companies operating in the United States and owned by United Kingdom persons that are more burdensome than the tax requirements imposed on similar United States companies owned by United States persons.

The uneven treatment of British-owned United States companies by this proposal violates our international tax treaty with one of our nearest and dearest allies. The United States Treasury Department has even told me that in their opinion the provision violated the United States-United Kingdom Tax Treaty.

In the face of the discriminatory treatment and violation of the United States-United Kingdom Income Tax Treaty, the only question would be to what extent would the British retaliate. There is no question that they would retaliate—what choice would they have?

It is widely believed that if this provision where enacted in the United States, Britain would enact a mirror provision directed at United States companies investing in the United Kingdom through dual residents. Then where would we be?

Additionally, with the current state of affairs with respect to the United States-foreign trade imbalance, there is some concern that this proposal would increase the pressure on British-owned United States companies to repatriate some of their profits to the United Kingdom, and thus, deepen the current trade deficit. Forced to make the choice of deducting expenses in the United Kingdom or in the United States, most dual resident companies—whether British or United States owned—would probably deduct such expenss in the United States. This would occur even in light of the bill's proposed corporate tax rate reduction to 33 percent. The reason is that the effective tax rate for these companies is higher in the United States than in the United Kingdom when United States Federal, State, and local taxes are taken into account together with certain available United Kingdom tax benefits.

Deducting the expenses in the United States would translate into higher British taxable income, higher British income taxes in the form of repatriation of profits. The greater the pressure, the lower the amount some U.S. companies will have to reinvest in the United States for capital improvements, market expansion, and human resources development.

Given all of the negative aspects of this proposal, it is disturbing to discover that for all practical purposes, this proposal might not result in any appreciable increase in United States tax revenues if the British retaliate, as I believe they would. If retaliation does occur, the outcome would be higher tax revenues for the British Government, and at best, breakeven for United States tax revenues.

For 50 years the United States has led the fight to eliminate discrimination in international taxation through the tax treaty mechanism. Because this dual resident provision blatantly discriminates against British-owned United States corporations, it undermines a generation of progress by the United States in convincing other countries not to discriminate against other corporations. I urge the committee, therefore, to reconsider this issue at the forthcoming House-Senate conference, and to delete the dual resident provision, section 983, from the conference bill.

Mr. GORE. I want to join with my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois and voice my concern that the effect of this provision will be to treat unfairly several Tennessee companies which are dual resident corporations.

These companies have significant investments in my State and provide jobs to thousands of Tennesseans and they should not be subjected to unfair discrimination under this provision. I would hope that the conference committee would carefully examine the operation of this provision and work to eliminate unfair tax treatment of corporations whose investments provide so many jobs to our citizens.

DUAL RESIDENT PROVISION

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I would like to comment very briefly on section 983, the so-called dual resident provision of the tax proposal now before the Senate. I have been contacted by a number of Georgia companies which are concerned about the potentially harmful effect section 983 would have on more than 1,600 Georgians employed by these firms.

The potential impact would, however, not be limited to workers in Georgia, but could similarly impact certain employees in almost every State in the Union.

The businesses affected by this provision are called dual resident companies. That term is used to describe firms that are located in the United States and employ our constituents but are managed or controlled through a corporate structure that is headquartered overseas—typically, Great Britain or Australia.

Currently, these companies are taxed on their worldwide income by the United States and by the overseas country. The law allows for certain reciprocal tax benefits. Section 983 in the committee proposal would make the tax treatment of these companies depend in some degree on how the parent company was treated under British law.

Mr. President, the House bill does not contain a similar provision and therefore, the matter will be before the conference committee. I can understand the committee's concern over this matter but I would like to note that the Treasury Department apparently has expressed some reservations about the impact of the proposed change on the existing United States-United Kingdom income tax treaty. In addition, I am advised that there exists the possibility of retaliation by the United Kingdom with all the uncertainty that such potential difficulties can create.

Therefore, Mr. President, I urge all my colleagues who will be members of that conference committee to carefully review the impact of this provision and give full and thorough consideration to its effect on our taxpaying constituents whose jobs could be affected by the decisions made in conference.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2143

(Purpose: To reward taxpayers who voluntarily pay taxes and to assist the elderly pay their medical bills)

Mr. BUMPERS. I send an amendment to the desk, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] for himself, Mr. METZENBAUM, and Mr. MATTINGLY, proposes an amendment numbered 2143.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask that the further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1659, beginning with line 21, strike out all through page 1661, line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEc. 559. LIMITATION ON NET OPERATING LOSS CARRYBACKS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 172 (relating to net operating loss deduction) is amended by redesignating subsection (1) as subsection (m) and by inserting after subsection (k) the following new subsection:

"(1) LIMITATION ON NET OPERATING LOSS CARRYBACKS.—for purposes of this section, with respect to any corporation, any net operating loss carryback shall reduce such corporation's income tax liability with respect to any carryback year only to the extent such carryback does not exceed an amount equal to the product of—

"(1) the amount of such carryback, and

"(2) the highest rate of tax prescribed under section 11 in the taxable year to which the net operating loss giving rise to such carryback arose.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to net operating losses for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986.

At the appropriate place add: the following:

The Secretary of Treasury is authorized to issue regulations that reduce the floor for itemizing medical deductions to the extent that such regulations will not reduce revenues more than the revenue raised by this amendment as determined by the Joint Committee on Taxation.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, this amendment deals with a particular provision in the tax bill that we are debating here. It is my belief that, until a day or two ago, there were not 10 Senators who knew this provision was in the bill. I have talked with members of the Finance Committee who did not realize this provision was in the bill. It is what we normally call tax amnesty. That is, this amnesty grants immunity from prosecution to all people who have been evading taxes but who will come in and confess that they have been evading taxes. It does not relieve them of civil penalties; it only relieves them of Federal criminal prosecution.

I want to say first, Mr. President, that it has always been my belief that one of the compelling reasons people pay taxes is that they do not want to be prosecuted.

Second, they do not want the public ridicule and humiliation of being indicted and going through a publicized trial.

While compliance with the tax laws in this country has been steadily declining, if you will look, you will also find that compliance has declined on almost an exact curve with the amount of money we have continued to cut from the IRS budget so that what used to be a 3-percent tax audit rate is now a 1.3-percent audit rate. That is, only 1.3 percent of the tax returns are even looked at in detail by the IRS.

I want you to listen to the specific language in the bill. It seems to me that even if I favored the general concept of tax amnesty, I would have to strenuously object to this language. Here is the language:

In the case of any violation of any tax law for any taxable period, the taxpayer shall not be liable for any Federal criminal penalty relating to tax administration under section 6103(b)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to such violation, if full disclosure of such violation is made to the Secretary of the Treasury or his designee before notice of an inquiry or investigation into the taxpayer's tax affairs is given to the taxpayer by the Internal Revenue Service.

In other words, Mr. President, if you have been cheating on your taxes for the past 10 years or if you have not even filed a tax form in the last 10 years, you can go down to the IRS and go through your mea culpa and say, "I am really sorry about this." The motiviation of your coming forward would not be relevant. Maybe you have a wife you have just divorced and you are scared she is going to go down and tell the IRS about your past misdeeds. Or you may be a gunrunner or a drug smuggler or any other thing. But for some reason or other, you decide to go down there and tell all. It does not make any difference what the motivation is under this provision. This says "any violation of any tax law for any taxable period" shall not be liable for any Federal criminal penalty.

In this tax bill, one of the things that we have made much of is that we have reduced the top tax marginal rate from 50 percent down to 27 percent, and this lowered rate is supposed to improve compliance. In 1981, I said on the floor of the Senate that I would be willing to lower the top rate from 70 percent to 50 percent because nobody was paying at that rate anyway. I think we collected, in 1980, $3 billion in the top marginal rate.

So one of the advantages of this bill is a top rate of 27 percent and lower rate of 15 percent, where 80 percent of the American people will be. With these low rates there just is not much incentive to cheat anymore on your taxes.

In addition there are allocated hundreds of millions of dollars in this bill to the IRS in increased funds so that they can enforce compliance. Maybe the $600 million increase in enforcement funds in this bill is not enough of an increase. I really do not know what the magic figure would be to bring the rate of compliance up. But the IRS is just now getting their computers on-line where they can cross-check with those 1099 forms against what you report in your tax return and I think there is a chance that tax compliance can be increased dramatically with this increase in money.

Think for a moment about the erosion of confidence in our Tax Code that tax amnesty would create. I do not know what the exact figure is, but my guess is that about 70 percent of the people, or maybe 60 percent of the people, pay their taxes every Friday afternoon when they get their paycheck, or every other Friday afternoon, or whatever the pay period is. They do not have any choice. The poor stiff out on the assembly line gets his taxes removed from his check before he gets his check.

You tell me how you can go home and talk to that man and explain to him that a drug smuggler, for example, or just one of the local big dogs who has been cheating, who maybe makes 100 times more money than he does, you tell him how he is supposed to think this Tax Code is fair when the other fellow can avoid criminal prosecution by simply walking in before he receives a notice or before any kind of investigation begins. Is that fair to the honest taxpayer?

Most people pay their taxes. Most people are not very happy about it. Justice Brandeis said one time, "Taxes are what we pay in order to live in a civilized society." Most people understand that, and most people pay their taxes—maybe grudingly, but they pay. The argument is made that Massachusetts and 15 or 16 other States have tried tax amnesty and it is highly successful for various reasons. Most States, however, do not engage in criminal prosecution for tax evasion. I cannot ever remember one in my State. The States, I know, is notified when there is a Federal criminal prosecution, and perhaps even when there is some kind of a Federal civil penalty. I am told that the IRS has an ad hoc policy now that if you honestly come in and confess your sins that you may have to pay a stiff penalty, anywhere from 25 to 100 percent, but unless the case is fairly outrageous they will take your money and put your name on the tax rolls. They don't prosecute.

The argument is made "Yes, but people won't go in because they are afraid they will not escape prosecution." I don't agree.

This provision says to people, "We are going to condone criminal activity." This provision is an entitlement program for criminals.

Mr. President, anybody can come in before a prosecution for any crime. He can rush down and pay any time. But there is no other place in the criminal laws of this country where we give them automatic amnesty.

So, Mr. President, I think that we are making a very serious mistake if we go forward with this amnesty program.

Now, the committee says that if you remove the tax amnesty provision, you will lose $200 million in revenue over the next 5 years. And as you know, under the rules of the Senate we have to come with a revenue offset. So I plagiarized an idea of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] on what we call the net operating loss carryback provision. I am a strong supporter of Senator DANFORTH's concept of rural enterprise zones and should this amendment pass, I will help him in the future any way I can to come up with the money for rural enterprise zones. I think he is caught in a little bit of a bind because he does not want to vote for amendments to this bill, and I understand that. Perhaps in my position on the Appropriations Committee I can be helpful to him on rural enterprise zones in the future. But let me tell you what this offset does. To strike this amnesty provision costs $200 million, and I would cover that and then some with the NOL carryback provision.

This carryback provision works this way. Under the law as it is now and in this bill, if you have a loss you can offset that loss against any taxes you paid in the 3 preceding years beginning with the furthest year. And so it would work thusly. Follow this illustration. If in 1988 you make $100,000 and you are a corporation, you will pay $33,000 in taxes at the 33-percent rate. Now, in 1985, if you had made $100,000, you would have paid $46,000 in income taxes, because 46 percent was the corporate rate then.

But if in 1988 after this bill is passed, when the top rate is 33 percent, you lose $100,000, you can carry that loss back for the preceding 3 years and that would take you back first to 1985. So let us assume that you made $100,000 in 1985 and you paid $46,000 in taxes. Under the existing bill, you can go back, even though the rate in the year in which you lost the money, 1988, was 33 percent, and save $46,000 in taxes. This is almost an incentive to lose money. All my amendment does is say that once this bill goes into effect, all losses in the future, when the 33 percent is in effect, are carried back to any of the years where we had a 46 percent rate they are worth as much as if the tax rate then was 33 percent not 46 percent. Companies wouldn't reap that windfall. So in the case I gave where you lost $100,000 in 1988, you go back to 1985 and instead of getting a $46,000 refund you get a $33,000 refund or $13,000 less.

Now, all told this offset picks up $1.6 billion; $200 million of that would be used to offset the striking of the tax amnesty provision. The balance of it would be used to reduce the threshold for itemizing your medical expense deductions. As you know, under existing law you can itemize all your medical expenses in excess of 5 percent of your adjusted gross income. This bill raises the threshold from 5 percent to 10 percent so that in the future you can only deduct your medical expenses in excess of 10 percent of your adjusted gross income.

Now, the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] the other day put some money back in the medical expense so the figure now is down to about 9 percent of adjusted gross. The House retains the 5 percent threshold. And if you put in another $1.4 billion you can lower the threshold to about 7.5 percent so that when you go to conference the difference between the House and Senate will be 5 percent and 7.5 percent.

Now, the American Association of Retired Persons is one of those organizations which agreed to oppose all amendments, but I can tell you they love my proposal. It is absolutely amazing. The statistics are staggering. Senator DURENBERGER used some figures the other day on this floor. How many elderly itemize their medical expenses? How many middle- and lower middle-income people itemize their medical expenses? This provision is important.

And so really you have a choice: Do you want to condone criminal activity or do you want to help people who have excessive medical bills? That should not be a tough choice for anybody.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BUMPERS. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. MATTINGLY. As the Senator knows, I am a cosponsor of this amendment. Let me ask a couple of questions. By allowing those who cheat on their taxes to receive this immunity, what are we saying to the people across the United States, to the law-abiding citizens who pay their taxes on a regular basis?

Mr. BUMPERS. I said a moment ago in my earlier remarks that I think this amnesty provision does more to erode people's confidence in the tax system than any provision of this bill. I said I do not want to have to explain this provision to a manufacturing employee who sits on the assembly line all week and gets his taxes taken out of his paycheck.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Does the Senator believe then, if we are developing a tax reform bill that is supposed to be the epitome of fairness in equity and reform, that this provision is out of place?

Mr. BUMPERS. If this provision is left in the bill it certainly makes this a fair bill for people who have been evading their income tax. It is an entitlement program for criminals.

Mr. MATTINGLY. If this bill passes with this provision intact and there was a big publicity campaign all over the United States what will be the inclination then for voluntary compliance with the Tax Code? How successful would enforcement be then?

Mr. BUMPERS. The Senator anticipated me. I was getting ready to cover that. In my opinion, this is further going to erode the problem of tax compliance because you are saying to 80 to 85 percent of the people who are fully paying their taxes, and paying them fairly, "If you decide not to in the future, you can probably come in any time you want to and confess and we will handle it and you will not be criminally prosecuted." It is a disincentive for people who are now paying their taxes.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I say to my distinguished colleague from Arkansas, it appears that this tax amnesty provision is sort of legalizing an illegal act.

Mr. BUMPERS. That is what it does.

I also want to say that there are two Senators here for whom I have the highest respect, men I consider to be my close personal friends, who feel strongly the other way on this. We have discussed it at length, but I have remained unpersuaded, because I think tax amnesty is bad, bad policy.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I agree with my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. President, I rise on behalf of honest taxpayers all across America in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Ever since the issue of tax amnesty has been raised, I have vigorously opposed it. By establishing such a program. I believe the U.S. Senate will be sending out the wrong signal to American taxpayers. Mr. President, to sum it up, tax amnesty is dead wrong.

By allowing those who cheat on their taxes to receive immunity, what are we saying to the law-abiding citizens who pay their fair share of taxes, year-in and year-out? What will we be saying to the honest taxpayers who always bend over backward to comply with the laws and pay their taxes?

I join many others who believe by including this tax amnesty provision in the bill, the U.S. Senate will be condoning, and even supporting, a program that will have a long-term negative impact on the fundamental principle upon which our Nation's tax system is based—voluntary compliance. Is it fair to let one taxpayer successfully dodge punishment while others have faithfully paid their taxes? Is that what we in the Senate want to do? I hope not.

This tax reform bill we are considering is based upon fairness and equity. I believe it is a good bill, and achieves that worthy goal. That is why this provision is so out of place in the bill. It just is not fair.

Mr. President, the key problem with this provision is that it is morally wrong. And I believe that's enough. But this is such a bad idea that it is full of other problems.

Every dollar that is collected through such a provision represents a dollar not discovered by the existing Federal enforcement structure. I am extremely concerned that any publicity about the amount recovered through this concept could reduce the inclination toward voluntary compliance by explicitly showing how unsuccessful enforcement has been.

There has been much talk in the past, as support for tax amnesty, that many States have been successful in their tax amnesty programs. They say "look what's been done, let's make the Federal Government do it." But I think once these State programs are more closely analyzed, a different and less-appealing result is reached. Many of the States that are cited as success stories, in actuality, had less-than-efficient tax enforcement systems prior to the Amnesty Program. The key question then arises—was the money the State raised proof of the success of the amnesty, or was it merely proof of ineffectiveness of its enforcement program?

And when one looks closer at the dozen or so States that have established a tax amnesty program, there are just as many States collecting very little money as there are those who collected a lot, if not more.

Mr. President, the fact is it legalizes an illegal act. The concept of tax amnesty is nothing but a wolf in sheep's clothing. It is bad news. I'm against tax amnesty, I think it is the first step toward destruction of this country's tax system, it would be one of the worst mistakes our Government could make.

Mr. President, this provision, which we are hoping to delete, is nothing less than a direct affront to the millions and millions of hard-working, honest, law-abiding citizens that pay their taxes, year-in and year-out. Those are the people this Senator is proud to represent. I sincerely hope my colleagues will join in this effort to remove this unfair provision.

I hope we can get to a vote on this and see how much support tax amnesty has. I think that if Senators see tax amnesty for what it is, it will be voted down overwhelmingly.

Mr. BUMPERS. There is one point I want to make, which I think we may be confronted with, and I hope we will not.

The chairman of the committee, Senator PACKWOOD, has said he might raise a point of order, based on the unanimous-consent agreement. I invite all my colleagues to turn to page 2 of today's calendar. They will see the unanimous-consent agreement, with a list of all the amendments.

The Senator has said that he is troubled by the fact that the description of the Bumpers amendment says, "Strike amnesty provisions in bill."

The point is made that this only refers to striking the amnesty provision. It does not say where I am going to make up the revenue, No. 1. No. 2, it does not say that the revenue that I am trying to raise here far exceeds the amount necessary to cover my amendment and that the surplus goes to the medical expense deductions.

I want to make this point: No. 1, when I was called last night I said, "Yes, my amendment is a tax amnesty amendment." A copy of the amendment—with the NOL and medical expense parts—was handed to the managers of the bill. When the unanimous-consent request was made by the majority leader and entered into, it was referred to—as often happens around here—just by a general topic. Had I had any idea, or had I been told, that I had to set out in great detail where I was going to get the money and the money would exceed the amount necessary to compensate for this provision, I would have complied.

As a matter of fact, I handed copies of my amendment to the managers and the staff last evening before the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into.

I hope the Senator will not raise that point of order and will allow the Senate to vote up and down on this; because, as I look down the list here, for example, I see an amendment by Mr. MATHIAS, and in parentheses it says "(PACKWOOD to describe.)" It does not even describe what the amendment is, let alone what the offset is.

Here is an amendment by Senator BAUCUS, "2d degree amendments relating to Bumpers amnesty amendments." I have no idea what MAX BAUCUS' amendment is. Are we going to raise a point of order on that?

Senator MOYNIHAN: "Relating to foreign area section 902/312." Relating how? Are we going to make a point of order on that?

Here is an amendment by Senator DECONCINI, and it just says, "Installment sales." That is hardly a classic description of an amendment.

I do not know which installment sales they are talking about. I do not know whether this is a revenue producer or loser, nor do I have the foggiest notion where they are going to find the money, or whether it generates more money.

I intend to stand on the floor and raise a point of order on an awful lot of amendments if that is the way this is going to be played.

I really feel put upon—I do not mind saying that—because I tried my very best to play fair. When they called me, I told them precisely what I wanted to do and how I was going to do it, and that is a lot more than 90 percent of these amendments show.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUMPERS. I yield for a question to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. I am happy that the Senator from Arkansas is raising the amendment I have on that list, because it was my understanding that points of order would not be raised, and that when we came in with the unanimous-consent agreement, it was understood that it was a revenue neutral bill and that amendments could be modified, because we did not want to file every amendment in just the way it was going to be brought to the floor.

If the Senator will yield for a question, not on the point of order but on his amendment, as I understand this amendment, it would literally grant any person who is involved in drug trafficking—and that is over $100 billion a year in the United States on which no tax is paid—that anybody who is involved in drug trafficking and has not paid taxes, and they come to the IRS and say, "I'm delinquent and haven't paid my taxes, and not only delinquent, but I've just failed to pay for a number of years and I'm prepared to pay now," they are granted immunity. Is that a correct interpretation of this amendment?

Mr. BUMPERS. That is absolutely my understanding of it, and I am not sure the IRS can go behind that. They can ask the fellow, and he may say, "I made all these millions selling apples on the corner."

Mr. DECONCINI. There is nothing in this amendment that directs the IRS that they must find out where that money was made?

Mr. BUMPERS. Absolutely none.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may yield to me for a couple of minutes, without losing his right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator's amendment speaks for itself.

What kind of tax bill do we have here? Quite frankly, I did not realize this provision was in it until 2 days ago, and I cannot believe that this Senate is about to grant amnesty to any criminal element in this country.

I prosecuted narcotics dealers and I prosecuted organized crime figures, and I know a little bit about what we are dealing with here.

The Senator has an amendment that is going to permit us to invite criminals not to pay their delinquent taxes and say, "Go out and do it again."

What kind of message is that for this country? What kind of law-abiding body is this that would have such an amendment in the bill? I have to believe that even the drafters of this bill had no idea that this was going to be as widely interpreted as I believe it is and as the Senator from Arkansas has pointed out.

I hope the Senator will not raise a point of order, because it would be unfair.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. DECONCINI. He yielded to me for a couple of minutes, by unanimous consent, without losing his right to the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Was there a unanimous-consent request to that effect?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas obtained unanimous consent to yield temporarily to the Senator from Arizona. The Senator from Arkansas retains the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, No. 1, I think we owe a debt of gratitude to the Senator from Arkansas for raising this amendment.

No. 2, I hope that the ranking minority member of the Finance Committee and the chairman of the Finance Committee and the 20 members of the Finance Committee will stand up here today and say, "Hey, we made a mistake." There is nothing wrong in that. I have made plenty of mistakes in this body in the 10 years I have been here.

They should say, "We made a mistake by even suggesting that we are going to grant amnesty to all the criminal element in this country that wants to come forward and pay their taxes."

This is a disgrace, and it may be the Achilles' heel—and I hope it is not—of this tax bill.

The Senator is right, and I hope he pursues it. I hope this body will not raise a point of order, because it would be a disgrace.

□ 1250

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator very much.

As I looked down the unanimous-consent agreement, I found here what I think is really wonderful.

Stevens—amendment striking various provisions in the bill; Stevens—Endicott project; Stevens—Arco project; Domenici—potash; McConnell—parimutuel betting.

We have parimutuel betting in Arkansas. I would like to know what are the revenue implications of that.

Wilson—child support; Wilson—irrevocable trust elections; Roth—methanol blender.

I would like to raise a point—I think that has already passed—but I would like to raise a point of order on methanol blenders.

So, Mr. President, I hope my good friend from Oregon, the distinguished chairman of this committee and manager of this bill, would not put this body through what could be a wringer by voting on points of order instead of the merits of these amendments.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, here is my problem. I talked to the Senator from Arkansas prior to presenting his amendment.

I have no quarrel with his presenting an amendment striking amnesty provisions—it would cost us $200 million if they succeed—and offering a $200 million offset to raise money. I will not raise a point of order on it.

His amendment has two parts: It costs $200 million to take care of his amnesty provision, and $1.4 billion to lower the medical deduction. He pays for the two of them with a $1.6 billion change in the net operating loss carryover rules.

I am not quarreling with him about the merits of his amendment. But if he is in a position to do this when the unanimous-consent order says "Bumpers strike amnesty provisions in the bill," then when we get down to the parimutual amendment that was mentioned by our good friend from Arkansas, the person who offers the parimutual amendment can add a nice big section to it and say, by the way, put back in the sales tax deduction the way it originally existed or put back in the IRA or put back in capital gains.

If the unanimous-consent agreement is going to mean anything, the amendment that you offer must bear some reasonable relation to the agreement. Otherwise, the agreement means nothing.

I suggested to the Senator from Arkansas before he offered it that he take out the provisions relating to the medical deductions and the net operating losses unless he wanted to use a $200 million net operating loss to offset his amnesty provision. He chose not to do that.

So, Mr. President, I wish to pose a parlimentary inquiry if I could.

Mr. BUMPERS. Before the Senator does that, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I want to pose the inquiry first. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, the agreement allows Senators to offer amendments and specifies the subject matter of those amendments. Am I correct that this precludes Senators from adding any other significant matter to the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am happy to yield for a question.

Mr. BUMPERS. The Senator from Ohio the other evening offered an amendment dealing with foreign real estate sales and he took the savings from his offset and put it exactly where I am putting it here.

Now what relationship is there in medical deductions on a tax return and the money saved from striking foreign investment to real estate sales? Why was a point of order not made here?

Mr. PACKWOOD. My argument is not to the point of where the money is raised. If the Senator from Arkansas wants to have a $200 million offset out of net operating losses to pay for his amnesty provision, that is all right with me. I may argue for or against the provision. All I am saying is this: that amendment is not basically an amnesty amendment. It is basically a net operating loss and medical deduction amendment.

If this can be allowed then none of us are on notice as to anything that may be in any amendment that may be offered under this agreement.

Mr. President, I do raise a point of order that this amendment goes completely beyond the scope of the unanimous-consent agreement because it involves a significant matter unrelated to the agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. BUMPERS. I appeal the ruling of the Chair and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PACKWOOD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Is debate in order at this point, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appeal is debatable.

The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. DANFORTH. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I would simply like to make one ancillary point to the point of order.

A few days ago a number of Senators offered an amendment to this bill to provide up to 45 rural enterprise zones for America. The point of that amendment was to try to do something to stabilize rural America where there has been this terrible depression where small communities are being boarded up, where people are losing their jobs and they are losing their opportunities for any kind of supplemental income so that they can keep their farms.

We offered an amendment for rural enterprise zones intending at the outset to pull the amendment down but also realizing that any credibility for any amendment that was presented even for the sake of debate and then to be pulled down had to have a revenue offset.

We found a revenue offset for rural enterprise zones and that was the net operating losses carryback which was then appropriated by the Senator from Arkansas to pay for a $200 million item, namely amnesty.

Now, I have to say that the Senator from Arkansas was kind enough to call me last night and to tell me what he intended to do.

Mr. President, I do not say that I or the other Senators who support rural enterprise zones have a proprietary interest necessarily in a particular revenue source for what we want to do. But it is also true that if we are successful at some future time, and I hope we will be in the very near future, in establishing rural enterprise zones, we are going to have to have some way to pay for them. If there is any amendment, any proposal, any legislative idea that has or should have a good claim on this particular source of revenue, it should be the rural enterprise zone and those who conceived of the idea of paying for this concept by the net operating loss carryback.

So for that reason, I would hope that the Senate would sustain the Chair to try to fix a $200 million problem and I do not dispute it. I am not a great fan of tax amnesty, but to try to fix a $200 million problem by poisoning the water to the tune of $1.6 billion for real changes that offer real hope to rural America I think is wrong.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, let me say again I understand the argument that is being made by my good friend from Missouri. Those of us in the West who ever had any practice of water law are familiar with the concept of first appropriation. Whoever got it first gets to use it first.

And that is in essence what the Senator is saying about the money that is here, but that is not exactly my point of order.

My point of order is this: If this kind of an amendment can be offered where we all thought it was going to be a tax amnesty amendment and what it really turns out to be is a tiny bitty part tax amnesty and great big part medical deduction and net operating loss carry forward, then an amendment can be brought in so long as it tangentially talks on the subject of the unanimous-consent agreement and then this whole bill is reopened.

So, Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the appeal of the ruling of the Chair and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BUMPERS. The Chair has sustained the point of order of the Senator from Oregon. Could the Chair state the precedent for that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was interpreting the wording of the unanimous-consent request and agreement——

Mr. BUMPERS. Could the Chair be more enlightening and tell us what the interpretation is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will permit the Chair to continue—which states that the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Arkansas would strike the amnesty provision from the bill. The amendment goes far beyond that.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1320

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am going to pose a unanimous-consent request to withdraw the motion to table and also to withdraw the appeal of the ruling of the Chair by the Senator from Oregon. I pose that unanimous-consent request now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Now, Mr. President, we are now back on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. I am simply at the moment going to ask unanimous consent that it be set aside without his losing any rights that he may have had under the amendment as it was pending or as offered, to set it aside not just temporarily and come immediately back to it, but to set it aside without his losing any right—there might be other intervening business—and give him the right to modify the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BUMPERS. Reserving the right to object, and I hope I will not have to, I would hope we can dispose of this amendment because we will have a substitute momentarily.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am sure there will be at least one and perhaps two votes on the amendment, depending on how the first vote goes.

Mr. BUMPERS. A lot of people are here who have planning on leaving at 2:30 or 2:45 this afternoon. My point is I would like to be able to proceed so soon as it is crafted.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arkansas have the right to offer his amendment, regardless of what other business is pending, at the time his amendment is ready.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KERRY. Reserving the right to object, I understand the Senator from Arkansas wants to leave at what time?

Mr. BUMPERS. I need to leave here by 2:45, but I can always cancel, if I have to.

Mr. KERRY. I do not think anybody wants that.

Mr. BUMPERS. I have made my argument on the issue. The Senator from Montana has not had the chance to make his argument. I would suggest informally that the minute we lay it down the Senator from Montana offer his second-degree amendment and we debate and maybe vote on that and go immediately to a vote on mine, if he does not prevail.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1330

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, while the Senator from Arkansas is redrafting his amendment and the Senator from Montana is working on a substitute to that amendment, as I recall, a unanimous-consent order would be in order now for others who have amendments to proceed to them. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unamimous-consent request has not yet been agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. It has not been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Is there objection to the request? Hearing none, it is ordered.

Mr. RUDMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield for a question?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am happy to yield.

Mr. RUDMAN. Would the Senator from Oregon have any objection to my proceeding for 1 minute as in morning business?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I would have no objection.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed as if in morning business for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BARRY WAS HERE

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, last Friday night in New Hampshire, our distinguished and beloved colleague, BARRY GOLDWATER, returned to New Hampshire and received a tumultuous welcome. In the wake of that appearance, the publisher of the Manchester Leader, Nackey Loeb, wrote an editorial in that paper entitled "Barry Was Here." I ask unanimous consent that a copy of that editorial be printed in the RECORD as if read.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BARRY WAS HERE

A familiar figure came back to New Hampshire last week, and was greeted with a standing ovation. On Friday night, Barry Goldwater joined a dozen of his senate colleagues in a fundraiser for U.S. Sen. Warren Rudman.

The cheers that greeted Goldwater were for a man who had served his country over many years, but they were also for much more. Twenty-two years ago, Barry Goldwater told America what it needed to know, but didn't want to hear.

Barry Goldwater looked at the doubters and the who-cares generation and he stood strong. It was a lonely battle. The country wasn't ready then, but he represented the hope ahead. An unashamed flag-waver, always saying what he thought, being proud of the extremism for which he was condemned, he stirred within the young people of this country a spirit that has culminated today in a much stronger and prouder nation.

As this man, now crippled with pain, made his way slowly up to the podium in Manchester's armory last Friday night, we cheered him for what he represents. We may not always agree with him, but we must never forget that he may well have changed the course of our nation.

You are welcome here, Barry. We were glad to see you again.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986

The Senate continued with consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2143 AS MODIFIED

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I send a modification of my amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the modification.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] for himself, Mr. METZENBAUM, and Mr. MATTINGLY, proposes an amendment number 2134 was modified.

Mr. BUMPERS. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 1659, beginning with line 21, strike out all through page 1661, line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 559. LIMITATION ON NET OPERATING LOSS CARRYBACKS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 172 (relating to net operating loss deduction) is amended by redesignating subsection (l) as subsection (m) and by inserting after subsection (k) the following new subsection:

"(l) LIMITATION ON NET OPERATING LOSS CARRYBACKS.—For purposes of this section, with respect to any corporation, any net operating loss carryback shall reduce such corporation's income tax liability with respect to any carryback year only to the extent such carryback does not exceed an amount equal to the product of—

"(1) the amount of such carryback, and

"(2) the highest rate of tax prescribed under section 11 in the taxable year to which the net operating loss giving rise to such carryback arose, Provided, however, That the number used as such highest rate of tax shall be adjusted, under regulations, so that the revenues generated by this section shall not exceed $200 million during the period of fiscal years 1987–1991.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to net operating losses for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that?

Mr. BUMPERS. I withhold that.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas be temporarily laid aside so my amendment will not be considered as an amendment to his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2144

(Purpose: To exempt the 1950 UMWA pension plan from the survivor annuity requirements of the Retirement Equity Act of 1984)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] proposes amendment No. 2144.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . SPECIAL RULE FOR SECTION 404(c) PLAN.

(a) Section 205 of the ERISA of 1974 is amended by adding thereto a new subsection "(k)" to read as follows:

"(k) The provisions of this section do not apply to a plan that the Secretary of the Treasury has determined is a plan described in Section 404(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or a continuation thereof, in which participation is substantially limited to individuals who, before January 1, 1976, ceased employment covered by the Plan."

(b) Section 401(a)(11) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding thereto a new subparagraph "(E)" to read as follows:

"(E) The provisions of this paragraph do not apply to a plan that the Secretary of the Treasury has determined is a plan described in Section 404(c), or a continuation thereof, in which participation is substantially limited to individuals who, before January 1, 1976, ceased employment covered by the Plan."

(c) Section 303 of the Retirement Equity Act of 1984 is amended by adding thereto a new subsection "(f)" to read as follows:

"(f) The requirements of this section do not apply to a plan that the Secretary of the Treasury has determined is a plan described in Section 404(c), or a continuation thereof, in which participation is substantially limited to individuals who, before January 1, 1976, ceased employment covered by the Plan."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the United Mine Workers of America 1950 pension plan only covers participants whose last day of credited service for accrual purposes was before January 1, 1976. Thus, the plan was not required to provide a joint and survivor annuity under the Employee Retirement and Income Security Act [ERISA]. Nevertheless, the plan has provided pensions to miners' widows without any reduction to the participant's pension. The Retirement Equity Act of 1984 requires the UMWA 1950 pension plan to provide different benefits to a small group of unidentifiable plan participants. The plan is a flat benefit plan and all participants who qualify for a full pension receive the same benefits. It is not possible to preserve these important features and provide the benefits specified in the Retirement Equity Act to newly retiring participants. Accordingly, the plan should be exempted from the survivor annuity requirements of the Retirement Equity Act, so that UMWA retirees and widows can continue to receive full pensions.

This amendment has been discussed with the able managers of the bill, and

I hope that they are prepared to accept it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared on both sides and we would recommend its approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment (No. 2144) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank both managers. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to add the name of my distinguished colleague, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, as a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2143, AS MODIFIED

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. I am not going to ask unanimous consent but simply make a suggestion to those who are opposed to my amendment by the second-degree amendment, I am finished with my debate on it and I would suggest that those who are opposed to the amendment and who favor the second-degree amendment which is about to be offered but not yet crafted might in the interest of time start debating this whole issue so we can save a little time and perhaps get some Senators out of here.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I thought I would use this time, while the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Arkansas are busy crafting two amendments to at least begin the process of debate on Senator BAUCUS' and my amendment and speak in opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Now, I have listened very carefully to the Senator from Arkansas, the Senator from New Mexico, and the Senator from Georgia who say that if we have any voluntary disclosure program in this tax bill, we will be sending Americans a message, that it is OK to not pay your taxes, that you can get away with it because at some future point in time you can come forward without the risk of criminal prosecution.

The Senator from Arkansas and I agree on most things and work together on many things. I respect him enormously, and I know that his belief that working people and honest taxpayers will resent this program is absolutely heartfelt and legitimate. He suggested that the worker in a factory whose paycheck is subject to tax withholdings is somehow going to be disadvantaged and feel a sense of unfairness because that person does not have the easy availability of cheating as does another person within our society who might be self-employed or who otherwise has other kinds of opportunities available to him; we will merely be reinforcing that unfairness because that person has paid his taxes while in fact these other people have been able to escape it, then turn around, and come to the Government and have their criminal penalty forgiven. I heard the Senator from New Mexico say it would be a disgrace to send that message.

Mr. President, the message sent to Americans today under the current system is a disgrace. The message we would be sending by approving Senator BUMPER'S amendment would be to endorse the arrest system which is a disgrace, because we do not have a system that is fair today.

Before I talk about that system a minute or two, let me impress upon my colleagues the fact that the Baucus-Kerry proposal is not an amnesty program. I want to say it again: It is not an amnesty program. An amnesty program is a program where you totally forgive all wrongs and eliminate all tax liability completely. This is not what this amendment does.

The amendment will maintain a civil penalty that is stronger than the civil penalty we have today, and it will require payment of interest. It does not eliminate those things. The only thing it does is say that we are not going to impose criminal penalties on taxpayers who voluntarily come into the IRS and say, "I am behind.

People can be tax delinquent for different reasons. People can be behind because of foreclosures, because of problems in their businesses, because of personal setbacks, because of problems of sickness in the family. There are dozens of reasons why we might not want to criminally prosecute somebody who has fallen behind in their tax payments, and there are reasons why we would agree not to penalize them criminally. But they will not walk away scot-free; interest and civil penalties would still apply.

To say that honest taxpayers are going to be betrayed by this process is to ignore what the process does. I think that most people would be far happier knowing that someone who has not paid taxes in years is not only given an incentive to come forward and do so, but also, when he does so, he is paying in spades. They are paying not only the money they have not paid but also are paying a civil penalty on top of that, and they are paying interest.

In the face of a system today where we have so few criminal prosecutions, anyway, and where we have an enormous gap between our ability to collect taxes and the taxes that are owed, how can you turn around to the honest taxpayer and say: "Hey, we're going to let the system stay in place where the guy who is not paying his taxes is going to continue not to pay his taxes, and we're not going to be bothered by the fact that we don't have the resources to find that person"?

Mr. President, this is not an amnesty program. It is a limited voluntary disclosure program. In point of fact, all this program does is codify existing practice. It is precisely what the IRS does today. It is now new.

There is not one instance I know of where the IRS has criminally prosecuted a person who has come forward voluntarily.

All we are doing in this bill is giving visibility the ability to an existing program. We are giving the IRS the ability to go out to the country and advertise the fact that diligent taxpayers can come in to the IRS and make good on past tax bills. Last year, the IRS forgave 4.2 million people and raised $2 billion under their current policy of discretion. Our system has always wanted this way.

Why is this of concern? Why should we take this step in 1986, as we pass a dramatic, new tax bill? I should like to share with my colleagues some figures which are startling and important.

In 1976, the gap in taxes in the United States was about $44 billion—$44 billion that we could not get at, we could not collect. In the last 8 to 10 years, that has risen dramatically to the point where in 1984 it was about $100 billion. This year, IRS figures show that the cost of noncompliance is going to be $106 billion. That means, Mr. President, that more than one-half of the current budget deficit is lost annually because we do such a poor job of collecting taxes from those who try to cheat.

Mr. President, this country has a budget crisis because, each year, even more people chose not to pay what they owe. The IRS is losing ability to enforce the law. In 1964, about 95 percent of taxes owed were actually paid. Over the years, that has declined. Today only 81 percent of Americans are voluntarily paying their taxes. What does that mean? For every loss of 1 percent in voluntary compliance, we lose $5 billion in revenues to the Federal Government.

Part of the reason for this is that the IRS has been denied the resources it needs to audit, so the audit rate has declined to just 1.6 percent. That reflects a 46-percent decline in corporate audits and a 26-percent decline in individual audits in the past 10 years.

The result of this decline in audits is very simple. It has given rise to a perception among the American people that the tax system is lax and unfair.

The tax system is unfair because people know the other people get away with cheating. It has risen to an epidemic proportion, and the only answer now is to take extraordinary steps to bring people back into the tax payment process.

I respectfully invite the attention of my colleagues to a Daniel Yankovich survey which was conducted for the IRS. That survey showed that one in four Americans believe that less than half of all citizens comply with our tax laws and that a majority of Americans believe that tax cheating is becoming more prevalent. Most disturbing is the finding that 41 percent of the people indicated that they are certain that tax cheaters would not be caught.

In fact, Mr. President, I have to say that I was surprised as I listened to my colleagues say what a terrible message we will send if we assure people who came forward that they will not be prosecuted criminally.

Today, only one out of every 43,000 taxpayers is subject to criminal prosecution. What kind of message is that? What does that fact say about fairness, when the current system tells people that if they decide to cheat on their taxes they stand so little chance of being caught?

I respect the gut feeling of my colleagues that somehow this notion of a voluntary disclosure program is going to hurt the country. I respect that gut feeling. But we have something more to go on than a gut feeling here.

In the last couple of years 18 States have implemented an amnesty program of one kind or another. The experience of those States is what we ought to be talking about as we decide whether or not the Federal Government is going to join them. Amnesty at the State level is a time-tested program, and there are proven results.

Let me point to the State about which I know most—Massachusetts. In 1983, we implemented a one-time amnesty for a period of 3 months.

More than 30,000 amnesty applications were received from delinquent taxpayers from virtually every State in the United States of America and from 12 foreign countries and from people in all walks of life.

In Boston alone over 10,000 people lined up to come in and pay their back taxes. That program was followed immediately with a strong enforcement program which increased penalties, provided new computers to allow us to track taxpayers, and raised the general level of enforcement of our State tax laws.

The result of that experience, Mr. President, was a dramatic increase in our ability to be able to collect taxes.

I keep hearing people say, "To oppose this program because it will hurt our ability to collect taxes," but the experience in the States has been exactly the opposite.

We have seen increased tax collections and an increased respect for the tax system. People see the one-time amnesty, but they also see that a system that was unfair has been made fair. That is what this tax bill is all about, an effort to try to reinstill fairness into the tax structure in this country.

Over a 2-year period in Massachusetts, audit assessments were increased 92 percent. Seizure activity was up 317 percent, and referrals and criminal prosecution, the very thing that we are told an amnesty will defeat, went up 59 percent.

Mr. President, the figures are absolutely at odds with gut feelings. In addition, the overall amnesty and enforcement program in Massachusetts gave us $564 million in new revenues and it has led to a 15-percent increase in revenues after inflation and after economic growth had been taken out.

Opinion polls conducted in Massachusetts to determine if amnesty somehow sends the wrong message totally contradict that notion. Every opinion poll after the amnesty was put in place says that people in the State overwhelmingly supported the program. They understood that we had put back into the system a sense of fairness and a willingness of people to pay. There is an understanding by people that the system is serious about collecting and making people pay.

What we are voting on today does not come close to the Massachusetts program in terms of full amnesty. Again, all it does is codify current practice by which the IRS has the discretion not to prosecute, and it changes that into a mandatory statement they will not prosecute. It does this to entice people into the process and put them on the tax rolls.

Let me share with my colleagues very quickly, before I wind up, a few letters to the Commissioner of Taxation of Massachusetts.

DEAR COMMISSIONER: I read about you today in the Boston Globe and I thought that you might be interested that I have payed all my taxes due for the first time in three years. This has happened as a result of your public relations programs as well as your attitude that the tax enforcement should not project an image similar to the Gestapo which is what the IRS has become. The article also mentioned the Amnesty that you had which I did not avail myself of because, as could be expected, the IRS would use the amnesty list to put people in jail. I have read in the Globe that you are asking President Reagan to have a Federal Amnesty which if you run a concurrent state amnesty I will pay all my unreported back taxes.

Another letter:

DEAR MR. JACKSON: I was recently informed by a friend that you and Governor Dukakis are attempting to get the Federal Government to adopt the tax amnesty project that Massachusetts recently put into operation. Many people, myself included, who wanted to use the amnesty offer did not because their was the strong likelihood of problems with the IRS since they would not grant amnesty like Massachusetts.

If you are successful I will amend my state and federal tax forms for the last three years. And I think that with a combined Federal/State amnesty that many more people will do the same than was true with only the state amnesty.

Another letter:

I am one of those people who owes the Department of Revenue for under reported income but did not make use of the Amnesty Program last year. The reason I did not use it was because I and thousands of others in Massachusetts knew that our names would have to be given to the IRS because of the information swapping agreements between Massachusetts and the Federal Government.

I would very much like to pay what I owe to the Department of Revenue and will if you are successful in getting the IRS to adopt the program that you implemented in Massachusetts and which I understand has been copied in other states. As a self-employed person I know of very few people who own businesses or work for themselves and report all of their income, however, I feel that you and Governor Dukakis are the first to confront this problem headon and I feel that you have only scratched the surface. If the IRS adopts an Amnesty Program I think its safe to say that five times as many people would participate in a Massachusetts Tax Amnesty program if they knew that they could also pay off their back federal taxes without fear of punishment for past indiscretions.

Another letter:

DEAR MR. JACKSON: My lawyer told me that you are trying to get the President to call a tax amnesty just like the one you had in Massachusetts. I hope you can get this done because a lot of people who wanted to be part of the amnesty did not because the Federal tax people would not allow the Massachusetts amnesty to work with Federal taxes.

I would like to pay my taxes for the last few years but I am frightened as to what the Internal Revenue people would do to me. I hope you get them to agree to the amnesty and I think you should go on the radio and in the newspaper to tell people to write to their Senators and Representatives to help you.

Mr. President, again I come back to the most important point here. We keep hearing this somehow sends a message that will defeat current tax collection efforts. Current tax collection efforts are at a miserable level. If they continue to go downward at the rate they have now, Americans are going to understand that it does not matter what the marginal rate is, it does not matter what we do to close loopholes. Americans will know that no matter what the rate is and no matter what the state of the Tax Code, they will not have to pay because other people are not paying.

Finally, I spent 5 years as a prosecutor. I did not prosecute tax cases. I never have. But I prosecuted murderers, rapists, armed robberies, grand larcenies, organized crimes, and a host of other cases.

I know because I have appeared in front of judges and because I learned it in law school that part of the theory of criminal justice and of the law is that when necessary you use mitigating factors, when necessary leniency is its own tool in the propagation of respect for the law.

This is a classic example where this has happened in State after State. It has happened in New York, Illinois, California, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Colorado, Arizona, Alabama, Missouri, Kansas, Idaho, and North Dakota. We have a ream of experience which shows that respect for the law increases.

So I would ask my colleagues to think carefully. This is an important principle. If we vote for what my colleague from Arkansas is asking for we will be offered a choice between doing nothing because we philosophically do not agree with a notion of a partial forgiveness or doing nothing because we are going to leave the current system in place.

(Mrs. KASSEBAUM assumed the Chair.)

Mr. KERRY. I think the worker on any assembly line in this country, any honest taxpaying American who knows others have cheated but now are going to pay would be far happier knowing that a system is finally being put into place to put everybody back on the rolls.

I think the message it sends about fairness and enforcement is far, far stronger than a simple messsage "We don't like it, we are not going to do anything," because doing nothing guarantees a continued decline in enforcement, a continued rise in the revenue gap, and a continued sense of unfairness that people have about the Tax Code.

Thank you, Madam President.

□ 1410

Mr. BAUCUS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts. Because Senator KERRY is from the State of Massachusetts, he thoroughly understands Massachusetts' experience with a voluntary disclosure program in order to collect back taxes and collect bad debts.

Massachusetts has been a leader in this area. It was one of the first States to enact provisions encouraging citizens who have not paid their back State taxes to come forward and pay. That has happened not only in Massachusetts, but in many States. Many States have enacted voluntary disclosure or amnesty provisions, to encourage their citizens to pay back taxes—the State of California, for example, and the State of Illinois. There are, I think, Madam President, about 18 States in the last several years that have enacted a program of this kind.

Why have they done so? They have done so because back taxes have not been paid by citizens of those States and they have done so because it is a program that works.

Madam President, it works very well. At first there were many naysayers in all these States. The naysayer says, "No, it is a bad idea. It is not fair to the honest taxpayer. It is not fair to have some kind of voluntary disclosure or amnesty provision where you waive prosecution in order to get the deadbeats in. It is not fair to the honest taxpayers who pay their fair taxes."

To the contrary, the fact is, that in all these States public opinion polls show that people like the program. They like it because people have come in and paid up and because, in all these States, the programs have been one-shot programs. They have not gone on forever.

I think we should include the same kind of provision in the Federal Tax Code. I say so because there were $600 billion of uncollected Federal taxes in the last 6 years. At the rate of $100 billion a year, we have accumulated $600 billion of unpaid Federal income taxes and other taxes. These are taxes that are owed to the U.S. Government, but have not been paid—$600 billion. That, Madam President, is many times the annual deficits we have had. We could have a balanced budget if we had collected those back taxes.

The question is: Is there a way to do it, and how? Very essentially, the program is this: First, we have to have sticks—we have carrots, too, and I will outline those—but first we have to have sticks to encourage people to pay their back taxes.

What are those sticks? The sticks are greater penalties. The sticks are more auditors. The present audit rate of Federal tax returns is about 1.3 percent. People are playing the audit lottery. They are hoping they are not going to get audited.

In order to encourage people to come in, we are going to increase the number of auditors, and tell people that there is a greater chance you are going to be audited, so you better come in.

Second, we are telling you that you better pay your taxes because the penalties are substantially increased.

We also have carrots. What is the carrot? The carrot is if you come in and pay all of your back taxes, all of them, and if you pay interest on top of your back taxes—that is the interest that has accumulated because of the amount of the back taxes have not been paid—and if you pay, in addition, civil penalties—which, by the way are very substantial—then the Government agrees to waive criminal prosecution.

Now, Madam President, those civil penalties are very significant, and they have to be paid in order to qualify. For example, the civil penalties included in this bill are 75 percent for tax evasion; that is, 75 percent of your back taxes. Also, the penalty for substantial underreporting is 20 percent. The penalty for not filing a return is 1 percent.

So, what it amounts to is this: If you add up the back taxes that would have to be paid, plus the interest, which compounds, plus the penalties, that taxpayer has to pay twice his back taxes. That is what it all adds up to. And if he does so, and if he has not been notified that he is under investigation, then he is entitled to a waiver.

Madam President, this has been labeled as an amnesty provision. This is not amnesty.

What is amnesty? Amnesty is pardon; forgiveness. The provision in this bill provides that a taxpayer is not excused of this liability to pay back taxes. He has to pay all of his back taxes.

Second, the taxpayer has to pay interest on all the back taxes. That is compounded, and adds up, over a period of time, to be very substantial.

Third, the taxpayer has to pay the civil penalties. That is very significant. It almost has the effect of doubling the amount of back taxes.

There is no amnesty here. It is a voluntary disclosure program where, if you come in voluntarily and disclose, and you pay everything you owe, then Uncle Sam will waive criminal prosecution.

Madam President, this is very important for another reason. Recent polls show that one out of five Americns admit to cheating on their income taxes—one out of five. There are about 100 million taxpayers. So there are 20 million Americans out there who admit they have not paid approximately $100 billion on a yearly basis.

We should bring them back into the system on the condition that they pay their back taxes, pay interest, and pay their civil penalty. If so, they will not be prosecuted.

I think, as a practical matter, this is what is happening: A lot of Americans have not paid their back taxes because of the complexity of the code. The code has become so complex in the last couple of years that Americans think, by gosh, with all the loopholes in the Tax Code, the other guy is not paying his fair share, so Americans rationalize a little bit and say, "I will pay my fair share, but I will fudge a little."

The fact is a lot of Americans rationalize that fudging, rationalize underreporting, rationalize overdeducting, and have not been paying their share and now they are caught because they know they are felons and have not been living up to the tax laws.

I suggest that with the one-shot voluntary disclosure provision, because of the amendment I am going to offer now, that those Americans will want to come in. They will not be afforded the opportunity again, but at least they have the opportunity now. Because they know, if they do not come in now, with the increased auditors and increased penalties, Uncle Sam has a much better chance of getting them.

Madam President, I would be the first to admit that the voluntary disclosure provisions of the bill, although they are very good, are not perfect. To that end I have an amendment which I will send to the desk. Let me just briefly outline what this amendment is.

This amendment tightens up the voluntary disclosure provisions of the bill, to clarify several points that we originally intended to leave to the drafters of the implementing regulations, but now will add to the statute. Let me explain the changes.

First, the amendment requires that in order for a taxpayer to qualify for the voluntary disclosure provision, the taxpayer has to report the source of the income. The point is to address the potential case where a drug dealer comes in and he pays all the penalties, and so forth, but the criminal prosecution of the tax provision only is waived. Well, in order to make sure that the drug dealer could still be prosecuted under all the drug laws, we require, under this amendment, that the source of the income must be specifically indicated in order to even potentially qualify for voluntary disclosure.

Second, income from illegal activity does not qualify; that is, if a taxpayer has income from illegal activity, he is not entitled to the voluntary disclosure provisions of the bill.

Third, obviously, no fraud is allowed. I think that goes without saying. If a taxpayer comes in and falsely represents a source of income and attempts to get voluntary disclosure, it could then be revoked.

In addition, there is a 2-year sunset provision. That makes sure that this is a temporary program. It sunsets after 2 years in order to get the bulk of American taxpayers who have not paid back taxes. This, I think, fits in very nicely, Madam President, with the tax reform bill, which is a tax simplification bill.

Overall, this tax reform bill will increase Americans' confidence in the code. They will be less likely to rationalize, to fudge, to shave, to cut corners, because they know, if we pass this tax simplification bill, that everybody is more likely paying their fair share of taxes.

So I think it is part and parcel of tax reform.

There are a couple of other tightening provisions. But essentially that is what it is.

AMENDMENT NO. 2145 TO AMENDMENT NO. 2143 AS MODIFIED

Madam President, I now send the amendment to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] proposes an amendment numbered 2145 to amendment numbered 2143.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

SEC. 559. VOLUNTARY DISCLOSURE POLICY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), in the case of any violation of any tax law for any taxable period, the taxpayer shall not be liable for any Federal criminal penalty relating to tax administration under section 6103(b)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to such violation if full disclosure of such violation, and the source of the income with respect to such violation, is made to the Secretary of the Treasury or his designee before notice of an inquiry or investigation into the taxpayer's tax affairs is given to the taxpayer (or a related party) by the Internal Revenue Service, any other law enforcement agency, or any tax administration agency.

(b) SPECIFIC EXCEPTIONS.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any violation—

(1) of the National Firearms Act,

(2) related to income resulting from an action that is a violation of Federal, State, or local law (other than tax law), or

(3) with respect to which the taxpayer made any representation pursuant to an application for relief under this section which is false or fraudulent in an material respect.

(c) REGULATIONS TO IMPLEMENT POLICY.—Subsection (a) shall take effect upon the issuance by the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate of such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such subsection. Such regulations shall be issued no later than January 1, 1987, and may provide that subsection (a) not apply to certain categories of persons. Subsection (a) shall not apply after the date which is 2 years after the date of the issuance of such regulations. In no event shall subsection (a) apply unless section 9505 of the Internal Revenue Code is in effect.

(d) REGULATIONS TO IMPLEMENT POLICY.—Subsection (a) shall take effect upon the issuance by the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate of such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such subsection. Such regulations shall be issued no later than January 1, 1987, and may provide that subsection (a) not apply to certain categories of persons.

(e) PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN FOR VOLUNTARY DISCLOSURE POLICY, ETC.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall supplement existing taxpayer service programs with a comprehensive publicity campaign concerning the provisions of subsection (a) and a public relations program to restore public confidence in the Federal tax system.

(2) PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN TECHNIQUES.—The publicity campaign shall include public press releases, annual notices to taxpayers, and notices in Internal Revenue Service publications for general public usage.

Mr. BUMPERS. Madam President, I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I think we are going to have a vote here momentarily. We are going to try to restrict that vote to a 15-minute vote. If there is a second vote, it will follow immediately, and after these two votes, I think there will be no further rollcall votes today. We would like to do more business today.

Mr. BUMPERS. Madam President, I yield to the Senator from Montana for an additional comment without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, the essential thrust of this amendment is to tighten up the existing voluntary disclosure in the law today, as well as tighten up the voluntary disclosure provisions in the bill. There is a voluntary disclosure policy in effect today. The IRS practices the very same provisions that we are addressing both in the bill and by my amendment. My amendment tightens up present practice, because it sunsets it.

There is an involuntary IRS voluntary disclosure program right now. We tighten it up by sunsetting. We also tighten it up by requiring the taxpayer to report the source of the income. We also tighten it up because we say if a taxpayer engages in fraudulent information and tries to qualify, the waiver no longer applies.

There are other tightening provisions which we do not have time to enumerate here. But the thrust of this amendment is to tighten up the voluntary disclosure provisions that already exist as IRS policy today and tighten up the voluntary disclosure provisions that are in the bill.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I will not oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, Mr. BAUCUS. I am pleased that he has modified his amendment, at my suggestion, to tighten the scope and duration of voluntary disclosure. As modified, the amendment would make implementation of voluntary disclosure and immunity from criminal penalties contingent upon appropriation of an additional $200 million for IRS enforcement activities. It would also make the provision inapplicable to income from illegal sources and limit immunity from criminal penalties to a 2-year period. These modifications make it more likely that the voluntary disclosure provision will achieve its stated objective of fostering compliance with our tax laws. It is only because the Senator has accepted these tightening modifications that I will not oppose it. The amendment makes a bad amendment less bad.

Notwithstanding these improvements, the concept of immunity from criminal penalties is very troubling to me. I have always opposed Federal tax amnesty proposals because I believe they undermine people's respect for the integrity of our tax laws. Amnesty sends the wrong message to the vast majority of taxpayers who voluntarily comply. Accordingly, it would not distress me if the amendment to strike the voluntary disclosure provisions were to prevail. If it does not, I would hope that the conferees would not include any form of tax amnesty in the conference report.

Mr. BUMPERS. Madam President, I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Montana. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER], the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM], the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. LAXALT], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER], are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON] would vote nay.

So the motion to table amendment No. 2145 was rejected.

□ 1440

Mr. LONG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Madam President, I was not in the previous discussion, but let me say the Baucus amendment is basically the committee position. The Baucus proposal merely codifies what we believe, that someone seeking such amnesty as the law provides should not have his case decided on a case-by-case basis. There ought to be some language in the law so he can see what his position is. That is basically what the Baucus amendment does. I think we ought to agree to the Baucus amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the second-degree amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BUMPERS. Since the motion to table was defeated and the Baucus amendment is an amendment to strike and insert the following language and the intent of the Bumpers amendment is to strike the tax amnesty provision in the bill, now the vote recurs on the Bumpers amendment. Is the effect of that to strike both the tax amnesty provision in the bill and the modification of the Senator from Montana?

□ 1450

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second-degree amendment of the Senator from Montana has not been agreed to yet. The effect of it would be to reinsert the committee's position.

Mr. BUMPERS. I am sorry, Madam President; I did not understand that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Baucus amendment with its modifications reinserts the committee's position.

Mr. BUMPERS. If the Baucus amendment is agreed to, then would the Bumpers amendment on the next vote simply strike the Baucus amendment as well as the language of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The language of the Baucus amendment would replace the language of the Bumpers amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS. So that if his amendment is adopted and the Bumpers amendment is adopted, then we have tax amnesty as modified by the Baucus amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana, the Baucus amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

AMENDMENT NO. 2143

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM].

The amendment (No. 2143) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2146

(Purpose: To clarify the provisions of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 relating to obligations directly or indirectly guaranteed by the Federal Government)

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GORE. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate there will be no more rollcall votes, but the managers would like to dispose of 20 to 30 of the amendments yet this afternoon.

So I urge my colleagues to stick around if you have amendments to be disposed of by voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] proposes an amendment numbered 2146.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2710, line 22, strike out "or".

On page 2711, line 11, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a comma and "or".

On page 2711, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following new subparagraph:

(D) if—

(i) such facility is a thermal transfer facility,

(ii) is to be built and operated by the Elk Regional Resource Authority, and

(iii) is to be on land leased from the United States Air Force at Arnold Engineering Development Center near Tullahoma, Tennessee.

On page 2712, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following new subparagraph:

(D) In the case of a solid waste disposal facility described in paragraph (2)(D), the aggregate face amount of obligations to which paragraph (1) applies shall not exceed $25,000,000.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, this amendment has been accepted by the manager of the bill and the ranking minority member.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Chair cannot hear and the Members cannot hear.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will not belabor this. It has been accepted by the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member. If I could explain it just briefly, it is a technical amendment, not a transition amendment. There are five counties in southern middle Tennessee that have been trying for 8 years to put together one of these facilities that burns solid waste to create steam, and one of the customers for the steam is an Air Force facility. It is not a take-or-pay contract. It is a normal contract of the kind that they are entering into in these kinds of facilities all over the country.

But there is a danger, according to their bond counsel, that this formal contract could be construed as a Government guarantee of the kind that would prevent them from getting the favorable tax treatment on their bonds the same as all other such facilities get.

Everybody who has looked at it on the committee agrees that it is technical in nature, it is designed to clarify what the intent of the law really is to begin with, the 1984 law, and as a result I would ask my colleagues to approve it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I personally favor the amendment and I am sure the chairman of the committee favors the amendment. I think this is one that, when it comes to the vote, he will have the majority of the vote for it.

There is an absent Senator who apparently opposes the amendment and is not here at this point. On his behalf I have to insist that this amendment go over. If he wants a vote on it then we can vote on it Tuesday. At any rate, I would be glad to give the Senator the name of the Senator and what the problem is. But since that Senator is not here and he is absent and would oppose the amendment, I have no choice but to ask the Senator that he hold the amendment over and bring it up at a time when we can have a rollcall vote on it if need be.

I assure him I will vote for his amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, let me indicate what is happening to the Senator from Tennessee. We are taking no transitional rules. One of the Senators out here thinks this is a transitional rule. We did not think it is. If he were here, he wants to argue it is a transitional.

Because I indicated any Senator who thought something was a transition rule, I will hold it over.

I did not have a chance to tell the Senator that. I just found out about this in the last 3 or 4 minutes.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on this amendment be deferred until a point prior to the passage of the bill Monday or Tuesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRASSLEY). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2147

(Purpose: To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide tax-exempt status for organizations which assist in introducing into public use technology developed by qualified organizations)

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] proposes an amendment numbered 2147.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2207, before line 14, insert the following new subsection:

(e) TAX-EXEMPT STATUS FOR ORGANIZATIONS INTRODUCING INTO PUBLIC USE TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPED BY QUALIFIED ORGANIZATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 501 (relating to exemption from tax on corporations, certain trusts, etc.) is amended—

(A) by redesignating subsection (m) as subsection (n), and

(B) by inserting after subsection (1) the following new subsection:

"(m) ORGANIZATIONS INTRODUCING INTO PUBLIC USE TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPED BY QUALIFIED ORGANIZATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this title, an organization shall be treated as an organization organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes if such organization—

"(A) is organized and operated exclusively—

"(1) to provide for (directly or by arranging for and supervising the performance by independent contractors)—

"(I) reviewing technology disclosures from qualified organizations,

"(II) obtaining protection for such technology through patents, copyrights, or other means, and

"(III) licensing, sale, or other exploitation of such technology,

"(ii) to distribute the income therefrom, after payment of expenses and other amounts agreed upon with originating qualified organizations, to such qualified organizations, and

"(iii) to make research grants to such qualified organizations,

"(B) regularly provides the services and research grants described in subparagraph (A) exclusively to 1 or more qualified organizations, except that research grants may be made to such qualified organizations through an organization which is controlled by 1 or more organizations each of which—

"(i) is an organization described in subsection (c)(3) or the income of which is excluded from taxation under section 115, and

"(ii) may be a recipient of the services or research grants described in subparagraph (A), and

"(C) derives at least 80 percent of its gross revenues from providing services to qualified organizations located in the same state as the state in which such organization has its principal office; and was incorporated on July 20, 1981.

"(2) QUALIFIED ORGANIZATIONS.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified organization' has the same meaning given to such term by section 30(e)(6)."

On page 2207, line 14, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)".

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, this amendment will clarify the tax status of a nonprofit organization that assists in taking technology out of university laboratories and transferring it to industry and commerce. Clarifying the tax status of this organization will encourage and stimulate the transfer of technology so that the economy and the public will have the benefits to be derived from new products.

The need for practical transfer of research results to the marketplace appears to be greater than ever. The President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness has warned that the United States is losing its ability to compete in world markets. The Commission's 1985 report notes that the United States had lost world market share in 7 out of 10 high-technology sectors.

Although foreign trade barriers have contributed to this decline, the commission stated that a basic problem is the failure of American high technology companies to translate new technology consistently into competitive products. The Commission also noted that the United States has failed to provide its own technologies to manufacturing. Robotics, automation, and statistical quality control were all first developed in the United States, but in recent years, they have been more effectively applied in other countries.

The Subcommittee on Science, Technology, and Space held hearings on technology transfer last year. During the course of those hearings, we learned of the development of new institutions aimed at bringing technology out of the laboratory. Cooperative service organizations represent one such promising new institution. These privately funded nonprofit organizations form a necesary link in the process of effectively bringing technology out of our Nation's laboratories by identifying and commercializing new technology. They license new technologies, help form startup companies, and assist in establishing research and development partnerships.

A recent Tax Court decision, however, threatens to cut off this innovative mechanism for promoting technology transfer in my home State of Washington. This amendment takes a step toward improving our Nation's ability to transfer technology by clarifying the status of a privately-funded nonprofit organization working with the University of Washington. This clarification will promote the development of this cooperative service organization, and help ensure that our Nation remains on the cutting edge of technological change.

It is as narrow as it is, Mr. President, because of certain concerns on the part of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, Senator WEICKER. It has been checked with the majority staff and with the minority staff and has been, I believe, approved by both.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, the reason I asked for a temporary delay is that I had a mistaken impression of what the revenue impact was. I was wrong. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion on the amendment?

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, as I understand it, this amendment overrules a Tax Court case that said that this entity could be tax exempt.

Mr. GORTON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BRADLEY. And that this would allow them to be tax exempt and engage in the marketing of patents.

Mr. GORTON. Yes; the Senator is correct.

All of the profits from the foundation will go to the University of Washington which is, of course, a tax-exempt organization itself, or to scholarships and fellowships for that or other universities.

Mr. BRADLEY. Does this apply to any other university, other than the University of Washington?

Mr. GORTON. It does not, I tell my colleague from New Jersey, because of concerns about a generic bill which this Senator introduced, which would have general applicability, concerns expressed by the Senator from Connecticut, who wanted hearings on that bill before it was generally applicable.

Mr. BRADLEY. So, to your knowledge, no other university is able to market their patents as a tax-exempt entity?

Mr. GORTON. That is not quite correct. When this organization or foundation was put together, it had only very slight differences, as I understand it, from a number of similar foundations which are engaged in this kind of efforts which are tax-exempt.

Mr. BRADLEY. So, to your knowledge, no other university uses a 501(c)3 to market patents?

Mr. GORTON. I believe so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion on this amendment?

Mr. BRADLEY. One last question. Do you know what the revenue impact of this amendment is?

Mr. GORTON. As far as I know, I would tell my colleague, it is minimal or would almost be nonexistent, but the organization could not exist without it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion on the amendment? If not, the discussion is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2147) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we are calling Members on this side to encourage them to come to the floor. I hope that the managers can dispose of another 8 or 10, or more, amendments. I have a feeling that, come Tuesday, about 3 o'clock, about 50 Members who did not show up today or will not show up on Monday will be demanding time to debate their amendments and we could extend that final passage from 4 o'clock. It could be midnight on Tuesday.

I know that there are a number of our colleagues who cannot be here beyond 6 p.m. on Tuesday. So I hope that those who are really serious about their amendments will come to the floor this afternoon and cooperate with the manager. If there are yeas and nays ordered, the votes on the amendment will be postponed until early Tuesday morning.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1530

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

AMENDMENT NO. 2146

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have an amendment that was previously sent to the desk, and I am informed that the Senator who was absent and had raised a question about it has now signed off on it. I do not think anything else needs to be said about it. But I ask for a vote on it, not a record vote unless somebody else wants one. I ask that we just go ahead and agree to it at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator is correct. As far as I am concerned, I am ready to have a vote.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I agree. It has been cleared. That is fine with me, Mr. President.

Mr. GORE. This amendment which my colleague, the senior Senator from Tennessee, and I are offering will enable five Tennessee counties to receive tax exempt bonds to build a thermal transfer facility on property leased from the U.S. Air Force near Tullahoma, TN. The purpose of this amendment is to clarify that the contract which this facility will have with the Air Force for steam produced at the facility does not constitute a Federal guarantee under section 103(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1984.

Five counties in middle Tennessee, Bedford, Coffee, Lincoln, Franklin, Lincoln, and Moore, have formed the Elk Resource Authority to build and operate this facility. Officials from these counties are to be congratulated for having developed an innovative solution to solid waste disposal with this project, and we are grateful for the opportunity to help make it a reality.

I want to emphasize that this amendment is not a transition rule, and it has been cleared by all interested parties. My colleague from Tennessee and I deeply appreciate the willingness of the chairman, the ranking minority member of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Ohio, and other interested parties to accept this technical amendment.

Mr. SASSER. The amendment that my colleague from Tennessee and I are offering makes technical corrections in the committee bill which affect a significant project in Tennessee. We are not offering a transitional rule amendment. Our amendment has therefore been cleared by all interested parties, including the Senator from Ohio.

Our amendment deals with a thermal transfer facility. Local officials in five Tennessee counties joined together to form the Elk Resource Authority. These officials from Bedford, Coffee, Lincoln, Franklin, and Moore Counties banded together on this important project which will benefit their area.

The purpose of the Elk Resource Authority is to build and operate a thermal transfer facility on property leased from the U.S. Air Force at Arnold Engineering Development Center near Tullahoma, TN. This facility will produce steam for purchase by the Air Force at Arnold.

This project is particularly attractive as it produces steam in an effective and environmentally sound manner. Solid waste is brought to the facility from throughout the region. This waste is then disposed of and in the process, energy is recovered in the form of steam. This steam will then be sold to the Air Force for its energy needs.

This environmentally attractive project is dependent upon tax exempt financing to become a reality. Local government officials have expressed concern to me that this tax reform bill threatens the availability of this needed financing. My colleague and I share their concern and offer our amendment to ensure that this very worthy project can go forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment (No. 2146) was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for a quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2148

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], for himself and Mr. DOLE, proposes an amendment numbered 2148.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1515, between lines 21 and 22, insert:

(16) CERTAIN TRUCKS.—The amendments made by section 271 shall not apply to trucks, tractor units, and trailers which a privately held truck leasing company headquartered in Des Moines, Iowa, contracted to purchase in September 1985.

On page 1509, between lines 21 and 22 insert:

Paragraph (5) of section 202(d) is amended by adding at the end thereof new subparagraph (o) as follows—

(o) A project is described in this paragraph if—

(i) a commitment letter was entered into with a financial institution on January 23, 1986 for the financing of the project,

(ii) the project involves inter-city communication links (including microwave and fiber optics communications systems and related property),

(iii) the project consists of communications links between—

(a) Omaha, Nebraska and Council Bluffs, Iowa,

(b) Waterloo, Iowa and Sioux City, Iowa,

(c) Davenport, Iowa and Springfield, Illinois, and

(iv) the estimated cost of such project is approximately $13,000,000.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, this amendment deals with two instances that the committee meant to include in the original bill that were inadvertently left out. If there is any further clarification which needs to be done, I will ask the chairman of the committee to do that. I ask for the consideration of these amendments at this time.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Iowa has two parts, one relating to a company called Teleconnect.

We thought in the drafting of the bill that Teleconnect was covered in the transition of the bill because we covered a larger company, of which we thought Teleconnect was a part. I think it is a technical drafting error, why Teleconnect was not covered.

The other involved Ruan Trucking. At about 9 o'clcock at night on the night we were drafting the bill, we received final information and intended that Ruan be in the bill. The bill was filed at noon the next day and it was not. Someplace between our committee and the joint committee which was doing the final costing it was dropped out.

Mr. President, I have no other explanation for it but that. It was our intention that it be in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is——

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I report there is a strong objection on this side to the amendment. Therefore, I object. I have to suggest that the Senator withdraw it until a certain Senator can be consulted in terms of his personally coming to the floor, or until he removes his objection.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1610

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCONNELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I say to the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator PACKWOOD, that I believe the Finance Committee made important and commendable reforms in the area of international taxation. But I do want to clarify a few points concerning international banking.

To limit potential abuses, the committee defined "bona fide" banking in the international context. A bona fide bank is defined as one which regularly and continually conducts with unrelated parties at least one of several traditonal banking activities, such as taking deposits from the public, making loans to the public, and so on. It also must do so on a "substantial" basis. Although the "substantial" test is drafted in a complex manner, I assume it is obvious that the committee did not intend it to undercut the definition I just described. Thus, for example, a bank the liabilities of which consist substantially of deposits from the public will not be disqualified if some of its assets are not loans to the public, so long as it does regularly and continually make loans to the public. Similarly, a bank the significant majority of the income of which is derived from loans to the public will not be disqualified because it has substantial shareholder equity, so long as it actively, regularly and continually solicits deposits from the public.

Mr. PACKWOOD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Am I also correct that the term "public" for this purpose means unrelated individuals, corporations, governments, banks, and other entities?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes, the Senator is correct, assuming, of course, that he is talking about broad multiple public dealings, rather than a single or limited number of dealings with unrelated entities.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the chairman.

I would also like to ask about the committee report on bona fide banking. The report states that loans will not be treated as loans if they are negotiated by another. I understand this was meant to prevent passive buying of receivables and so on. I assume it was not meant to preclude bank-to-bank participations entered into in the normal course of business. Participations are a prevalent form of lending in both domestic and international banking. They occur when a lead bank "lays off" a portion of a large loan to a group of participating banks. The participating banks investigate, independent of the lead bank, the credit of the borrower, and are fully subject to the credit risk presented by the borrower. They typically are not guaranteed in any way by the lead bank. This is one of the few ways large credit facilities can be put together, and it prudently reduces the exposure of any one bank.

Mr. PACKWOOD. The Senator is correct. The committee report language was not intended to preclude bank-to-bank participations where the participating bank is in fact at risk with regard to the borrower and performs other traditional banking activities, such as investigating the credit of the borrowers, in connection with the transactions.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the chairman.

My final question relates to the third test of bona fide banking, which involves the international capital markets. The proposed statutory language refers to underwriters of initial issues and brokers. I assume that an active dealer in securities in the secondary market, who purchases debt obligations for public resale and distribution in the international capital markets, also meets this test?

Mr. PACKWOOD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the chairman.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

ALAN EMORY'S PHILIPPINES COVERAGE

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, in addition to its distinction as one of the Nation's finest regional newspapers, the Watertown Daily Times also employs as its Washington correspondent the respected dean of the New York press corps, Alan Emory. On occasion, Mr. Emory is dispatched to distant places to bring home to his readers, and they are far and wide in New York, not only in northern New York, his own unique perspective on world affairs. Such was the case recently when Mr. Emory visited the Philippines to interview President Corazon Aquino and other members of the new government there. The result was an insightful series of articles. For the benefit of my colleagues and students across the country who received the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in libraries and who will not have had access to the original series, I ask unanimous consent that the articles be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AQUINO'S IN CHARGE

(By Alan Emory)

MANILA.—The first time she experienced her new-found power, President Corazon C. Aquino says, is when she visited Camp Aguinaldo, the military headquarters here, where her husband, assassinated Sen. Benigno Aquino, had been imprisoned.

It was, she said in a 45-minute interview at the Malacanang Palace Guest House, "a very nervous experience. There was always a moment of fear."

Previously she had pleaded with authorities there, unsuccessfully, to release her husband, but now things had "really changed. It was a 180-degree turn.

"Here I come with my military escort. All the generals are there, just waiting. For the first time I felt I was really president."

"I guess I'm not a traditional politician," she confessed with a smile. "If my husband were here you would be facing a man really enjoying the presidency."

However, there is a growing feeling in Manila that Mrs. Aquino is settling into her new job, politician or no.

The interview took place in a room with white walls, flags and a silk emblem of the Philippine presidency, a carved wooden archway and red patterned oriental rugs.

Mrs. Aquino, wearing a white dress with a diagonal pattern on top, no jewelry except for small earrings and a watch, settled down on a brocaded bench surrounded by large oriental vases on the floor.

She smiled frequently and answered many questions with her arms crossed.

She was, she says, given her new role "for a special reason. I have to refer to myself now as a politician, but not a traditional politician."

She says she is grateful for the opportunity, but that it is not a question of liking it. When she accepted the draft to oppose Ferdinand E. Marcos, she adds, "I made up my mind to do the best to win. When I assumed office I committed myself to doing a good job.

"I am a very private person. I loved my privacy, and I have lost that. I have lost my freedom."

Her older children, she confesses, are "not too happy" about her being president because "they have lost their privacy, too."

When President Reagan telephoned her last week—the first call he had made since the late February take-over—it was 11:30 at night Manila time. Mrs. Aquino had been watching television and, she says, a daughter was around, so being up late was no problem.

About the only time she seemed to bridle a bit was when she was asked if she were really in charge. "Ask the cabinet ministers," she replied stiffly.

She readily concedes there are differences within the cabinet, but she says, "This is what democracy is all about, unless it hampers the presidency. We were all in this together. We will have to answer to the people."

Mrs. Aquino, a Catholic, describes herself as "a deeply religious person," and she says religion has played an important role in her rise to the presidency.

When it comes to the question of the Filipino population, she acknowledges that her husband, as a provincial governor, tried to limit the population, but she says she herself has no policy to deal with "the population explosion."

She wants to encourage urban dwellers to travel to less populated rural areas and to boost small business.

"None of us ever thought the February revolution would happen," she says, reflectively, round tinted glasses shading her eyes.

She made frequent gestures with her hand in describing the Filipinos as "a peaceful people."

She wants to keep her options open on the American bases at Clark Airfield and Subic Bay, a naval installation. The revenue they generate is important, she concedes, but "many things are important, and I will answer when the time comes" to make a decision on the renewal of their lease in 1991.

Mrs. Aquino acknowledges that she has no political party base, but she links her popularity to keeping "in close touch with the people." She will visit the provinces, and, she says, "I am here because of the people. While I still have popularity I plan to continue a dialogue with the Philippine people."

She confesses her government is still not prepared to carry out any major economic program, but she looks at a project of former President Ramon Magsaysay installing artesian wells around the country.

"He was remembered for that," she says, and she is considering a "Cory Aquino Project" to improve the water situation that would not involve a large amount of money and could be done "quite easily," with private sector involvement.

Mrs. Aquino says, with obvious satisfaction, that she has been "able to awake large numbers of private sector enthusiasts, and I don't want to let that go. I want to sustain this new-found commitment."

ENRILE NEARLY HANDED COUNTRY "ON A SILVER PLATTER"

(By Alan Emory)

MANILA.—Butter wouldn't melt in Juan Ponce Enrile's mouth. But it might freeze.

The man who finds "no problem at all" in switching from defense minister under deposed Philippine President Ferdinand E. Marcos to defense minister under President Corazon C. Aquino appears cold, calculating, almost arrogant.

To suggestions that he is biding his time to seize power he replies, matter-of-factly, "If I wanted any more power than in this ministry I would have seized the government. It was being given to me on a silver platter by President Marcos."

He says 85 percent of the "entire military organization's firepower" was available to go either way, and he adds, almost off-handedly, "We had no objection whatsoever to anybody, to give it to any one. But we did give (it) to the civilian government . . . the civilian authority, because that is actually our political ideal, (the ideal) of the younger officers."

In contrast with the other members of the so-called "Harvard Mafia" in the Aquino administration, the 62-year-old law-trained Enrile has a flat, emotionless delivery and manner that can chill an interviewer.

When he is asked about Mrs. Aquino's narrative of her experience going to Camp Aguinaldo, seat of the defense ministry, to plead for the release of her then-imprisoned husband, Benigno, Enrile replies calmly that she did visit him once or twice, but "most of the time she wrote me letters," which he passed on to his superiors.

That, apparently, was all he did. His explanation sounded like an echo of the defendants at the Nuremberg trial.

"I find no difficulty in it because I was acting as an administrator," he said in a recent interview arranged through the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies. "My personal choices were different from my own official action. . . There was no emotion involved."

The situation, he conceded reluctantly, was "unpleasant," but he added, "I was acting in accordance with policies established by authority higher than mine . . .

"I am guided by my conscience."

His recollection of events immediately preceding Marcos' overthrow differ somewhat from those of Armed Forces Chief of Staff Fidel V. Ramos, who also made the Marcos-to-Aquino shift, but, according to observers, did so as a professional soldier.

General Ramos, in a separate interview, said he and a handful of troops jogged out Aguinaldo's gate and over to Enrile's compound, expecting to be fired on at any moment, and Marcos might have ended the revolution right then. But they got through without incident.

The Enrile version is that the revolution was not an "overnight activity" and "could have happened a year later, six months later without an election" and would have occurred at "some future time."

Enrile's conversion is thought to have been spurred by the information that Marcos was preparing to arrest him because of the impression the defense boss was keeping one foot in each political camp.

Western diplomats are not very enthusiastic about Enrile, who says he has no plans to resign his cabinet post in three years or so and retire.

"Many people in the government view him as a major part of the (internal tension) problem," says one American official in Manila. "It is not surprising there is a certain residue of suspicion.

However, the official adds that Enrile wants the government to succeed and "will make a considerable effort" to that end. "He won't hesitate to express his own views on what he perceives as mistakes in the government, but he did that under Marcos."

Experts note that Enrile has a "regional," rather than a national, political constituency, and that, unlike many other cabinet members, never served in the Philippine Senate.

Enrile himself insists he has "no intention" of becoming a civilian president.

If his almost expressionless reaction to an ambush in his home province of Cagayan staged by Communist-leaning rebels and their murder of two newsmen and a former close Army associate came as a surprise, his biting comments on the controversial wholesale replacement of local officials by the new administration did not.

To him the substitution of "people who were never elected, some said to be of questionable stature," could only invite popular resistance, build tension and "loosen political stability."

He would not lay blame by name, but, when asked if the problem did not come under the local government ministry run by

Aquilino Pimintel, he told the questioner, "You are a good cross-examiner."

He argued, and lost, within the cabinet, against the replacement policy. Rather than try to keep internal differences of opinion under wraps and explain simply that the policy had been approved, he commented coolly, "Whether they agree or not, that's my position."

Of himself he says, "I seldom talk unless I have a reason to talk." When asked for comment on view of others, he replies bluntly, "I cannot read minds."

Western experts rating key members of the new Philippine government give high marks to many and shrug off others. They are cautious about General Ramos.

But when it comes to Enrile they express a subdued negativism as though they recognize a real danger spot.

After talking to the defense minister a reporter can quickly understand why.

SHOES, FEW WINDOWS

(By Alan Emory)

MANILA.—The shoes are all there.

Racks and racks of them, all colors and styles—blue, red, pink, cream, high-heels, low-heels, medium-heels.

A large basket is filled with sunglasses, another with sandals. There is a box crammed with umbrellas.

All of this is on view at Malacanang Palace (last syllable pronounced "yang"), where thousands of ticket-holders file through daily to gawk and shake their heads in dismay and wonderment. No photographs are allowed inside.

The palace itself is an unprepossessing place from the outside, a whitewashed long structure, Spanish-style, with very few windows. Imelda Marcos didn't like them.

There are photographs of deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos stripped to the waist, in bathing trunks and wearing a baseball-type cap, looking super-virile, and a painting of him bare-chested in a field of sugar cane.

The shoes, of course, are the focus of attention.

The woman in charge of them applied for a job at the palace after the revolution and got the plum concession.

Has she tried on any of the shoes? Certainly not.

Anyway, they are size seven and a half. Too big.

Although the legendary black bras and panties are not on display now, there are innumerable gowns, some designed for the 1986 inaugural, which occurred just prior to Marcos' ouster. They share space with 15 coats of sable, mink and ermine—perfect for Manila's tropical climate—blouses, feather boas and a bulletproof kevlar-lined vest (for her) and raincoat (for him).

Imelda's bedroom holds a huge canopy bed with 20 pillows and gauzy curtains, an oxygen tank nearby (for her husband?), a piano and ceramic figures in lighted cases.

Add to that a painting composed of buildings which spell out "Imelda Marcos," as well as hand-carved chandeliers in the ballroom with recessed vaults above them, wooden carved square entry ways with fleur-de-lis openings, stained-glass doors, inlay tables and a $7,000 toy car that runs on gasoline—for a grandchild—and has two silk red hearts on it, one saying "Imelda," the other "Marcos."

There are heavy pictures with mother-of-pearl figures, and Imelda's dressing room has mirrors framed in large light bulbs bigger than those provided for Broadway and Hollywood stars.

The private Marcos study has floor-to-ceiling bookcases. The library contains a blackboard map showing where Army Chief of Staff Fedel V. Ramos and his defecting troops had holed up.

The former president's bedroom is filled with hospital equipment, exercise machines, an oxygen tank—and a special escape door. That doesn't count a private two-room hospital, fully equipped.

At the end of the palace tour a visitor sees stacks of empty trunks that the Marcoses couldn't fill before they had to flee the country.

More than 30,000 Filipinos crowd through the palace every weekend. The lines form early, and citizens charge that wads of eagerly sought tickets are often pocketed by officials and police to hand out to friends or to "scalp" for up to $2.50 apiece.

The government is now considering charging a fee to visit the palace on certain days. That would certainly help the local economy, which can use all the revenue it can collect, but any significant charge would be beyond the means of the average Filipino.

Tourism Minister Jose Antonio Gonzales, a former employee of General Telephone, Del Monte Foods and Tupperware in California and the Far East, quips that his qualification for his cabinet post was having been an international tourist.

The Philippines, he concedes, has a very poor tourist image, spurred by a "sensationalist" press. The top tourist market is Japan, but there are more American arrivals because of the large number of Filipinos returning from the United States.

Gonzales is launching an ad campaign to popularize his country, using a slogan "Come Celebrate the New Spirit."

He got his job because assassinated Sen. Benigno Aquino, husband of President Corazon C. Aquino, was his best friend, and he applied for it five years ago in hopes of a government turnaround. When it occurred Mrs. Aquino remembered, "as she does most things."

Part of his problem was that Imelda Marcos' friends ran all the duty-free stores and turned over to the government about 20 percent of what they should have. One Marcos crony, Roman Cruz, who still lives at the Manila Hotel, the city's swankest, bought a choice retail location in San Francisco across from Nieman-Marcus and Macy's. The government wants to sell it.

When a reporter asked what Cruz was still doing at the hotel, Gonzales replied, "I guess he's counting his money."

The government is turning some of the 38 Marcos vacation homes in the country into tourist spots, while others will be sold.

Travel agents and writers will be brought to the Philippines, and beach areas will be improved and given road access they lack now.

For about $2 million, says Gonzales, the island of Corregidor can be turned into a prime attraction, with the elimination of "gingerbread boxes" and the requirement that no building be higher than a coconut tree.

Gonzales says he wants "Asian architecture and western plumbing."

His own ministry is loaded with deadwood, but he is reluctant to fire the full 80-percent surplus because of the already staggering unemployment.

Some employes are known as "15-30s" because they "just show up on the 15th and 30th of each month."

As a group of reporters organized by the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies was finishing its tour of Malacanang Palace the other day, one approached a Filipino in the long line, and the following dialogue ensued:

"I am an American journalist. What do you think of all this?"

"Fantastic," was the reply.

"Have you been here before?"

"No, this is the first time."

"Where are you from?"

"I'm from Chicago."

AQUINO'S STAYING POWER MUCH IN QUESTION

(By Alan Emory)

MANILA.—Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, the chief of staff of the New Armed Forces of the Philippines, puts it bluntly: "I don't see how the Philippines can go it alone against external threats in the future. The (American) bases contribute to external security. We feel they are necessary."

The future of the American bases—Clark Air Field and Subic Bay Naval Base— "will be up to the Philippine people" when presented to them in a plebiscite, says President Carazon C. Aquino.

The United States "will be with us for some time," says Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile. "It would be difficult to consider the American presence in this part of the world eliminated."

"So many say they are speaking for the people," says Vice President and Foreign Minister Salvador H. Laurel. If the people wanted to take the bases back the U.S. would "bow" to their will.

The bases do "not have that much depth" as an issue, says a top-ranking Western diplomat. "The bases are not a major political issue. Some people fear that in a referendum the bases will win." But government officials in Washington call the bases the best bargain the U.S. can boast.

Differing views of the bases—the U.S. lease runs out in 1991—reflect some of the political strains that create questions about the staying power of Mrs. Aquino's government.

Laurel wanted to run for president himself and was threatening an independent candidacy that would have doomed the Aquino movement. The Times has learned that, at the urging of Heherson (Sonny) Alvarez, then informal Aquino ambassador in the U.S. and now agrarian reform minister, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., sent a cable to Laurel, pleading with him to keep unity in the anti-Marcos forces. The message helped prevent a separate Laurel candidacy, and now, one observer says, he is "welded to her (Mrs. Aquino) like a Siamese twin. He has been quite careful not to separate from her personally. He realizes his influence is greater when she has confidence in him. I think she trusts him."

Said Laurel, in an interview in his crowded office, reflecting a government in transition, "I give her advice when I think I should because she needs it."

Resting his chin on his hand, Laurel, a black-haired man with a thoughtful manner, added, "she delegates authority and allows them (aides) to work."

General Ramos, who is short and bespectacled, his dark hair flecked with gray, and firm in attitude, stresses his forces' "profesisonalism, discipline, loyalty (and) integrity." It was the disappearance of this in the military under deposed President Ferdinand E.

Marcos that prompted him to go over to the revolutionaries.

He says that now local commanders are being allowed to follow their own initiatives in dealing with insurgents and other problems.

Although Genera' Ramos is careful to avoid the role of politician, unlike Enrile, he finds "fluidity in the political situation," tied to economic recovery.

Information Minister Teodor L. Locsin Jr. agrees. "If we fail to deliver on the economy," he predicts, the administration will fall.

An American official says, however, that if by early next year the economy has begun to show "solid signs of perceptible improvement," the government has achieved a "minimal constitutional framework," local elections are allowed to consolidate the situation in the provinces and there is support for rebuilding the military, then Mrs. Aquino's future is bright.

That is an "unusually complicating and daunting" task, he says, although "the prospects (for success) are reasonable."

A diplomat says General Ramos "really wants to reprofessionalize the military after long years of frustration."

Enrile, on the other hand, while rejecting suggestions he is eyeing the presidency, is viewed as "a major part of the problem" and with "a certain residue of suspicion."

Some insiders say Enrile would find it difficult to take over because of the depth of Mrs. Aquino's popular support.

Mrs. Aquino herself is widely regarded as unlikely to run for a second six-year term, although few believe she will not complete the one to which she was elected Feb. 7.

The earliest national elections can take place is the end of this year, says Alvarez, and a more likely time is 1987.

Under a "heavyweight-vs.-light-weight" rule Mrs. Aquino has laid down, the cabinet and president must resign 90 days before a new election so incumbency cannot be exploited.

There is a lot of talk about election reform. Says Trade Minister Jose Concepcion Jr., "We didn't fight and die for democracy so scoundrels can get it."

Plans call for new voter registration with photographs, computerized lists and fingerprints.

Some scoundrels, however, appear to be gaining some political posts.

The wholesale replacement of local officials, called officers-in-charge (OICs), by Local Government Minister Aquilino Pimintel has created what all agree is "a hornet's nest," and some say he is being reined in after naming mayors like the driver of a friend's wife and what some Moslems call a recognized "terrorist" when he was acting under Marcos' orders.

Groups that think they have been shortchanged concede the new government has had to focus on the economy at the start.

Says Vice President Laurel, "You can't talk about what you are going to have for lunch when your house is on fire."

CONTINUING POPULARITY AQUINO'S BEST DEFENSE

(By Alan Emory)

MANILA.—Corazon C. Aquino is sitting on top of a political volcano.

Only her immense popularity keeps it from erupting.

The new Philippine president faces an insurgency composed partly of supporters of deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos, whose allies pay demonstrators up to $7.50 a day to stand outside the United States Embassy in Manila, and Communists and resentful Moslems in the South, the latter two complaining they have been left out of influential positions in the new government.

The Moslems charge Mrs. Aquino listens to a "Jesuit Mafia," and while the Catholic Church has been a significant Aquino supporter, some key observers believe the role and influence of Cardinal Jaime Sin has been overblown.

The cardinal, according to American officials, was a "moral force for change," but never a church spokesman and no force behind the Aquino presidency, although other clergymen had been close advisers.

Stories of Marcos' hidden wealth have robbed his backers of much of their appeal. The Moslems account for only 7 percent of the population, and the government has a picture of their backing for Marcos and the feeling their opposition amounts to settling scores.

WILLING TO DEAL

Mrs. Aquino has already indicated a willingness to deal with leaders of the rebels and to call a cease-fire with the New People's Army, which claims a strength of 16,000 in the countryside in three-fifths of the provinces and has been engaged in ambushing reporters and soldiers alike.

Mrs. Aquino's scrapping of the legislature until a new constitution takes effect has unsettled some Filipinos.

"We don't know what constitution we are following," says Joel J. De Los Santos, a teacher of history and Islamics. He says, "cause-oriented groups" boycotted the Feb. 7 election because they doubted any substantial change would result.

The Communists have formed a shadow government of their own, which, they say, provides better services than the national regime.

"In the barrio," says De Los Santos, "if you lose your carabao (water buffalo) you don't go to the chief of police because he can't do anything about it. You go to the party, which will get it back or provide the money to buy a new carabo. They know which farmer's bitch has given birth to puppies. They help farmers plow the fields and market goods.

"The government has one agricultural technicial to handle several barrios."

The Communist concede President Aquino has aided human rights victims, and De Los Santos says—and Moslem leaders like Atty. Ebraham Rasul, the first member of his faith to serve in the Philippine Senate, agree—Filipinos have "a high tolerance level. So long as the government is not oppressive and does not abuse people we can tighten our belts."

De Los Santos admits Mrs. Aquino "doesn't have the intellectual arrogance of her predecessor."

FOES IN A HURRY

However, he adds, both extremes are in a hurry to put Mrs. Aquino down—the Marcos forces, because they are running out of time, the Communists because they think the transition period is the time to strike.

"When you walk very, very fast and you step on a thorn," he quotes a proverb as saying, "it goes deep into your foot."

Mrs. Aquino gets high marks for not naming any relatives to her administration: "a miracle in the Philippines," says one observer. "If she can do that she can resist almost any pressures."

One key move may be on land reform. There are plans to break down land holdings into small units, creating what Agrarian Reform Minister Heherson (Sonny) Alvarez calls "small-time countryside capitalists."

However, those displaced by reform and populist measures are upset, although they are still around.

At the Universtiy of the Philippines, normally the center of dissent, students recently cheered Mrs. Aquino despite a fairly hard-line speech in which she promised to beef up the military.

Marcos and his relatives are reported to have taken $10 billion out of the country, and Alvarez says, "You can't lose that without great economic dislocation."

ECONOMY A PRIORITY

Trade and Industry Minister Jose Concepcion Jr. says there are 3 million unemployed Filipinos and 800,000 more are joining the labor force every year. He says, "There is poverty all over the place."

The government is trying to take over businesses monopolized by Marcos cronies—"We're going to go after all of them," says Information Minister Teodor L. Locsin Jr., who likens them to "Al Capone"—to sell shares to the workers, lift bans on the export of coral, which Moslem divers collect in Zamboanga, and of copra and to set up regional economic councils and make sure sugar growers get a fair price.

Concepcion told a group of journalists organized by the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies that the United States should double the Philippines' share of the garment market and restore its sugar quota, even though, he concedes, sugar is "a sunset industry." The world sugar price is lower than that in the Philippines, and the answer, experts say, is diversification, not growing more sugar.

Although there are signs foreign capital is returning—the peso has remained stable at 20.5 to the dollar—and Filipinos with "one leg in Manila and one in Los Angeles" are considering leaving their California condominiums for home—the country, one diplomat says, "is basically broke. Traditional pump priming won't work."

Says Locsin, "We don't want to be ostracized by the international banking community" because of a staggering national debt.

"The country has been turned upside down," says one western expert. "The new government has been stripping the apparatus away. The next elections will be its battlefield."

REAGAN CALL TO MARCOS UPSETS FILIPINO LEADERS

(By Alan Emory)

MANILA.—President Reagan's assurances of support for the Aquino government last week were badly needed here.

Although members of the Philippine cabinet readily conceded, in recent interviews with a group of journalists under the auspices of the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies, that Mr. Reagan had a perfect right to confer with deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos as an old friend, both they and Americans in Manila had been upset about the way the president handled his relations with the old and new heads of government here.

First the White House said Mr. Reagan would meet with Marcos in Honolulu, even before he had spoken to President Corazon C. Aquino.

Then the word was that Mr. Reagan would telephone Mrs. Aquino before he left Washington and that in Honolulu he would phone Marcos, not meet with him personally.

The Reagan call to Mrs. Aquino was placed at 11:30 at night Manila time and lasted only three minutes. The Reagan call to Marcos lasted half a hour.

American officials here insisted that Mrs. Aquino did not feel "unsupported," but they were clearly uncomfortable with events preceding Mr. Reagan's meeting in Bali with Philippine Vice President Salvador H. (Doy) Laurel.

After that meeting, Laurel said he was satisfied Mr. Reagan recognized Mrs. Aquino as the legitimate president and was not encouraging Marcos' return.

In an earlier interview here, he had said that he did not approve of Mr. Reagan's talking to Marcos before he telephoned Mrs. Aquino because that might imply the United States still recognized Marcos.

What upset both Filipinos and Americans in Manila were the Reagan remarks that fraud had been committed by both sides in the presidential election campaign—that "has no basis" so far as their ticket was concerned, Laurel said, "dice were loaded"—and the implication in others that the American military bases in the Philippines were more important than Philippine democracy.

Laurel conveyed that unhappiness both to American Ambassador Stephen W. Bosworth and to Mr. Reagan later.

Information Minister Teodoro L. Locsin Jr. said Mr. Reagan was "within his rights to call an old friend and ally" and that the Aquino government had been more concerned about what Mr. Reagan said to Marcos than the call itself.

Locsin added, "No one can forget the tremendous support Mrs. Aquino got from the American government and the American people."

Laurel said in Bali last week that Mr. Reagan's remarks to him had "swept away the cobwebs of doubt" about Mr. Reagan's commitment to the Aquino regime.

Although Laurel told Mr. Reagan the Philippines needed more than the $150 million in extra aid the president has requested from Congress, Mrs. Aquino declined to answer that same question directly in an interview with reporters on April 25.

She said then that some of the funds dedicated to military aid to help fight the insurgents might be used for such economic purposes as buying bulldozers and extra equipment because the solution could not be "totally military."

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who will visit Manila, has indicated unhappiness with the Laurel comments on the inadequacy of U.S. aid and with the Aquino government's reluctance to have the Marcoses leave U.S. jurisdiction.

Mrs. Aquino, however, feels that if they do enter another country that will be the end of the Philippines' hopes of recovering any of the $10 billion they are charged with having stolen.

She has offered amnesty to Marcos if some of that is returned.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Grassley-Dole amendment be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is ordered.

Mr. MATSUNAGA addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

AMENDMENT NO. 2149

(Purpose: To exclude from the definition of an unrelated trade or business qualified convention and trade show activities carried out by organizations described in section 501(c)(3) or 501(c)(4) of such Code, and to require private foundations subject to an excise tax imposed by section 4940 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to pay such tax in a manner consistent with the corporate estimated tax payment rules)

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] proposes an amendment numbered 2149.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

At the end of title XVII, insert the following:

SEC. . SPECIAL RULE FOR EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES AT CONVENTION AND TRADE SHOWS.

(a) CERTAIN EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES TREATED AS CONVENTION AND TRADE SHOW ACTIVITIES.—Section 513(d)(3)(B) (relating to qualified convention and trade show activity) is amended by inserting after "industry in general" the following: "or to educate persons in attendance regarding new developments or products and services related to the exempt activities of the organization".

(b) QUALIFYING ORGANIZATIONS.—Section 513(d)(3)(C) (relating to qualifying organization) is amended by striking out "501(c)(5) or (6)" and inserting in lieu thereof "50(c) (3), (4), (5), or (6)" and by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "or which educates persons in attendance regarding new developments or products and services related to the exempt activities of the organization".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to activities in taxable years beginning after the date of enactment of this Act.

At the appropriate place in title V, insert the following:

SEC. . PRIVATE FOUNDATIONS SUBJECT TO ESTIMATED PAYMENT OF CERTAIN EXCISE TAXES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6754 (relating to installment payments of estimated income tax by corporations) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) CERTAIN PRIVATE FOUNDATIONS.—With respect to any private foundation subject to the excise tax imposed by section 4940, this section and section 6655 shall apply, as provided by regulation, in a manner consistent with the provisions of such sections."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, my amendment would exclude from the definition of an "unrelated trade or business" trade show activities of organizations qualified under sections 501(c) (3) and (4) of the Tax Code. Section 501(c)(3) organizations include charitable organizations such as churches and schools and 501(c)(4) organizations include civic leagues or organizations operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare. In short, my amendment would simplify and equalize the tax treatment of trade show income received by organizations qualified under sections 501(c) (3), (4), (5), and (6) of the code.

Mr. President, the Tax Reform Act of 1976 amended the code to provide that income derived from a qualified convention and trade show activity carried on by a 501(c)(5) or 501(c)(6) organization was not taxable. Section 501(c)(5) organizations include labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations. Section 501(c)(6) organizations include business leagues and chamber of commerce. Sections 501 (c)(3) and (c)(4) organizations were inadvertently overlooked in the rush to complete congressional action on that act. My amendment would equalize the tax treatment for all such groups. The amendment would effectuate the substance of a colloquy on this floor in 1976 between Senator LONG, then chairman of the Finance Committee and Senator Talmadge, a member of that committee, when the underlying code section was adopted.

Because of the uncertainty in current law, many potential exhibitors are discouraged from attending sections 501 (c)(3) and (c)(4) trade shows. The disparity in tax treatment also causes severe problems where a trade show is jointly sponsored by a 501 (c)(6) organization and 501 (c)(3) or (c)(4) organization.

Mr. President, it is a well-known fact that charitable organizations find great need to educate their members, and this amendment will permit those charitable organizations with limited means to sponsor conventions to achieve this goal. The amendment is supported by a number of 501(c)(3) and 501(c)(4) organizations, including the American College of Cardiology, the Secondary School Principals, the Girl Scouts and the Goodwill Industries. In providing equal tax treatment with regard to trade show income for 501(c) (3), (4), (5), and (6) organizations, a major administrative burden will be lifted from the IRS and the Tax Code will be made more equitable and fair.

Mr. President, as a revenue offset my amendment would require private foundations to make estimated payments on the excise tax that they pay on their net investment income in a manner consistent with the corporate estimated tax payment rules. Under current law private foundations other than certain operating foundations are subject to a 2-percent excise tax on their net investment income. The foundation's excise tax liability for the taxable year is not payable, however, until the foundation's information return for the year is due. Under my amendment the rules requiring estimated payments of corporate income taxes would apply to the private foundation excise tax on net investment income. In effect revenue neutrality would be effected.

I ask my colleagues support for this amendment which will simplify and clarify the tax law for charitable organizations.

I yield the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, we agree with the amendment. I particularly appreciate the fact that the Senator found a way to finance this. It is a good amendment and ought to pass.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee.

I move adoption of the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as the Senator so well stated, the amendment has been cleared on this side. We have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii.

The amendment (No. 2149) was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2138

(Purpose: Providing that the period during which an individual is in the United States competing in a charitable sporting event shall not be taken into account in determining whether such individual is a resident alien)

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I believe there is an amendment at the desk filed by Senator QUAYLE, amendment No. 2138. If I have the number correct, I would like to call it up for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would take unanimous consent to temporarily set aside the Grassley-Dole amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to temporarily set aside the Grassley-Dole amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], for Mr. QUAYLE, proposes an amendment numbered 2138.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of subtitle H of title IX, insert the following new section:

SEC. . ATHLETES COMPETING IN CHARITABLE SPORTING EVENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 7701(b)(4)(A) (defining exempt individual) is amended by striking "or" at the end of clause (ii), by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting ", or" and by adding after clause (iii) the following new clause:

"(iv) a professional athlete who is temporarily in the United States to compete in a charitable sports event described in section 274(k)(2)."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to periods after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, this is an amendment relating to world professional athletes when they come to this country and play a charity sports tournament. At the moment, if you are in the United States over 180 days, you are taxed on your worldwide income. It is causing a number of athletes to be reluctant to come and play in our charity sports tournaments, where the money is raised for charity, because it counts toward the 180 days.

This amendment simply says when they are playing here in a charity sports tournament, the days they are playing will not be counted toward the 180 days. They are still taxed if they make any money in the tournament, but the days that they play do not count toward the 180 days.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am not aware of any objection on this side of the aisle. I am prepared to support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2138) was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislation clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AN INTERESTING DEAL

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I want to make a short statement on a transaction among the Department of Justice, the Department of Agriculture, and a private entity known as Edwards Investments of Idaho, dealing with some land between Idaho and Montana; portions of the land lie in both States.

Today, the General Counsel's Office in the Department of Agriculture sent to the attorney in charge, region 1, in Missoula, MT, a memorandum dealing with two preliminary title opinions and related materials issued by the Attorney General of the United States relating to the interest in the lands held by Edwards Investments, an Idaho partnership [Edwards], along with two quitclaim deeds which the Justice Department prepared for lands in Idaho and Montana that Edwards had acquired from the now bankrupt Milwaukee Railroad. The Justice Department is directing the Forest Service to process the quitclaim deeds and to set in motion payments of $3,708,900 to Edwards.

Small parcels of the land involved were actually acquired by Edwards in the normal manner of one property owner selling to another person land in which he held title. The General Counsel's Office in the Department of Agriculture had previously reviewed the appraised price that the Forest Service had arrived at, which was less than half a million dollars. The Justice Department, dealing with Edwards, offered something over $600,000 to acquire the land. Edwards refused and Congress approved in Public Law 99-190 (99 Stat. 1185), appropriating $4 million for this purpose. The Justice Department has now caved in to Edwards to settle the matter for the $3.7 million.

I believe the amount is excessive, and I believe the public should know why the final amount is almost 10 times the appraised price and 6 times the Justice Department's offer of settlement.

The land of the Milwaukee Railroad right-of-way across Federal land was used by them as an easement for the purpose of building and operating a railroad. The land was never sold to them, and while the right-of-way was for a public purpose since the land was never sold, once the right-of-way is no longer used for a railroad, the land ordinarily would be returned to the United States to be held, in this case, under the management of the U.S. Forest Service in the public interest. It was on this basis that the Forest Service made their appraisal of what Edwards actually owned. It's my judgment that this is what the law requires, and it is obvious that that is what the Justice Department believed when they made their offer of settlement to Edwards in the neighborhood of $600,000. Now the final settlement, much greater than that, is not only a bad precedent, but probably could not withstand the scrutiny of a Federal court if a case were brought against the Justice Department or the Department of Agriculture, or both, challenging the Justice Department decision.

There are questions that could be raised on behalf of Edwards concerning the value of bridges left intact, since the Forest Service appraisal only appraised the salvage value of the bridges after they were dismantled. In that regard, I asked the Forest Service if they had any plans for leaving any of the bridges intact for future use. That would entail some changes in Forest Service planning, but the Forest Service had been blocked by direction from the Justice Department not to proceed with any further planning until after the Justice Department had completed the transaction for the $3.7 million. It is my opinion that most of the bridges will have to be removed at the expense of the Forest Service, but that there is a possibility that one or more of the bridges will be left intact.

If the transaction goes through to final payment and issuance of the Treasury checks, we shall probably never know what the actual appraised value of the Edwards property should be, since the Forest Service is prevented by the Justice Department from making an appraisal of any of the bridges that might be useful to them. It is apparent that those that are not going to be used will have to be torn down at public expense.

I make this statement now prior to the final issuance of Treasury checks so that any of the public that are interested in this matter will be informed.

I believe the Justice Department is wrong on two counts—that is blocking Forest Service reappraisal of bridges to be left intact and used and, second, agreeing to the higher price of $3.7 million.

I ask unanimous consent that the memorandum and letters connected with this case be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL,
Washington, DC, June 20, 1986.

Memorandum to: Lawrence M. Jakub, Attorney-in-Charge, Missoula, MT.

From: Joseph D. Cummings, Deputy Assistant General Counsel, Natural Resources Division.

Subject: R-1-Acquisition—Edwards Investment—Milwaukee Railroad Right-of-Way.

Attached are two preliminary title opinions, together with related materials, dated June 16, 1986, issued by the Attorney General relating to the interest in lands held by Edwards Investments, formerly owned by the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific Railroad Company, located in Idaho and Montana. One title opinion covers a portion of a right-of-way between Avery, Idaho, and the Idaho/Montana State line at St. Paul Pass, in Shoshone County, Idaho. The second title opinion covers a portion of a right-of-way between the Idaho/Montana State line at St. Paul Pass and St. Regis, Montana, in Mineral County, Montana. The interest in land in Idaho is being acquired for a consideration of $2,000,000.00, and the interest in land in Montana is being acquired for a consideration of $1,708,900.00.

The lands, which are being acquired pursuant to P.L. 99-190 (99 Stat. 1185), are more particularly described in two attached quitclaim deeds from the grantors to the United States, prepared by the Department of Justice.

The two title insurance policies and endorsements thereto for the interest in the Idaho lands were issued by First American Title Insurance Company and by Safeco Title Insurance Company of Idaho for the interest in the Montana lands.

True copies of the preliminary title opinions are being sent to the Regional Forester for the purpose of requesting the issuance from Treasury of the two checks. Richard Hull, Director of Lands, advises that the funds have been made available to the Region. Please contact Tom Morris, Attorney representing Edwards Investments, to arrange the appropriate closings with the title companies. Mr. Tom Morris's address is 722 Main Ave., St. Maries, Idaho. His telephone number is area code 208-245-2523. Mr. Marlin Lance of this office, 447-2223, is handling this matter.

When the subjections in the Attorney General's preliminary title opinions have been met, the deeds executed and recorded, the title insurance policies updated, and the purchase price paid, the two title assemblies should be returned for final approval of the Attorney General.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
LAND AND NATURAL RESOURCES DIVISION,
Washington, DC, June 16, 1986.

Hon. RICHARD E. LYNG,
Secretary of Agriculture,
Washington, DC.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: An examination has been made of the title data relating to the land formerly occupied and used by the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific Railroad Company as portions of a railroad right-of-way between Avery, Idaho, and the Idaho/Montana state line at St. Paul Pass, in Shoshone County, Idaho. This land is to be acquired for a consideration of $2,000,000.00 by authority of existing legislation. The file number of this Department is 90-1-3-6791.

The land is described in the enclosed draft of quitclaim deed from John O. Edwards, Dorothy Edwards, his wife, and Edwards Investments, an Idaho partnership, to the United States of America.

The title insurance policy No. 26468, dated as of February 28, 1986, and endorsements to the policy, dated as of May 15, 1986, May 21, 1986, and June 4, 1986, were prepared by Safeco Title Insurance Company of Idaho and are satisfactory in form.

The title insurance policy and accompanying data disclose the title to be vested in:

United States of America, as to Parcels 1, 3, 4, 5, 8, 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28; and

John O. Edwards and Dorothy Edwards, husband and wife, Individually and as Nominees for Edwards Investments, an Idaho Partnership, as to Parcels 2, 6, 7, 9, 11, 15 and 20, subject to the following objections:

1. All taxes and assessments.

2. Rights or claims of persons in possession, if any, not shown of record.

3. Mechanics' liens, if any, not shown of record.

4. Easements for roads, highways, railroads, pipelines and public utilities, if any, not shown of record.

5. The exception of all rights or interests arising from a survey map of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad Company line of constructed railroad approved June 17, 1918 by the Secretary of Interior pursuant to an Act of Congress March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1233) and an Act of Congress March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. 482). Affects Parcels 1, 3, 4, 5, 8, 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28.

6. All right, title and interest of John O. Edwards, Dorothy Edwards and Edwards Investments, an Idaho partnership, as successors to the interest of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific Railroad Company in the aforesaid line of railroad right of way. Affects Parcels 1, 3, 4, 5, 8, 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28.

7. Patented or unpatented mining claims, if any, not shown of record in Shoshone County, Idaho.

8. An easement for a road right-of-way, in favor of Shoshone County, and recorded November 20, 1981, as Instrument No. 296757.

Prior to the consummation of this purchase, it should be definitely determined that the descriptions of the land in the deed to the United States and in the title insurance policy cover the same property. Additionally, the affidavit regarding the partnership status of Edwards Investments, dated May 10, 1986, should be updated to date of settlement; however, the 1986, should be updated to date of settlement; however, the updated affidavit need only be executed by one general partner.

When the above requirements and objections 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7 have been satisfied and/or eliminated, and the enclosed draft of quitclaim deed from the above-named owners to the United States of America, duly executed and properly stamped, has been recorded, the purchase price has been paid, and a title insurance policy in approved form (A.L.T.A. U.S. Policy-1963) has been obtained showing the vesting of a valid title in the United States of America, and this Department has been informed in writing that objections 4 and 8 will not interfere with the contemplated use of the land, the title will be approved subject to the rights and easements referred to in objections 4 and 8.

The title insurance policy and related papers are enclosed.

Sincerely,

ATTORNEY GENERAL.
By F. HENRY HABICHT II,
Assistant Attorney General,
Land and Natural Resources Division.

Prior to the consummation of this purchase, it should be definitely determined that the descriptions of the land in the deed to the United States and in the title insurance policy cover the same property. Additionally, the affidavit regarding the partnership status of Edwards Investments, dated May 10, 1986, should be updated to date of settlement; however, the updated affidavit need only be executed by one general partner.

When the above requirements and objections 1, 2, 3, 9, 10, 12 and 16 have been satisfied and/or eliminated and the enclosed draft of quitclaim deed from the above-named owners to the United States of America, duly executed and properly stamped, has been recorded, the purchase price has been paid, and a title insurance policy in approved form (A.L.T.A. U.S. Policy—1963) has been obtained showing the vesting of a valid title in the United States of America, and this Department has been informed in writing that objections 4, 5, 8, 11, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31 and 32 will not interfere with the contemplated use of the land, the title will be approved subject to the rights and easements referred to in objections 4, 5, 8, 11, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31 and 32.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). Does any Senator seek recognition?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TAX REFORM BILL OF 1986

AMENDMENT NO. 2148

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, what is the pending business? Is it the Grassley amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the Grassley amendment.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2150

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk in behalf of Senator GRASSLEY and myself and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for himself and Mr. GRASSLEY, proposes an amendment numbered 2150.

On page 1509, between lines 21 and 22 insert.

Paragraph (5) of section 202(d) is amended by adding at the end thereof new subparagraph (O) as follows—

(O) A project is described in this subparagraph if—

(i) a commitment letter was entered into with a financial institution on January 23, 1986 for the financing of the project,

(ii) the project involves inter-city communication links (including microwave and fiber optics communications systems and related property),

(iii) the project consists of communications links between

(a) Omaha, Nebraska and Council Bluffs, Iowa,

(b) Waterloo, Iowa and Sioux City, Iowa,

(c) Davenport, Iowa and Springfield, Illinois, and

(iv) the estimated cost of such project is approximately $13,000,000.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the amendment that has just been set aside includes two provisions. One is the rule on truck lines and one is Teleconnect. We have had a discussion, at least I have had a discussion with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM]. He indicated that he had no objection to the Teleconnect portion but he wanted to come back and take a look at the other portion. What I am suggesting is that we adopt the Teleconnect portion and I shall then modify the other provision, to remove Teleconnect, so that on Monday, the Grassley amendment with reference to the rule on truck lines will be pending.

□ 1710

At that time Senator METZENBAUM and Senator GRASSLEY could get together. I do not believe there is any question on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any further debate?

Mr. PACKWOOD. This was the amendment I referred to earlier. We thought Teleconnect was part of United. It was an error on our part. It turns out we did not have the proper legal relationships between the two entities. We intended to cover both of them.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have no objection to this amendment, and I know of no objection on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2150) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2148

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the pending business is then the Grassley amendment. I would ask that that amendment be modified by striking everything after line 5. In other words, everything after "in September 1985." Everything following that would be stricken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so modified.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent amendment No. 2148 be temporarily laid aside so the Senator from Alabama may offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2151

Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of myself and Senator DENTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] for himself and Mr. DENTON proposes an amendment numbered 2151.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Section 1518 of H.R. 3838, as reported by the Committee on Finance of the Senate, is amended by adding a new subsection (m) at the end thereof to read as follows:

(m) Limitation on Investment in Nonpurpose Obligations.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 103(e)(6)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall not apply to amounts in a fund described in subparagraph (B) [as that fund is in effect on the date of enactment]

(B) CERTAIN MANDATORY ACCUMULATIONS.—A fund is described in this subparagraph if—

(i) amounts must be paid into such fund under a constitutional provision, statute, or ordinance which was initially effective in 1901 and was last modified in 1919,

(ii) under such constitutional provision, statute, or ordinance, amounts paid into such fund (and receipts from investment of such fund) can be used only to pay debt service on general obligations of a governmental unit and for no other purpose, and

(iii) the size of the payments made into such fund is independent of the size of the outstanding issues (including the debt service thereon).

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, beginning before the 1913 adoption of amendment XVI to the U.S. Constitution which authorized the U.S. Government to levy income taxes, the city of Birmingham, AL, established a sinking fund to provide a source of payment for debt service on its bonds. Pursuant to provisions of the Alabama Constitution that initially became effective in 1901 and that were last modified in 1919, the sources of income for the Birmingham Sinking Fund consist of (i) the proceeds of a property tax that has been levied continuously since 1901 and that is required to be applied solely for the payment of debt service on the city's bonds; and (ii) income derived from the investment of moneys accumulated in such sinking fund.

Moneys in the Birmingham Sinking Fund can be used only for the payment of debt service on the city's bonds, and when the annual requirements of such debt service are less than the annual tax receipts and investment income, applicable State law mandates the accumulation of the resulting surplus. No moneys can be withdrawn from the Birmingham Sinking Fund for the payment of any operating expenses of the city or for the payment of the cost of public facilities or other capital expenditures.

Although not legally required to do so, the city of Birmingham has historically managed its bonded debt so that the annual amounts required for debt service do not, for any extended period of time, materially exceed the annual amounts anticipated to be deposited in the Birmingham Sinking Fund. This debt management policy, in conjunction with the aforementioned legal requirement that no moneys may be withdrawn except for the payment of debt service, has resulted in a gradual increase in the balance of the Birmingham Sinking Fund, which now exceeds $35,000,000.

The existence of this sinking fund, its creation and preservation by provisions of the Alabama Constitution, and the historic debt management policy of the city resulting in the gradual increase of the sinking fund balance are all factors which together have been viewed very favorably by national rating services and have enabled the city, despite its share of the usual economic and demographic problems afflicting larger cities, to achieve a rating for its bonds of AA by Standard & Poor's Corp. and A–1 by Moody's Investor's Service. The extent to which these ratings are unusual and reflect the favorable impact of the Birmingham Sinking Fund becomes more striking when it is recognized that property taxes in Alabama are subject to constitutional limitations and cannot, as is the case in most other States, be increased without limit to the extent necessary to pay bonded debt.

The arbitrage rules of section 103(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended, were enacted in 1969 to prevent State and local governments from making a profit at the expense of the Federal Treasury by issuing tax-exempt obligations and investing the proceeds thereof in higher yielding taxable obligations. Although section 103(c) did not initially interfere with the continued operation of the Birmingham Sinking Fund, that was not the case with regulations promulgated in 1978 to curb the growing use of the invested sinking fund, which was a financing technique that had appeared since 1969 and was proving to be a significant circumvention of the arbitrage rules. As originally proposed, the 1978 regulations would have interfered with the historic operation of the Birmingham Sinking Fund, but the city was able to persuade the Treasury Department that this sinking fund did not constitute the kind of open-ended abuse that the new regulations were intended to combat.

The final version of the new regulations contained a specific exemption for sinking funds that were created and managed under conditions corresponding to the Birmingham Sinking Fund. As was the case with the original 1978 regulations, the tax reform bill contains new provisions which significantly impair the continued operation of the Birmingham Sinking Fund, and the city desires the Treasury Department to approve modifications to the Tax Reform Act that will enable the Birmingham Sinking Fund to be continued under the same conditions that are now recognized in Treasury Regulation, section 1.103-14(d)(5).

Although probably unique in the country, the Birmingham Sinking Fund represents a frugal and prudent approach to municipal finance which has been practiced by the city without change for longer than the Federal income tax has existed. As mentioned above, the Treasury Department was persuaded in 1978 that the Birmingham Sinking Fund constituted a historical practice, which, given its unique and limited use, should not be upset by the then newly proposed regulations applicable to invested sinking funds.

I believe the preservation of Birmingham's historic sinking fund is justified by principles of comity which should exist between Federal tax law and long-established financial practices of State and local governments. The same considerations which persuaded the Treasury Department to leave the Birmingham Sinking Fund undisturbed in 1978 should be reflected in the Tax Reform Act now under consideration by the Senate.

Section 216 of the Alabama Constitution adopted in 1901, and amendment No. 8 to the Alabama Constitution adopted in 1919, authorize the city of Birmingham, among other municipalities to levy and collect a specified property tax which is required to be used exclusively for the payment of debt service on the city's bonds. Pursuant to these constitutional provisions, the city has for more than 85 years levied and collected such a property tax and has deposited the proceeds thereof in the Birmingham Sinking Fund, which is exclusively dedicated to the payment of the city's bonds. Since the tax proceeds deposited in the Birmingham Sinking Fund cannot be expended for any purpose other than debt service, a surplus has accumulated in the fund during years in which the tax revenues have exceeded debt service.

The cumulative surplus in the fund has been historically invested without restriction as to yield, and the relevant Alabama constitutional provisions have been uniformly interpreted by counsel as requiring the investment income from such surplus to be added to the fund and to be held, invested and applied according to the same rules that govern the tax proceeds constituting the primary source of the fund. As mentioned in the introduction to this memorandum, the legal requirements applicable to the Birmingham Sinking Fund, together with the prudent practice of the city in trying to limit annual debt service to amounts that do not exceed estimated annual additions to the fund, have cause the fund to grow over the years to a current balance in excess of $35,000,000.

The regulations originally proposed by the Treasury Department in 1978 concerning invested sinking funds would have included the Birmingham Sinking Fund in the general definition of a sinking fund. Although the full effect of the new regulations was never determined, it was clear that, without an exemption for the city, the issuance of any bonds after the effective date of such regulations would have required the city to limit the investment of a proportionate part of its sinking fund to a yield not exceeding the yield of such bonds. The Treasury Department relieved the city from the application of the new regulations by adding Treasury Regulation section 1.103-14(d)(5), which exempted a sinking fund held by a municipality from investment limitations if the fund met the following three conditions:

First, amounts must be paid into the fund under a constitutional provision, statute, or ordinance adopted before May 3, 1978;

Second, under the constitutional provision, statute, or ordinance, amounts paid into the fund—and receipts from investments of the fund—can be used only to pay debt service on the issuer's bonds and for no other purpose; and

Third, the size of the payment made into the fund is independent of the size of any outstanding bond issue—including the debt service thereon.

A brief consideration of these three conditions may illuminate the reasoning behind the 1978 decision of the Treasury Department regarding the Birmingham Sinking Fund and thereby justify continuation of the same exemption in the Tax Reform Act now under consideration.

The first condition, which requires that amounts must be paid into the fund under a constitutional provision, statute, or ordinance adopted before May 3, 1978, was obviously intended to distinguish between past practices and new financing techniques devised after the effective date of the sinking fund regulations. In 1978 the Treasury Department was concerned not to preclude the use of any legitimate municipal financing arrangements that had been developed and implemented just prior to the effective date of the new regulations. The conditions of a sinking fund complying with Treasury Regulation section 1.103-14(d)(5) have been frozen since May 3, 1978, and the same date should be used for any exemption included in the pending Tax Reform Act. The Birmingham Sinking Fund has been conducted in accordance with the regulations promulgated in 1978, and the city does not believe that the date of any exemption should be advanced to reflect developments in municipal finance occurring since that date.

The second condition, which requires that the fund be used only to pay debt service, reflects a rule governing the Birmingham Sinking Fund that, in relation to the laws of other States, is probably a unique feature of Alabama law. Generally when a State or local governmental unit accumulates a surplus of tax revenues after having discharged all current debt, such unit can expend the surplus for other purposes. By contrast, the city of Birmingham is required to sequester and retain such surplus for the payment of future debt service. Although the relevant Alabama law also applies to other municipalities in the State, no other municipality, to the knowledge of the city, has pursued a conservative debt management policy over the years which has resulted in the accumulation of a significant surplus balance in its sinking fund.

The third condition, which requires that there be no relationship between the amount of the tax revenues going into the sinking fund and the size of the outstanding bond issues, would appear to be aimed at the principal feature of the kind of invested sinking fund that the 1978 regulations were intended to eliminate. Generally, State and local governmental units wanted the advantage of a sinking fund as it applied to a particular bond issue, but if payment of that bond issue had been adequately secured, the laws in effect in other States prior to May 3, 1978, unlike the Alabama law in question, did not require additional funding of the sinking fund in a manner independent of the size of the related bond issue.

The Birmingham Sinking Fund satisfies the three conditions of Treasury Regulation section 1.103-14(d)(5). While these three condidtions do not seem overly restrictive, the city of Birmingham believes that it has the only sinking fund in the country which satisfies the three conditions. This belief is based on the cumulative impression gained from many different comments and inquiries made since 1978 by bond lawyers and underwriters from various parts of the country. If the Birmingham Sinking Fund is unique, it is probably because of the combined effect of the second and third conditions.

The tax reform bill contains a provision that will prevent the city of Birmingham from continuing to operate its sinking fund in the historic manner that such fund has always been operated. The bill proposed by the act will limit the aggregate amount of gross proceeds of a bond issue of the city that can be invested in "nonpurpose investments"—all investments made with moneys in the Birmingham Sinking Fund are expected to constitute "nonpurpose investments" as defined in the act—with a yield higher than the yield of such bond issue to an amount that may not exceed 150 percent of the scheduled debt service on such bond issue for the current bond year.

The sinking fund regulations promulgated in 1978 were not intended to interfere with the historical financial practices of State and local governments. They were directed instead at new and clever techniques which departed from traditional practice in order to deliberately circumvent the arbitrage rules. In 1978 the Treasury Department recognized that the Birmingham Sinking Fund represented historical practice and that it was not appropriate to disrupt the city's reliance on this practice to enhance the credit rating assigned to its bonds. To resolve the difficulty created by the regulations proposed in 1978, the Treasury Department exempted the Birmingham Sinking Fund by adopting Treasury Regulation section 1.103-14(d)(5). Under the circumstances.

I believe that the substance of the 1978 exemption should be incorporated in the Tax Reform Act now under consideration by the U.S. Congress.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise as a cosponsor of the amendment offered by my colleague from Alabama.

In 1913 before the adoption of the 16th amendment authorizing the United States Government to collect income taxes, the city of Birmingham, AL, established a sinking fund to provide a constant source of capital to pay the debt service on its bonds. The Alabama constitution provides that sources of income for the Birmingham Sinking Fund consist of the proceeds of a property tax that has been continuously collected since 1901. The Birmingham Sinking Fund money can be used only for debt service on the bonds and when the annual requirements of such debt service are less than the annual tax receipts and investment income, State law mandates the accumulation of the resulting surplus. No moneys can be withdrawn for the payment of any operating expenses of the city or for the payment of the cost of public facilities or other capital expenditures.

The arbitrage rules of section 103(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended, were enacted in 1969 to prevent State and local governments from making a profit at the expense of the Federal Treasury by issuing tax-exempt obligations and investing the proceeds thereof in higher yielding taxable obligations. Although section 103(c) did not initially interfere with the continued operation of the Birmingham Sinking Fund, that was not the case with regulations promulgated in 1978. As originally proposed, the regulations would have interfered with the historic operation of the Birmingham Sinking Fund, but the city was able to persuade the Treasury Department that this sinking fund did not constitute the kind of open-ended abuse that the new regulations were intended to combat. The final version of the new regulations contained a specific exemption of sinking funds that were created and managed under conditions corresponding to the Birmingham Sinking Fund. As was the case with the original 1978 regulations, the Tax Reform Act of 1985 contains new arbitrage provisions which significantly impair the continued operation of the Birmingham Sinking Fund.

Between 1969 and 1978, in order to take advantage of the arbitrage rules, many State and local governmental units began to abandon the traditional practice of issuing long-term bonds with serial maturities for the specific purpose of circumventing the arbitrage rules. Instead of issuing bonds with serial maturities, part of the principal of which would be paid each year, a widespread practice developed of issuing term bonds, all or a substantial part of the principal of which would come due in a single installment 20 to 30 years later. For this 20- or 30-year period the revenues held in the sinking fund were required to be invested in specified taxable obligations—generally U.S. Treasury bonds—bearing a higher rate of interest than the tax-exempt issue in question and thereby enabling the issuer to earn substantial arbitrage profits.

The Treasury Department then proposed new regulations in 1978 to counteract the change in traditional financial practices of State and local governments represented by the invested sinking fund technique. The new regulations simply treated amounts held in an invested sinking fund for an issue of tax-exempt bonds as if they were proceeds of the bonds and were therefore subject to investment limitations. At the time, the Treasury Department expressly emphasized that the new regulations were not intended to interfere with traditional or customary financial practices and were, instead, aimed at sophisticated devices intended to circumvent the arbitrage rules.

The history of the Birmingham Sinking Fund is completely free of any intention to avoid or circumvent Federal arbitrage law. Although probably unique in the country, the Birmingham Sinking Fund represents a frugal and prudent approach to municipal finance which has been practiced by the city without change for longer than the Federal income tax has existed. The Treasury Department was persuaded in 1978 that the Birmingham Sinking Fund constituted a historical practice, which, given its unique and limited use, should not be upset by the then newly proposed regulations applicable to invested sinking funds. The city of Birmingham believes that the preservation of its historic sinking fund is justified by principles of comity which should exist between Federal tax law and long-established financial practices of State and local government. The same considerations which persuaded the Treasury Department to leave the Birmingham Sinking Fund undisturbed in 1978 should be reflected in the Tax Reform Act now under consideration by the U.S. Congress.

The Tax Reform Act of 1985 contains two distinct arbitrage provisions that will prevent the city of Birmingham from continuing to operate its sinking fund in the historic manner that such fund has always been operated. First, section 174(d) of the new Internal Revenue Code of 1985 proposed by the act will limit the aggregate amount of gross proceeds of a bond issue of the city that can be invested in "nonpurpose investments"—all investments made with moneys in the Birmingham Sinking Fund are expected to constitute "nonpurpose investment" as defined in the act—with a yield higher than the yield of such bond issue to an amount that may not exceed 150 percent of the scheduled debt service on such bond issue for the current bond year. Second, section 147(e) of the new Internal Revenue Code of 1985 will require the city to rebate to the U.S. Government any amount by which, first, the aggregate amount earned on all nonpurpose investments in which gross proceeds of a bond issue are invested exceeds, second, the aggregate amount that would have been earned on such nonpurpose investments if the yield thereon had been equal to the yield on such bond issue.

The sinking fund regulations promulgated in 1978 were not intended to interfere with the historical financial practices of State and local governments. They were directed instead at new and clever techniques which departed from traditional practice in order to deliberately circumvent the arbitrage rules. In 1978 the Treasury Department recognized that the Birmingham Sinking Fund represented historical practice and that it was not appropriate to disrupt the city's reliance on this practice to enhance the credit rating assigned to its bonds.

In circumstances such as this, where the right that the city of Birmingham seeks to preserve is unique and where any financial loss to the U.S. Treasury is insignificant, the most fundamental notion of fairness argues for this amendment protecting the Birmingham Sinking Fund in the Tax Reform Act of 1985.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, this amendment has been looked at and has been agreed to, I believe, by the majority and the minority here as well as the Joint Committee on Taxation. It is my understanding that in the final draft the Treasury Department made suggestions and they now agree to the language of my amendment.

I do not believe there is any objection to the amendment.

REQUIREMENT FOR CERTAIN MAIL TO BE CARRIED ON U.S.-FLAG VESSELS

The bill (S. 186) to further the development and maintenance of an adequate and well-balanced American merchant marine by requiring that certain mail of the United States be carried on vessels of United States registry, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed; as follows:

S. 186

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That title IV of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (46 App. U.S.C. 1141 et seq.), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 405. (a) The Postal Service shall contract for the use of vessels of United States registry to originate any international sea transportation of mail of the United States in any case in which the common carrier which operates or controls such vessel is enaged in the provision of regular transportation services to the destination specified by the Postal Service. The Postal Service shall not be required to enter into any such contract if no such vessels are available at the time the Postal Service seeks to arrange for the transportation of such mail, or if no such vessels can provide service sufficient to meet the actual needs of the Postal Service.

"(b) Any rate charged for the international sea transportation of mail of the United States under subsection (a) of this section shall comply with the provisions of the Shipping Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-237). Any such rate shall not be higher than rates charged by such carrier for transporting like goods for private persons.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in any case in which two or more common carriers seek to enter into a contract offered by the Postal Service under subsection (a) of this section, the Postal Service shall award such contract by competitive bidding and the duration of any such contract may not exceed one year.

"(d) The Postal Service shall not give any preference to any common carrier for the carriage of mail by sea based upon the basis of length, height, or width of cargo containers. Unless required by the physical handling limitations of the destination, no invitation for bids or request for proposals for the carriage of mail may specify the use of containers of any particular length, height, or width.

"(e) For purposes of this section, the term 'common carrier' means any common carrier, other than any ferryboat running on regular routes, engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property between the United States (or any of its districts, territories, or possessions) and any foreign country, whether in the import or export trade, except that a cargo boat commonly referred to as an ocean tramp shall not be considered to be a common carrier.".

SEC. 2. Section 410(b) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) Section 405 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

NATIONAL NEIGHBORHOOD CRIME WATCH DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 256) designating August 12, 1986, as "National Neighborhood Crime Watch Day", was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 256

Whereas neighborhood crime is of continuing concern to the American people;

Whereas the fight against neighborhood crime requires people to work together in cooperation with law enforcement officials;

Whereas neighborhood crime watch organizations are effective at promoting awareness about, and the participation of volunteers in, crime prevention activities at the local level; and

Whereas citizens across America will soon take part in a "National Night Out", a unique crime prevention event which will demonstrate the importance and effectiveness of community participation in crime prevention efforts by having people spend the period from 8 to 9 o'clock postmeridian on August 12, 1986, with their neighbors in front of their homes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That August 12, 1986, is designated as "National Neighborhood Crime Watch Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL FAMILY REUNION WEEKEND

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 274) to designate the weekend of August 1, 1986, through August 3, 1986, as "National Family Reunion Weekend," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 274

Whereas the family is the foundation of a strong America;

Whereas the family nurtures the character and identity of individuals;

Whereas it is important to strengthen and preserve family spirit and unity;

Whereas tracing ancestral roots and creating a family tree can be an important discovery process;

Whereas family reunions of any size provide a strong sense of heritage and pride; and

Whereas family reunions bridge the gap between generations, bringing together the young and old alike to celebrate a family's rich past: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the weekend of August 1, 1986, through August 3, 1986, is designated as "National Family Reunion Weekend" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the families of America to observe such weekend with appropriate activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL DRUNK AND DRUGGED DRIVING AWARENESS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 362) to designate the week of December 14, 1986, through December 20, 1986, as "National Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 362

Whereas traffic accidents cause more violent deaths in the United States than any other cause, approximately forty-four thousand in 1985;

Whereas traffic accidents cause thousands of serious injuries in the United States each year;

Whereas about 54 per centum of drivers killed in single vehicle collisions and 38 per centum of all drivers fatally injured in 1985 had blood alcohol concentrations of 0.10 or above;

Whereas the United States Surgeon General has reported that life expectancy has risen for every age group over the past seventy-five years except for Americans fifteen to twenty-four years old, whose death rate, the leading cause of which is drunk driving, is higher now than it was twenty years ago;

Whereas the total societal cost of drunk driving has been estimated at more than $26,000,000,000 per year, which does not include the human suffering that can never be measured;

Whereas there are increasing reports of driving after drug use and accidents involving drivers who have used marijuana or other illegal drugs;

Whereas driving after the use of therapeutic drugs, either alone or in combination with alcohol, contrary to the advice of physician, pharmacist, or manufacturer, may create a safety hazard on the roads;

Whereas more research is needed on the effect of drugs either alone or in combination with alcohol, on driving ability and the incidence of traffic accidents;

Whereas an increased public awareness of the gravity of the problem of drugged driving may warn drug users to refrain from driving and may stimulate interest in increasing necessary research on the effect of drugs on driving ability and the incidence of traffic accidents;

Whereas the public, particularly through the work of citizens groups, is demanding a solution to the problem of drunk and drugged driving;

Whereas the Presidential Commission on Drunk Driving, appointed to heighten public awareness and stimulate the pursuit of solutions, provided vital recommendations for remedies for the problem of drunk driving;

Whereas the National Commission Against Drunk Driving was established to assist State and local governments and the private sector to implement these recommendations;

Whereas most States have appointed task forces to examine existing drunk driving programs and made recommendations for a renewed, comprehensive approach, and in many cases their recommendations are leading to enactment of new laws, along with stricter enforcement;

Whereas the best defense against the drunk or drugged driver is the use of safety belts and consistent safety belt usage by all drivers and passengers would save as many as ten thousand lives each year.

Whereas an increase in the public awareness of the problem of drunk and drugged driving may contribute to a change in society's attitude toward the drunk or drugged driver and help to sustain current efforts to develop comprehensive solutions at the State and local levels;

Whereas the Christmas and New Year holiday period, with more drivers on the roads and an increased number of social functions, is a particularly appropriate time to focus national attention on this critical problem;

Whereas designation of National Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness week in each of the last four years stimulated many activities and programs by groups in both the private and public sectors aimed at curbing drunk and drugged driving in the high-risk Christmas and New Year holiday period and thereafter; and

Whereas the activities and programs during National Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness Week have heightened the awareness of the American public to the danger of drunk and drugged driving: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of December 14, 1986, through December 20, 1986, is designated as "National Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness Week" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that week with appropriate activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL LITERACY DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 363) to designate July 2, 1986, as "National Literacy Day," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 363

Whereas literacy is a necessary tool for survival in society;

Whereas thirty-five million Americans today read at a level which is less than necessary for full survival needs;

Whereas there are twenty-five million adults in the United States who cannot read, whose resources are left untapped, and who are unable to offer their full contribution to society;

Whereas the annual cost of illiteracy to society has been estimated at $6,000,000,000;

Whereas there is a direct correlation between the number of illiterate adults unable to perform at the standard necessary for available employment and the money allocated to child welfare cost and unemployment compensation;

Whereas, although the largest number of adult illiterates is comprised of whites, in proportion to population size in percentages the number is higher for blacks and Hispanics, resulting in more economic and social discrimination problems;

Whereas the prison population represents the single highest concentration of adult illiteracy;

Whereas one million children between the ages of twelve and seventeen cannot read above a third grade level and 15 percent of recent graduates of urban high schools read at less than a sixth grade level;

Whereas 85 percent of the juveniles who appear in criminal court are functionally illiterate;

Whereas the 47 percent illiteracy rate among black youths is expected to increase to 50 percent by 1990;

Whereas one-half of the heads of households cannot read past the eighth grade level and one-third of mothers on welfare are functionally illiterate;

Whereas the federal, State, municipal, and private literacy programs have only been able to reach 4 percent of the total illiterate population;

Whereas it is vital to call attention to the problem of illiteracy, to help others understand the severity of the problem and the detrimental effects on society, and to reach people who are unaware of the free service and help available for illiteracy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That July 2, 1986, is designated as "National Literacy Day" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SEQUENTIAL REFERRAL OF CALENDAR NO. 561, S. 1655

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 561, S. 1655, as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, be sequentially referred to the Committee on Finance for its consideration thereof, that any amendments reported by the Committee on Finance relating to the subject matter of S. 1655 shall be in order and that the period for consideration by the Committee on Finance shall not extend beyond the close of business on August 1, 1986, provided that, if S. 1655 is not reported by the Committee on Finance at such time, it shall be immediately discharged from further consideration thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPRESENTATION BY SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 433) to direct the Senate Legal Counsel to represent Senator ARMSTRONG and his staff, and to authorize the testimony of his State Director, in the case of State of Colorado and the City and County of Denver v. Mary Cunningham, et al.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this coming Monday morning in a municipal court in Denver, 22 defendants will be tried for trespass, disturbing the peace, loitering, and failure to obey police officers in a case arising out of a sit-in at Senator ARMSTRONG's State office just over 1 year ago. The Senator from Colorado's State director, John W. Jackson, has been subpoenaed by the prosecution to testify at that proceeding as to the events which gave rise to the arrests and charges in question.

This resolution would direct the Senate legal counsel to represent Senator ARMSTRONG and his staff in the matter—as well as authorize Mr. Jackson to appear as a witness. Since it has already been indicated by the defense that an appeal would likely be taken from any conviction, the authority would further carry over to all subsequent actions related to the same, June 12, 1985, incident.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 433) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 433

Whereas, in the case of State of Colorado and the City and County of Denver v. Mary Cunningham, et al. Crim. No. 5-040856, pending in the Denver County Court, Denver, Colorado, the prosecution has obtained a subpoena for the testimony of John W. Jackson, State Director for Senator William L. Armstrong;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. 288b(a) and 288c(a)(2) (1982), the Senate may direct its counsel to represent Members or employees of the Senate with respect to subpoenas issued to them in their official capacity;

Whereas, by the privileges of the United States Senate and Rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by the judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas, when it appears that testimony of employees of the Senate is or may be needful for use in any court for the promotion of justice, the Senate will take such action as will promote the ends of justice consistent with the privileges and rights of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent Senator William L. Armstrong, John W. Jackson, and any other staff assistant of Senator Armstrong who may be asked to testify in the case of State of Colorado and the City and County of Denver v. Mary Cunningham, et al. or subsequent related proceedings.

SEC. 2. That John W. Jackson and any other staff assistant of Senator Armstrong who may be asked is authorized to testify in the case of State of Colorado and the City and County of Denver v. Mary Cunningham, et al., including any appeals thereto, except concerning matters which may be privileged.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

H.R. 5036 TO BE HELD AT THE DESK

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate receives from the House, H.R. 5036, dealing with the arts and humanities, it be held at the desk pending further disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

H.R. 4841 TO BE HELD AT THE DESK

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate receives from the House, H.R. 4841, a bill to amend the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act with respect to State allotments under the act, it be held at the desk pending further disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so orderded.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY—BERNE CONVENTION FOR PROTECTION OF LITERARY AND ARTISTIC WORKS (TREATY DOCUMENT NO. 99-27)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works (Treaty Document No. 99-27) transmitted to the Senate on June 18, 1986, by the President of the United States.

I also ask that the treaty be considered as having been read the first time; that it be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, is is so ordered.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to accession, I transmit herewith the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. I also transmit, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to the Convention.

The Convention obligates States party to the Convention to maintain high levels of protection for artistic works. The extent of protected works is broad, ranging from conventional works—such as books, motion pictures, and music—to new technological works including audio and video cassettes, and computer-related works. The Convention contains detailed provisions that specify minimum levels of protection to be provided by member countries.

Adherence to the Convention by the United States will demonstrate our commitment to improving international protection afforded intellectual property. When we are urging other countries to enhance copyright protection, the United States can no longer remain outside the Berne Union. It is, therefore, a matter of some urgency that the United States finally join the Berne Convention.

As indicated in the report of the Department of State, implementation of the Convention will require legislation. Until this legislation is enacted, the United States instrument of accession will not be deposited with the Director General of the World Intellectual Property Organization.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Convention and give its advice and consent to accession.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 18, 1986.

The Senate continued with the consideration of H.R. 3838.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we are waiting for the distinguished Senator from New York to offer an amendment. It will be the last amendment of the day, as I understand from the managers of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2152

(Purpose: Extend moratorium on the application of section 312(n) (6) to foreign corporations)

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator MOYNIHAN, I have an amendment that will extend the moratorium on the application of section 312(n)(6) to foreign corporations.

I send the amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Grassley amendment is set aside and the clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] for Mr. MOYNIHAN proposes an amendment numbered 2152.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike subparagraph (E) on page 2503 on lines 8 through 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(E) Paragraph (8) of section 312(n) (as redesignated by subparagraph (C)) is amended by striking out "paragraphs (5), (6), and (7)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (4) and (6)," and by inserting the following language after "December 31, 1985": "and paragraph (5) shall apply only in the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1987."

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

SECTION . TREATMENT OF CERTAIN TECHNICAL PERSONNEL.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 530 of the Revenue Act of 1978 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to services provided pursuant to an arrangement between such person and another organization whereby the individual provided services as an engineer designer drafter, computer programmer, systems analyst, or other similarly skilled worker engaged in a similar line of work for such other organization.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—the amendment made by this section shall apply to services rendered after the date of enactment of this section

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, as I indicated just before I proposed the amendment, this is a 2-year extension of the moratorium.

(By request of Mr. PACKWOOD, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to ensure that a provision of our 1984 tax legislation, enacted to remedy a wholly domestic abuse, is not applied to produce unintended and deleterious consequences upon the ability of U.S. companies to compete effectively with their foreign counterparts in foreign markets.

In 1984, Congress amended the tax law to close a loophole that permitted distributions from domestic corporations made in anticipation of the receipt of installment sales payments to be treated by U.S. shareholders as a nontaxable return of capital. However, the 1984 amendment would have a perverse effect upon a domestic corporation's ability to claim the appropriate credit for foreign taxes paid by an overseas subsidiary upon the receipt of a dividend from the foreign company. For growing corporations that regularly make installment sales, the 1984 amendment would result in a permanent and constantly increasing loss of the foreign tax credit.

Congress delayed the application of the 1984 amendment to foreign corporations until January 1, 1986, to give the Treasury Department the opportunity to study the provision's effect in the foreign context. I understand that the Treasury has undertaken the analysis contemplated by the Congress, and has concluded that the 1984 amendment should not apply to the computation of the foreign tax credit.

If Congress fails to modify the 1984 amendment to preclude its application to the computation of the foreign tax credit, U.S. corporations with overseas subsidiary operations will have to take steps to avoid the increased U.S. tax burden. In the short term, U.S. corporations may postpone the repatriation of overseas subsidiary earnings, causing an actual reduction in U.S. tax revenues.

As a long-term solution, U.S. corporations could restructure overseas installment sales to qualify as leases under U.S. tax principles. This would make the U.S. companies less competitive then their foreign counterparts. Alternatively, corporations could accelerate foreign taxes by selling overseas installment contracts for cash, once again providing foreign companies with a competitive edge.

The House tax reform bill would extend the moratorium adopted in 1984 for 6 months beyond that bill's January 1, 1986, effective date. The rate reduction contemplated by the Finance Committee bill would not become fully effective until January 1, 1988. If the moratorium were extended through 1987, the economic impact of the 1984 amendment would be mitigated by the proposed U.S. tax rates, which, in most cases, would be lower than the presently prevailing foreign rates.

My purpose is to propose a noncontroversial and narrow amendment aimed at preventing unintended consequences for our domestic companies.

As a review-raising measure, this amendment further provides a rule governing the employee status of certain technical services personnel.

Under this amendment, the classification as employees for tax purposes of certain types of workers should be clarified. Technical services firms have retained engineers, designers, drafters, computer programmers, systems analysts, and other similarly skilled personnel to render services to clients of the technical services firms. Despite the fact that the Internal Revenue Service regards such personnel as employees of the technical services firms, some of such personnel are taking the position that they should be treated as independent contractors and as such the technical services firms would not be required to withhold income and employment taxes from their earnings. Under this amendment such persons would be employees of the technical services firms and their wages should be subject to withholding FICA and FUTA taxes.[1]

Technical services include services provided by engineers, designers, drafters, computer programmers, systems analysts, and other similarly skilled personnel who are engaged in similar lines of work. Generally, personnel providing such services are retained by the technical services firm for assignments for clients and may work for several clients during the course of their employment by the technical services firm, although they may work only for a single client. The treatment of this class of persons as employees will provide greater certainty and simplification in employment tax law and will result in greater tax compliance.

The purpose of this amendment—to treat technical service personnel as employees of technical services firms—cannot be avoided by claims that such personnel are independent contractors, sole proprietors, partners, or employees of personal service corporations controlled by such personnel. For example, an engineer retained by a technical services firm to provide services to an aircraft manufacturer cannot avoid treatment as an employee of the technical services firm by organizing a corporation which he controls and then claiming to provide his services as an employee of that corporation.

Nothing in this provision will affect the application of section 414(n), dealing with so-called employee leasing, to technical services personnel. That provision, to the extent applicable under current law, would continue to apply in addition to this provision.

This provision will be effective upon the date of enactment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any debate of the amendment?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we are familiar with the amendment on this side and pleased that the chairman of the committee has offered this on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN]. The Senator was required to leave but he said if we wanted to agree to this amendment he would be happy for us to do so.

I am happy to cooperate. I am pleased to vote for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there will be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2152) was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PLANT FACILITY TRANSITIONAL RULE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Finance Committee's bill includes a transitional rule for plant facilities where construction has commenced and more than 50 percent of the cost was incurred or committed prior to January 1, 1986. The committee report states that construction is not considered to have commenced until work has actually begun on the site of the plant facility except in situations whether the plant facility is not to be located on land and, therefore, the initial construction work must be done elsewhere.

I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee whether the committee also intends that transitional relief may be available in very limited situations where construction of a plant facility to be located on land cannot begin on site because economic and other logistical considerations would make such construction unfeasible.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I would be glad to answer the question of my colleague from Alaska. It is the intention of the committee that transitional relief may be available to particular plant facility projects to be located on land in very limited circumstances where the initial construction work takes place off site because economic and logistical considerations would make such construction unfeasible.

To illustrate this point with an example relevant to Alaska, the construction of plant facilities to be installed on Alaska's North Slope must take place outside Alaska because of the prohibitive costs of onsite construction and other conditions, including weather, which make it entirely impractical to construct on site. These considerations are equivalent to the considerations that led the committee to decide to waive the onsite construction requirement for plant facilities not to be located on land. Therefore, it is the intent of the committee that the North Slope plant facilities, which are being constructed in accordance with the other stipulations of the transitional rule, should be granted transitional relief.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Oregon for his clarification of this point.

REAL ESTATE BROKER REPORTING PROVISION

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise in support of the amendment offered yesterday by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire. As a cosponsor, I am extremely concerned about the impact the provision in the Senate Finance Committee bill would have on real estate transactions.

Current law does not provide for any type of reporting mechanism by which the Internal Revenue Service must be notified when real property is sold and when a capital gain should be taxed. However, many believe some real estate sellers fail to report their property sales, thereby avoiding payment of the required capital gains tax.

The bill before us places the requirement of reporting on the real estate broker. This burden is unjustly placed. The broker simply locates a buyer for the seller. Closing agents have filing requirements, whereas brokers do not. Why should a party that is not accustomed to reporting and filing procedures be required to carry out such a task? To do so, in my view, would certainly be less efficient and effective. I see no reason why this requirement should exist.

Another concern of mine, Mr. President, is the paperwork burden that will be imposed on real estate brokers by this provision. Many of these brokers are small businessmen and businesswomen. They do not need this additional paperwork. We in Congress should not be making it more difficult for these types of businesses.

Therefore, I believe this revenue-neutral amendment—which has been approved by both sides—will satisfactorily address the problem. With it, we can reject this notion of placing such a burden on real estate brokers, yet still adequately satisfy the need to have a way to report capital sales. I am pleased we have been able to work out this problem.

PUBLIC EMPLOYEE PENSIONS

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss a matter of great concern to the millions of State, local, and Federal employees who are counting on their pension benefits.

Approximately 19 million individuals participate in a pension plan sponsored by a public entity. Under current law, retired public employees are permitted to get back all previously taxed contributions to their pension programs before being subjected once again to Federal taxes. That recovery rule allows the average Federal retiree to draw benefits for 18 months before having their pension benefits taxed.

The House bill would end the 3-year recovery rule after July 1. The Senate Finance Committee plan now being debated would phase out the recovery period over 2 years, beginning in January 1988.

This provision will radically change the years of financial planning by some 19 million Americans. We are about to subject public employees at all levels of government to significant changes in their retirement plans. I feel that this proposed change is absolutely wrong.

This is not an esoteric issue. It has a dramatic impact on postal workers, teachers, and all other public employees. In New York there are over 160,000 active Federal employees counting on 18 months of tax-free retirement benefits. The same holds true for the over 76,000 postal workers in my home State. I feel strongly that these individuals should not have the rules governing their retirement benefits changed in the middle of the game.

Mr. President, any change in the retirement plans of even one person must be carefully considered. Changes cannot be made in a cavalier manner. Planning for retirement begins years before people actually leave the work force. Millions of public employees have planned for their retirement based on current law.

Mr. President, it is my hope that the House-Senate conference committee on the tax bill will retain current law treatment of public employees' pension benefits. I feel that this is the fairest way to treat the millions of dedicated public employees in our Nation.●

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, when the United States is described as a world superpower, the statement is typically a reference to military superiority. Actually, the superpower label could just as accurately be applied to U.S.-agricultural activity.

Last year, for example, United States farmers harvested almost twice as much grain as did the Soviet Union, but they did so using half the acreage. In other words, the United States gathered 81 million more tons of grain on 138 million fewer acres. What is most incredible about the comparison, however, is the fact that the Soviet production was achieved with a work force of 27 million, while the superior United States production required a scant 3.7 million workers.

Achievements like that demonstrate the truly remarkable productive efficiency and spirit of the American farmer. It is also testimony to the fact that the U.S. Government does support policies that promote American agriculture.

I believe, therefore, that in considering the Tax Reform Act of 1986, we have a special duty to our farmers to preserve life on the farm—particularly the small family farm—as a legacy that can be passed from generation to generation.

I recently conducted a telephone survey of farmers in my State and found that, while overall they support this tax bill, they are worried about some of the provisions that, although well-intended, would further handicap their livelihood and be unfair to our Nation's most productive sector.

One of the provisions that would hit the farmers in Alabama the hardest is the elimination of income averaging. Over the past 5 years, Alabama farmers have been faced with severe drought, tornadoes, blight, and early freezes. It seems, at times, as if nothing worse can happen to the farmers of our State. The weather is something that a farmer really does not like to talk about because it tears at his soul and he can't do anything about it. So I think it is very unfair not to take the unpredictable obstacles facing farmers into consideration—special consideration.

I know one farmer whose income in 1981 was $60,000. In 1982, when Alabama had heavy flooding, his income dropped to $40,000. In 1983, this same farmer's farm experienced severe drought, and he lost his cotton crop, dropping his income to $30,000; in 1984, there were tornadoes, which wiped out his pecan crop, dropping is income further to $18,000.

In 1985, it cost him more to take his soybeans out of the field than he could make at market. Now, in 1986, the ground is so hard from the effects of the current drought that he cannot get his peanuts into the ground. If he does not get a crop into the ground soon he will be facing bankrupty.

This farmer is not someone who has mismanaged his farm. In 1986, he was honored as one of the best farm managers in our State. It is obvious that this farmer needs income averaging; it will probably be the only thing that saves him from going bankrupt.

Another provision farmers in my State are concerned about is the elimination of the capital gains treatment. Even though I do not like it, I can live with the elimination of the exclusion for short-term investments of 6 months, 9 months or a year, but we should keep capital gains for lifetime investments that take years to nurture, like timber. A farmer is lucky if he can cut two stands of timber in his lifetime, since it takes from 25 to 40 years to grow. Timber growers need capital gains treatment.

Some farmers are in such desperate straits that they are having to sell off portions of third generation farms to pay off the tax collector and the loan officer. To tax someone who is having to sell off part of a family farm at ordinary income rates is unfair, forcing families to sell off even more land.

So we should try to find a way to take care of long-term farm capital like land and timber.

I was very glad to see that the Finance Committee bill liberalizes the depreciation schedule for farmers. I am particularly pleased that up to $10,000 of machinery and equipment may be written off in the year of purchase.

I was also very relieved to see the Finance Committee address the farm debt crisis. No longer will a farmer, just climbing out of debt, be subject to new taxes just when he is getting back on his feet. When a farmer has been in bankruptcy and has had prior debt released, that release would not be counted as income in subsequent years.

It is my hope that the conferees will keep history in mind. History tells us that when America's farms are strong and healthy the rest of America's economy has historically flourished.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MEASURES HELD AT THE DESK

CRACK AND COCAINE MEANINGFUL PENALTIES ACT

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Crack and Cocaine Meaningful Penalties Act. I am pleased to announce that the Department of Justice enthusiastically supports the thrust of the bill.

Mr. President, it is time that we begin to punish cocaine and crack dealers as severely a we punish heroin dealers. Currently, cocaine dealers are not subject to the maximum penalties available under 21 U.S.C. 841(b) and 960(b) unless they are in trafficking in, importing, or exporting at least a kilogram (1,000 grams or 2.2 lbs.) of cocaine. This is 10 times as high as the amount of heroin required to merit a maximum sentence, yet cocaine is no less dangerous a narcotic.

This amount is unreasonably high. It offers those who prey on our children and our communities a safe haven that they simply do not deserve. When 4 or 5 million Americans are regular users of cocaine, when 1 of every 6 high school seniors has tried cocaine at least once, and when an epidemic of crack abuse is causing violent crime to increase dramatically in communities across this country, it is time to stop treating cocaine as anything less than an urgent drug law enforcement priority. It is time to make the punishment fit the crime.

Crack—or rock, as it is also known—is smokeable freebase cocaine. It sells for $5 to $20 a dose. The current issue of Newsweek (June 16, 1986) describes the severity of the crack crisis in its cover story on "Crack and Crime:"

> The crack trade operates like a guerrilla insurgency and makes an infuriatingly elusive target for police. Dealers—"ounce men," as they are known in L.A.—organize small cells of pushers, couriers, and lookouts from the ghetto's legion of unemployed teenagers. . . . Police raids on "crack houses" typically recover too little cocaine to impress prosecutors or the courts . . . Rock and crack represent a quantum leap in the addictive properties of cocaine . . . Sold in tiny chips that give the user a 5- to 20-minute high, crack often is purer than sniffable cocaine . . . Crack addicts are likely to be paranoid and highly active.

The director of the 1-800-COCAINE Hotline is quoted in the Newsweek article as saying:

> 33 percent of all coke users who call are talking about crack addiction. The explosion has taken place in the past six to nine months. It's a true epidemic.

According to information compiled by the hotline, crack and rock are widely available in 17 cities: Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Denver, Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles, Miami, Newark, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, Phoenix, San Francisco, Seattle, St. Louis, and the Washington-Baltimore area. It is widely available in 25 States.

Our laws are seriously out-of-date as applied to cocaine, and absurdly so as applied to crack, or freebase cocaine. An average dose of crack is only 65 miligrams. Under current law, therefore, a crack dealer cannot be subject to the maximum prison term unless he is caught with a kilogram, or more than 15,000 doses, of crack. This simply never happens. As a result, those who traffic in one of the most addictive substances known to man—a substance that is spreading a new crime wave through our cities and towns and our rural and suburban areas—escape the severe punishment they deserve.

The bill I am introducing today recognizes how inadequate these current penalties are. It set 100 grams of cocaine and I gram of crack, instead of 1,000 grams, as the threshhold amounts that will trigger imposition of the maximum penalties under 21 U.S.C. 841 and 960.

The Crack and Cocaine Meaningful Penalties Act subjects the first-time offender, who traffics in 100 grams of cocaine or 1 gram of crack to a maximum prison term of 20 years and a fine of $250,000. It subjects the repeat offender to up to 40 years and a $500,000 fine.

The offenses involved are those covered by 21 U.S.C. 841(a) and 960(a), including, among others: the manufacture, distribution, possession with intent to manufacture and distribute, importation, and exportation of cocaine and freebase cocaine.

This bill creates, for the very first time, a special penalty applicable to crack. Because crack is so potent, drug dealers need to carry much smaller quantities of crack than of cocaine powder. By treating 1,000 grams of feebase cocaine no more seriously than 1,000 grams of cocaine powder, which is far less powerful than freebase, current law provides a loophole that actually encourages drug dealers to sell the more deadly and addictive substance, and lets them sell thousands of doses without facing the maximum penalty possible.

As the explosive spread of cocaine and crack made clear, we are failing to meet one of the essential purposes of our criminal law, the deterrence of crime. With penalties that drug dealers laugh at, this plague can only get worse.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor the Crack and Cocaine Meaningful Penalties Act to close the loopholes that serve only to protect society's enemies—the drug dealers who operate today with impunity. Let's let the purveyors of these deadly substances know how tough we are willing to be.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my legislation be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(2) by striking out subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) 1 gram or more of a base form of cocaine;".●

● Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague from New York, Senator D'AMATO, in sponsoring the "Crack and Cocaine Meaningful Penalties Act." As my colleague has described, the legislation recognizes the real hazard that cocaine and smokeable freebase cocaine, known on the streets as "crack" and "rock," pose to the citizens of our Nation and provides for appropriate penalties for those who traffic in these dangerous substances.

Crack has been known to law enforcement officials in cities throughout this country for less than a year, yet, according to a report in the June 16, 1986, issue of Newsweek, it "has suddenly become America's fastest-growing drug epidemic and potentially its most serious. It is cheap, plentiful, and intensely addictive, a drug whose potential for social disruption and individual tragedy is comparable only to heroin." That is a sobering statement, Mr. President, and one which demands our attention and action.

Because crack is indeed a new phenomenon, our current Criminal Code does not deal with it effectively. This measure would create a special penalty which would apply to this "special" substance by providing for the maximum prison term of 20 years and a fine of $250,000 for the first-time offender who traffics in 1 gram—the equivalent of more than 15 doses—of crack. The penalty for repeat offenders, of course, would be greater.

Mr. President, those who traffic in crack and cocaine lure their customers, many of whom are children, into what often become a life of imprisonment to the drug, or worse, even death. I believe it is entirely appropriate, and long overdue, that we get tough with the cocaine and crack dealer.

The June 8 edition of the New York Times carried a story entitled "Crack Addiction Spreads Among the Middle Class." Accompanying that story was a photograph which displayed a placard reading "Crack Down on Crack." That, Mr. President, is what this legislation would do.

Today we know crack is available in 17 cities, among them Atlanta and New York, major municipalities in my and my colleague's home States; and crack is available in 25 States. Mr. President, it is too late for some of the citizens who live there. Their lives have already been damaged through addiction or through the distressing wave of crime which accompanies crack. But it is not too late for others, and they deserve protection.

We hope that the penalties which this bill would impose will create an effective deterrent against the spread of crack to other cities and States. Those who are not deterred would be punished in a manner more fitting their crime than is provided for under current law.

The stakes are high, Mr. President. They are the welfare, protection, and very lives of our citizens, particularly our children, and the safety and tranquility of our communities. The American people understand this. In fact, a Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll conducted earlier this month shows that a greater number of those questioned believed that it was more important for the Federal Government to combat drug abuse than to reform the Tax Code. I ask unanimous consent that the article entitled "Fight Against Drug Abuse Illustrates the Limits of Politics as Legislative Solutions Prove Elusive" in which it appeared in today's Wall Street Journal be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

In closing, I urge my colleagues to respond to the concerns of our citizens and to lend their support and cosponsorship to this important measure.●

FIGHT AGAINST DRUG ABUSE ILLUSTRATES THE LIMITS OF POLITICS AS LEGISLATIVE SOLUTIONS PROVE ELUSIVE

(By David Shribman)

ATHENS, GA.—Sen. Mack Mattingly had just finished a speech in northeast Georgia and now, during the long ride back to Atlanta, he was musing about the sort of issues politicians talk about when they run for reelection.

There's the successful flight against inflation, he was saying, and the progress in bringing down interest rates. And then, as the lights of Atlanta became visible in the distance, the Georgia Republican leaned over in the car and said, "But the biggest cloud out there is the problem of drugs."

Indeed, the most recent Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll indicates that while the public believes the drug problem is less urgent than reducing the federal budget deficit and unemployment and fighting terrorism, it regards curbing drug abuse as an important challenge—a higher priority, in fact, than overhauling the tax system. "It should be the most significant issue that we face," says Mr. Mattingly, who is seeking a second term this November.

But though Rep. William Gray (D., Pa.) calls it "an epidemic on the level of the medieval European plague and the No. 1 problem we face" and Sen. Dan Quayle (R., Ind.) recognizes it is "one of the biggest issues in America's families," the fight against drug abuse illuminates the limits of politics.

USUAL TOOLS OF POLITICS DON'T WORK

Political figures have come to recognize that the usual tools of politics—speeches, bargaining, commissions, legislation—are poorly suited to this challenge. "It's not the kind of problem that we usually deal with," says Sen. Quayle. "If the drug problem could be resolved by spending $1 billion, we'd spend $1 billion. But it's not one of those kinds of problems."

Moreover, politicians, who are at ease discoursing on traditional themes like the economy and foreign affairs are simply uncomfortable talking about drug abuse.

"This kind of issue spooks us," says Senate Republican Whip Alan Simpson of Wyoming. "We're embarrassed about this issue—not embarrassed to talk about it, but embarrassed that we don't know anything about these things."

To be sure, Congress has taken some steps to help win the battle against drug abuse. It has passed legislation allowing the military to help local law-enforcement officials, stiffened penalties for drug-dealing offenses, tied U.S. foreign aid to drug-eradication efforts in nations that have exported narcotics here, and upgraded law-enforcement equipment so that the U.S. isn't, as Sen. Paula Hawkins (R., Fla.) is fond of saying, "outspent, outgunned and outmanned" by the drug underground.

CONGRESS FAILS TO RESPOND

But lawmakers acknowledge that Congress has failed to respond creatively to the drug issue and that traditional politics hasn't been supple enough to find answers to the problem or, just as important, to make it easier for others to address the issue.

In the past, conventional liberals have sought to address this issue by attacking the social problems that lead to drug abuse while conservatives have sought to increase penalties against drug traffickers. But the problem hasn't lent itself to such facile responses, particularly in an age when drugs have won wide acceptance as a recreational activity among people of all classes.

"You can make speeches and denounce drug abuse—nobody will criticize you for that—but to get hold of this issue in a meaningful way is almost impossible for folks like us," says Sen. Paul Simon (D., Ill.). "There are clearly limits to what we can do, and that's frustrating."

Many experts in drug abuse believe that political figures have acquitted themselves especially poorly in this important national issue.

'UTTER IGNORAMUSES' ABOUT DRUGS

"Most of the leading policy makers and legislators are utter ignoramuses when it comes to the drug issue," says Arnold Trebach, a drug-policy expert at the American University in Washington. Mark Kleiman, a research fellow in criminal justice at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government and a former Reagan administraton Justice Department official, adds: "Politicians love to talk about this issue, but they talk about it in a way that is totally remote from any attempt to make sensible drug policy."

Mr. Trebach contends that the political arena is the worst place to debate and fashion a strategy for combatting drug abuse. "You've got people who are embarrassed to talk about anything that creates personal pressure, you've got enormous ignorance on the part of Congress and you have pure political expedience—the willingness to exploit this issue. It's a recipe for social disaster."

In the past year many Republican legislators, eager to ensure that the GOP continues to control the Senate, have deferred on the drug issue to Sen. Hawkins, who is running for reelection from Florida, where the connection between drugs and crime has given the question great urgency. "She knows," says on Republican senator, "what she has to target to get reelected."

At the same time, others believe the issue offers great political opportunity to office-seekers beyond Florida's borders. "This should be a major political issue," says Judith Richards Hope, a member of the President's Commission on Organized Crime and a top domestic adviser in the Ford administration. "It affects productivity in every segment of our society, it is a major cancer that has got to be rooted out. It is the fuel . . . of organized crime. It's as serious a problem as we have in this country."

STRIKING A RESPONSIVE CHORD

Sen. William Armstrong of Colorado, a potential GOP presidential candidate, has suggested that the drug issue might even make a foundation for a national campaign. "A person who raises this as an issue will find that it strikes a responsive chord," he says. "It is a legitimate issue. It cuts clear across other political and demographic barriers. This is a concern in the barrio and in the WASP suburbs."

But many lawmakers believe that the public has lost faith in politicians' ability to address this problem. "We can answer questions about Contra aid, tax reform, South Africa and the farm crisis, but I always wonder why we have such a hard time getting to the nub of this issue." says Sen. Nancy Kassebaum (R., Kan.), who was active in anti-drug work in Wichita before she went to Washington. "People don't think we can help this problem. They don't look to the Senate."

Congress hasn't rushed to address the issue, mainly because the questions involved offer political peril: How widely should drug testing be applied? What level of drug abuse is "acceptable"? Would legalizing certain milder "recreational" drugs such as marijuana ease the problem?

"Politicians like to portray it as a war to the death with drugs," says Mr. Kleiman, the Harvard criminal-justice expert. "So they can't even think about new ways to attack this problem because they're afraid of being seen as an opponent of current policies and thus soft on drugs."

By Mr. SPECTER:

S. 2581. A bill to increase the obligation limitations for Federal-aid highways and highway safety construction programs; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

INCREASED FUNDING FOR HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT

● Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation which will authorize increased funding for much needed highway projects across this country and in my own State of Pennsylvania, without raising taxes. My bill will do this by drawing down the approximately $10 billion unobligated balance that currently exists in the highway trust fund and preventing the even greater buildup of unobligated funds that would occur without this action.

The cause for this buildup of a highway trust fund reserve and a partial cause of the shortfall in Federal highway dollars to the States is that the States are not allowed to obligate at a rate that equals their apportionment. My home State is an example of this. Pennsylvania's federally mandated obligation ceiling versus its apportionment was only 93 cents on the dollar in 1985 and is 84 cents on the dollar in 1986. Pennsylvania now reportedly has a $460 million unobligated balance because of these low mandated obligation ceilings.

To remedy this situation, obligation ceilings would be set at $14.2 billion per year in my bill for fiscal year 1987 through fiscal year 1990. This would reduce the outstanding obligation in the highway trust fund to $2.2 billion by the end of fiscal year 1990 which represents a reasonable reserve against unexpected obligations or revenue variances. The $10 billion reserve is entirely unreasonable.

Comparing the obligation ceiling in my bill to the ceiling proposed in the public highway authorization bill, S. 2405, shows the increased spending allowed by my bill:

[In billions of dollars]

Fiscal year—	Proposed obligation ceiling under my bill	Proposed ceiling under S. 2405	Increased spending allowed by my bill
1987	14.20	12.35	1.85
1988	14.20	12.35	1.85
1989	14.20	12.35	1.85
1990	14.20	12.35	1.85
Total	56.8	49.40	7.4

Pennsylvania's share of increase [1]

Fiscal year:	Millions
1987	$81.4
1988	81.4
1989	81.4
1990	81.4

[1] Approximately 4.4 percent of U.S. total.

The need for these funds is great in this country. The Nation has invested over $100 billion in the Interstate Highway System which is 86 percent complete. It would be unconscionable to let this investment fall into disrepair, but that is what is occurring.

My home State of Pennsylvania is illustrative. Highway funding is simply not keeping pace with requirements in Pennsylvania. The State estimates a requirement of $1.4 billion for interstate restoration between now and 1990. Given present funding projections, Pennsylvania could only mount $500 million against this shortfall. For example, Interstate 80, which is a vital link between the East and the West, requires $50 million per year to finance necessary reconstruction, but receives only $15 million per year through the regular apportionment of Federal funds for interstate restoration. The expenditures that I am proposing will greatly help this situation.

Also very important is the significant stimulative economic effect that the expenditure of these funds will have. A study by the Pennsylvania Economy League found that 104 jobs are supported for every $1 million of highway construction. The increase in the obligation ceiling, and, therefore, spending authorization, under my bill would support approximately 187,200 additional jobs nationwide and 8,500 jobs in Pennsylvania annually.

Increases in obligation ceilings as I have proposed also will utilize tremendous amounts of steel. The U.S. Department of Transportation issued a bulletin which states that for every million dollars of highway dollars spent across the United States, on average, 111 tons of steel are utilized. Based on the increase that I have suggested, steel consumption should increase by approximately 200,000 tons per year.

I am also offering an amendment to S. 2405 pertaining to the "Buy America" clause in that bill. The "Buy America" clause under the 1982 act essentially required that 100 percent of the steel used in projects funded with Federal highway funds be domestically produced. A clause in S. 2405 would exempt contracts under $500,000 from being subject to the "Buy America" clause. I must stand against this attempt to subvert the "Buy America" provision. If this clause had been in effect in fiscal year 1985, approximately 3,000 or 48 percent of the 6,275 contracts awarded would have ben exempt from "Buy America". This suggests an attack on the hard-hit steel industry that is unacceptable to this Senator.

It is apparent based on the facts that I have stated that my bill is crucial for meeting the States' needs for highway funds and will produce many additional benefits in steel production and jobs. My amendment regarding the "Buy America" clause will assure that American dollars go to support American jobs. Both actions are of great importance to the Nation and to my State of Pennsylvania.●

S. 2582. A bill to provide for the deduction of points when refinancing a home; to the Committee on Finance.

DEDUCTION OF POINTS ON HOME REFINANCING

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I'm introducing legislation to allow taxpayers to deduct points they pay when they refinance their homes. This bill is necessary in order to overturn a recent announcement by the Internal Revenue Service [IRS] that under section 461(g)(2) of the Tax Code points paid to refinance a home aren't deductible in the year paid.

The bill I'm introducing today, Mr. President, overrules IRS news release IR-86-68, issued on May 13, 1986. The legislation does this by amending section 461(g)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code to insert the word "refinancing" in the statute. The effect of this change, if adopted, would be to allow points paid on refinancing a home to be deducted in the year paid, just like points paid for the initial purchase of a home, or points paid to borrow money to improve a home.

Mr. President, we all know there have been thousands of taxpayers across the country who've taken the opportunity of lower mortgage rates to refinance their homes. The well-established business practice in virtually all parts of the country is that points are paid when homes are bought, and refinanced. Section 461(g)(2) of the Code was put into the law in 1976 in recognition of the fact that points are usually paid.

Mr. President, the ability to deduct mortgage interest is one of the most sacred parts of the Tax Code in this country. There've never been any serious proposals made that would restrict the ability of taxpayers to take this deduction. Points are interest paid on the front-end of the transaction, and are an acceptable deduction by virtue of the action of the Congress in the 1976 legislation. To say that simply because you refinance your home—to take advantage of lower interest rates—points paid on the refinancing of the home aren't deductible, seems to me to be the wrong result for the taxpayers of this country. Men and women aren't refinancing their homes simply to have something to do. They are doing this to take advantage of lower interest rates, which means lower mortgage payments each month. Unless we amend the Tax Code to allow points on refinancing to be deductible, we will have broken a commitment to each homeowner in this country.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort, and I hope we can move this bill through the legislative process in a very prompt manner.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE RESOLUTION 432—RELATING TO CERTAIN CUBAN POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. CHILES submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 432

Whereas, 17 Cuban political prisoners have been released from imprisonment;

Whereas, these political prisoners have suffered brutal and inhumane treatment from a government identified as one of the worst human rights violators in the world;

Whereas, these individuals have been denied basic human rights because of their steadfast opposition to a Communist and totalitarian regime;

Whereas, U.S. immigration law has consistently reflected a national policy of providing safe haven to those experiencing political persecution;

Whereas, the President of the United States has pledged to make "any effort" to allow these former Cuban political prisoners to seek refuge in the United States;

Whereas, the Departments of State and Justice have indicated that asylum will be denied these former prisoners pending reinstatement of the December 14, 1985, immigration accord suspended by the Cuban Government;

Whereas, this denial of asylum will serve only to work further hardship on these victims of Cuban injustice;

Be it therefore resolved That it is the sense of the Senate that for humanitarian reasons—Roger F. Reyes Hernandez, Sergio Ruiz Hernandez, Fernando Rodriguez Vega, Francisco Diaz Garrigo, Jose Sanchez Otero, Osvaldo Sanabria Morales, Osvaldo Baro Miranda, Manuel Antolin Marcel, Arcadio Peguero Ceballas, Pastor Macuran Rodriguez, Jesus Martinez Martinez, Felipe Hernandez Garcia, Gilberto Prats Rodriguez, Samuel Tejera Milian, Francisco Garcia Rojas, Fernando Villalan, Juan Sanchez Bruna, be granted asylum in the United States. That innocent political prisoners not be employed as leverage to effect changes in policy by the Cuban Government. And that the Department of State seek other means to accomplish reinstatement of the December 14, 1985, immigration accord.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, the recent release of 17 political prisoners by the Cuban Government is welcome news. Cuba ranks as one of the world's worst violators of human rights and this release of political prisoners is a rare bright note.

A few prisoner releases, while welcome, do not erase Cuba's long history of abuse. Nor will it still our desire to see those who remain in Cuba's jails set free. As free men, we must constantly strive to secure freedom for Cuba's political prisoners. Those men and women whose only offense is a belief in democracy and who have sacrificed so much in defying the totalitarian regime of Fidel Castro deserve nothing less.

Mr. President, after years of suffering the injustice of the Cuban penal system, these former prisoners are now facing what can only be called an unjust policy decision by the U.S. Government. Incredibly our State Department, in a misguided attempt to pressure the Cuban Government to reinstate the December 14 immigration accord is denying these men asylum in the United States. I certainly want the immigration accord reinstated but punitive action against men who have suffered at the hands of Castro is hardly the way to go about it.

I believe that by denying these political prisoners asylum we punish the innocent for the actions of the guilty. This does not make sense and to my mind it won't leverage the Cuban Government to do anything.

In this country we maintain a long held tradition of providing haven for the victims of political persecution. In this case the State Department has turned its back on the oppressed and burdens them for a situation over which they had no control. It is wrong to place roadblocks in these political prisoners' path to freedom.

I believe the administration should reconsider this policy. The President just a few days ago pledged to make every effort to permit recently released political prisoners into this country. The State Department, however, has not followed through. It is certainly imperative that the State Department receive a strong message.

Mr. President, I am introducing a Senate Resolution to express the concern of the Senate with this situation and to send a message that those who have fought the good fight for democracy and suffered at hands of a brutal, Communist regime are welcome in this country.

SENATE RESOLUTION 433—AUTHORIZING REPRESENTATION BY THE SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. BYRD) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 433

Whereas in the case of State of Colorado and the City and County of Denver v. Mary Cunningham, et al. Crim. No. 5-040856, pending in the Denver County Court, Denver, Colorado, the prosecution has obtained a subpoena for the testimony of John W. Jackson, State Director for Senator William L. Armstrong;

Whereas pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. 288b(a) and 288c(a)(2) (1982), the Senate may direct its counsel to represent Members or employees of the Senate with respect to subpoenas issued to them in their official capacity;

Whereas by the privileges of the United States Senate and Rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by the judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas when it appears that testimony of employees of the Senate is or may be needful for use in any court for the promotion of justice, the Senate will take such action as will promote the ends of justice consistent with the privileges and rights of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent Senator William L. Armstrong, John W. Jackson, and any other staff assistant of Senator Armstrong who may be asked to testify in the case of State of Colorado and the City and County of Denver v. Mary Cunningham, et al. or subsequent related proceedings.

SEC. 2. That John W. Jackson and any other staff assistant of Senator Armstrong who may be asked is authorized to testify in the case of State of Colorado and the City and County of Denver v. Mary Cunningham, et al., including any appeals thereto, except concerning matters which may be privileged.

123D BIRTHDAY OF WEST VIRGINIA

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, June 20 is a special day in the history of West Virginia. It was on this glorious and splendid day 123 years ago that West Virginia became the 35th State of the Union.

The proud people of West Virginia have overcome much strife and turbulence over the past century and a quarter. Born in war, West Virginia has known its share of hardship—and has always summoned the courage to surmount it.

Traveling across the State in his pursuit of the Presidency in 1960, John F. Kennedy recognized the toughness inherent in West Virginia's character. "When patriotism and courage and strength were in demand," he declared, "it was West Virginia who led the way in World Wars I and II and the Korean war to advance the cause of liberty and freedom." Indeed, the bold people of West Virginia have always answered the call of patriotism. This fact makes West Virginia's birthday more than a State celebration—it is a commemoration of the values all of America holds dear.

Beyond her rich tradition of patriotism and dedication to the advancement of our country, West Virginia is one of the most picturesque places in America. Traveling across the splendor of her mountains on a crisp spring day, the fresh scent of pure, clean air is overpowering. So, too, is the vision of natural beauty which surrounds

you. Small wonder that West Virginia has been dubbed "Almost Heaven."

So, Mr. President, today is a joyous celebration which is befitting of recognition among us all. It is the 123d birthday of the great State of West Virginia, a State which I am enormously proud and honored to have the opportunity to serve. With its rich tradition and beauty in mind, I say happy birthday to you, West Virginia!●

SALT: WHAT'S ALL THE NOISE ABOUT?

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, on its face, it's hard to explain. The President announces that we're no longer bound to an unratified arms agreement that's known to have expired last December and he is immediately attacked as if he's repudiated the entire arms control process.

Yet, our arms negotiators are still at work at Geneva, the Soviets have just made their first new offer since last fall, and the President has announced that the United States will not endeavor to deploy any more ballistic missile warheads or strategic systems than the Soviets have deployed.

What, then, is all the noise about?

Perhaps it's the often repeated concern that without SALT, the Soviets will out-build us. Certainly, the President's critics emphasize this point.

But if facts matter, this could'nt be the explanation. True, the CIA released estimates that without SALT, the Soviets might add between 3,500 and 5,500 ballistic missile warheads by 1990 and more than double their current inventory by 1994. But this differs only 6 to 9 percent from what the CIA estimates the Soviets are most likely to secure without SALT.

In fact, SALT has never been much of a restraint on the Soviets. The Soviets' ballistic missile warhead inventory has grown 500 percent since SALT I and more than doubled since SALT II. They already have more than seven highly accurate ICBM warheads for every U.S. silo.

If the facts don't support this argument or the agitation, perhaps it's diplomatic atmospherics that are at issue. We must adhere to SALT, the President's critics argue, since whatever its value, it would be reckless to drop until we have something better to take its place.

But if the President's critics are serious about this, they don't seem to take it very seriously. Consider: They're not seeking SALT's ratification; they don't have the Senate votes for this. Nor are they demanding strict adherence to SALT. Why? To do this would only highlight what rightly prompted SALT to be dropped in the first place—Soviet cheating.

SALT prohibits flight testing more than one new ICBM. Beyond their one announced new ICBM type, the SS-24, the Soviets have deployed 72 mobile SS-25's and recently flight tested a follow-on to their monster SS-18. To mask these violations, the Soviets have further violated SALT's prohibition against encoding or encrypting missile test data transmissions.

Each of these violations are serious. With a reserve force of mobile missiles, such as the SS-25's, the Soviets can eliminate the deterrent value of our force by making it impossible for us to target what we must to limit further damage and end war on telerable terms. A more accurate, heavy follow-on missile to the SS-18, meanwhile, could threaten even super-hardened silos proposed to protect MX. Finally, so long as Soviet levels of missile telemtry encryption are tolerated, neither SALT nor any other arms agreement will be verifiable.

The whole purpose behind SALT, of course, was to prevent such provocations by limiting missile modernization and demanding minimal levels of openness to assure verification.

The critics, however, no longer see things this way. Instead, they now argue that the true core of SALT consists of the three limits that the Soviets have not yet clearly violated on bombers carrying long-range cruise missiles and on multiple warhead ICBM's and sea-launched missiles. Conveniently, these are the very same limits that our own bomber, missile, and submarine missile boat modernization programs are now bumping up against. This may be an excellent political ploy, but it has very little to do with any serious effort to sustain SALT.

This leaves us with the last possibility, that if strict adherence to SALT isn't possible, it nonetheless is critical to adhere to as much of it as possible to maintain what arms control we can. This sounds plausible, but again, it's hard to believe and, ironically, is challenged by the critics' own suggested means for coping with Soviet SALT violations.

The central problem with SALT, after all, is that our strategic assumptions have changed since 1979. Where before we hoped that the Soviets would not acquire an overwhelming superiority in hard-target first-strike warheads, now we are resigned to such superiority. Where we once assumed the Soviets would freeze their development of missile defenses, now we recognize their near-term ability to deploy a crude nationwide system and the sustained, advanced work on directed energy weapons.

Finally, where we once hoped that the mere threat of possible withdrawal from SALT would prevent significant Soviet violations, now we know that they are willing to violate the agreement even after years of public complaints concerning their noncompliance.

To continue SALT, knowing all this, or worse, to build on it as a foundation isn't arms control, it's posturing. The President knows this, that's why he dropped SALT and is promoting proposals that will bring real reductions and factor in defense. Nor is SALT's obsolescence lost on the Soviets, whose latest arms proposal makes no mention of SALT, but instead is primarily focused on managing the development of missile defenses.

In fact, even the President's critics are willing to ignore SALT so they might deploy a new mobile missile, the Midgetman. This missile, they argue, is the perfect response to the Soviets' SS-25 violation of SALT. It's also a blantant violation of the agreement.

What, then, is all the noice about? If it's simply politics, we shouldn't listen. If it's substantive, it's yet to be demonstrated.●

IN COMMENDATION OF THE PHARMACEUTICAL MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, for some years, I, along with others, have preached the need for less Federal involvement in our society and more encouragement of what have come to be called private sector initiatives, both here and abroad. Today I would like to focus my colleagues' attention on a prime example of private business voluntarily expending its resources to improve the quality of life among the disadvantaged—in this instance, in the developing world.

Africare, a Washington-based nonprofit organization dedicated to conducting health projects in Africa, has announced that this Sunday, June 22, in its Africare Day ceremonies at Howard University School of Law, it will present its 1986 Africare Distinguished Service Award to the Pharmaceutical Manufactuerers Association "in special recognition of contributions to the development of Africa."

In a letter to PMA President Gerald J. Mossinghoff, Africare Director C. Payne Lucas wrote:

> Africare applauds the significant contribution the pharmaceutical industry has made through PMA toward support of health care delivery in Africa. It is through this commitment on the part of PMA members that Africare has been able to effect a program for improved management and distribution of pharmaceuticals in The Gambia, with plans underway to implement additional programs in other parts of Africa.
> PMA member companies have made significant essential drug and vaccine contributions to meet special needs. Many lives have been saved as a result of the many investments over the last three decades of hundreds of millions of dollars in production, distribution, and research facilities in developing countries, including, of course, Africa. The cooperative effort by your industry is unprecedented and truly deserves substantial recognition.

The Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association represents research based pharmaceutical companies. In the Gambia, 13 of its member companies financed a 21-month Africare demonstration project to improve the management and distribution of basic pharmaceuticals so they became more widely available in remote areas. Under the leadership of PMA President Mossinghoff and PMA Chairman of the Board William R. Miller of Briston-Myers Co., PMA is continuing its involvement in African development. Currently 14 PMA member companies are financing a project in Sierra Leone similar to that undertaken in the Gambia, at a cost of more than $350,000.

PMA Chairman Miller termed the Gambia and Sierra Leone efforts "positive steps in overcoming poor distribution systems that represent the principal obstacle to delivery of lifesaving medicines to rural populations in many Third World countries."

Mr. President, I believe that both Africare and the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association deserve our thanks and encouragement. It is truly heartening to see the commitment to public service by private organizations like these. Our country and our world are better places through the voluntary efforts of these and countless other organizations who are responsible for so much of the social and health care progress in all nations.●

HONORING JENNINGS RANDOLPH AND THE BLIND VENDING FACILITY ACT

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise to recognize a significant contribution of my immediate predecessor in the U.S. Senate, the Honorable Jennings Randolph.

Senator Randolph's legacy is truly monumental. During his 40 years in Congress, he was responsible for legislation in many areas. So many of his accomplishments endure in the form of laws and programs which continue to improve the lives of our citizens every day.

The Randolph-Sheppard Act, which became law 50 years ago today, and the programs created for blind vendors as a result of that law, are tributes to the vision and humanity of Senator Randolph.

While a member of the House of Representatives in 1934, during President Roosevelt's first term, Jennings Randolph proposed legislation to provide jobs which would enable blind persons to operate on their own in Federal buildings. This was during the midst of the Great Depression, a time when so many people were out of work. In an era when the blind were stereotyped as helpless and able to do little more than sell pencils on street corners, Jennings Randolph knew that persons disabled by blindness could and wanted to function independently—if only given the opportunity. With this conviction and determination, then-Representative Randolph succeeded in winning the support of his colleagues and gaining passage of his legislation.

Some 40,000 blind persons have been vendors under the Randolph-Sheppard Act for the Blind since its inception in 1936. Today, there are 3,700 blind vendors operating on Federal and other property across the country. They are doing so, too, in Senator Randolph's home State and mine, West Virginia.

Mr. President, I know that my Senate colleagues share my appreciation for Senator Randolph's distinguished work on behalf of the blind, and ask them to join me in celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Randolph-Sheppard Act for the Blind.●

BALTIC FREEDOM DAY

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, this past weekend, Baltic Americans throughout the country took time to reflect on the tragic Soviet occupation of their homelands which began 46 years ago, and to pay tribute to their friends and loved ones still suffering under Soviet oppression in Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia.

I was honored to join Baltic-Americans in marking "Baltic Freedom Day" in my own State of Michigan, where I had the opportunity to witness the passion and commitment which Baltic Americans bring to the cause for justice in their homelands. The time spent in their presence convinced me that, with time and continued perseverance, freedom will eventually be returned to the captive Baltic nations of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia.

As the sponsor of this year's Baltic Freedom Day" resolution in the Senate, I am pleased that its unanimous approval by the Congress, for the fifth consecutive year, has finally provoked a response from the leaders in the Kremlin.

A recent article in the official newspaper Pravda strongly criticized President Reagan and the entire Congress for their collective ignorance in emphasizing that the three Baltic States were once free of Soviet domination.

The Pravda editorial of June 7 read in part:

> U.S. President R. Reagan recently signed a congressional resolution about a so-called "Baltic Freedom Day". . . . Maybe . . . R. Reagan has the wrong name? Or perhaps his advisers have not explained to him that Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia are, of their own free will, an inalienable part of the Soviet Union and not "oppressed people," as it might appear to the U.S. President from his California ranch? Or perhaps he simply signed the document without reading it. . . . Otherwise, it must be stated that the U.S. lawmakers and the U.S. President have political standards so low that they would make any half-way knowledgeable schoolboy blush.
> It is never too late to learn. Maybe it would be worthwhile for U.S. Senators and Congressmen headed by their President to sit down and read the elementary textbook "The History of the U.S.S.R." in order to gain at least some basic knowledge about our country's state organization.

The fact is, we know the truth about Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia, and we will not let the truth be forgotten or history rewritten. We do not need a history lesson from the Kremlin.

The truth is that, for centuries, the Baltic States were free of Soviet domination. It is also true that, just 46 years ago, freedom and independence in Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia was snuffed by the Soviet Union.

On June 14, 1941, Soviet troops began a reign of terror in the Baltic States which rivaled that of the Nazis. During the night, more than 50,000 innocent men, women, and children were rounded up, forced into railroad cattle cars and deported to slave labor camps in Siberia. During the next 10 years of Soviet perpetrated violence, more than 600,000 Baltic citizens—10 percent of the total population of those nations, were eliminated.

The tragedy of the enslavement of the Baltic people 46 years ago is not only that those who persecuted the Baltic peoples have never been brought to justice, but that the persecution continues today.

After nearly five decades, the organized repopulation of the Baltic States by ethnic Russians and the forced russification of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia continues. Young Balts are forced to learn Russian at an early age, and fluency in the Russian language is a prerequisite for university admission and any higher level employment opportunities. The influx of over 1.2 million Russian settlers, combined with massive deportations, has lowered the native population in Latvia to 53 percent, in Estonia to 63 percent and in Lithuania to 80 percent.

Soviet disregard for these captive nations was painfully evident in their treatment of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster. Authorities did not warn the people living in the affected areas of the dangers of radioactive contamination, and they made it difficult for Baltic and Ukrainian Americans to get information about friends and loved ones living there. In addition, Soviet authorities continue to withhold important information about the disaster, despite a call by the international community for greater details.

Recent reports indicate that Latvian Army reservists are being spirited off to Chernobyl in the middle of the night, without adequate protective equipment, to assist in cleanup at the reactor site. This clandestine mobilization is frighteningly reminiscent of the events of the night of June 14, 1941.

In light of the Chernobyl accident, it is particularly disturbing to know that an expansion of a huge nuclear plant in Northeast Lithuania, expected to be the largest in the world, is underway. Construction of the plant continues, despite protests from the scientific community in the Soviet Union that it is unsafe and lacks proper facilities to cool and contain contaminated water from the reactor core. In the event of the release of radioactivity, similar to that at Chernobyl, the contamination would be discharged directly into Lithuania's largest lake, Lake Druksial, which feeds into the Daugava River, and winds through many of Lithuania's most densely populated regions on its way to the Baltic Sea.

This is not the only nuclear threat which faces the Baltic people. The Baltic nations play host to one of the largest concentration of nuclear weapons on Earth. Over one-half of the nuclear weapons in the European part of the Soviet Union are stationed in Lithuania, Estonia, and Latvia. This deadly arsenal includes a substantial number of medium range SS-20's aimed at Northern and Central Europe, two squadrons of nuclear capable backfire bombers and six frogger ships equipped with ballistic missiles.

And so, today, continued United States support for the quest for freedom and self-determination in the Baltic States is more critical than ever. With the help of the Baltic-American community, the foreign policy decisions of our Government must be made with particular sensitivity to the plight of the citizens of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia.

At the heart of our policy toward the Baltic nations must be our continued commitment to never recognize as legal the Soviet occupation there.

We must continue to press the Soviets to grant basic human rights to all the Baltic people, including Kaisa Randpere, a 2-year-old Estonian, separated from her parents because of Soviet refusal to allow her to emigrate; Janis Barkans, a 27-year-old Latvian who continues to suffer mistreatment in the infamous Mordovian prison camp for demanding respect for his human rights; and Bayls Gajauskas, a 60-year-old Lithuanian dissident who has spent nearly half of his life in prison for promoting nationalism and human rights.

In addition, we must take a leading role in pressing for international safeguards on nuclear facilities within the International Atomic Energy Agency in order to prevent another Chernobyl-like disaster in the future.

Above all, we must reassure the people of the Baltic States that we still support their fundamental right of self-determination. The preservation of the distinct Lithuanian, Latvian, and Estonian identities must not be the task of the enslaved Baltic peoples alone. We must help, and we will help.

Knowing that the road to freedom is a long and difficult one, we recommit ourselves to making the dream of liberty a reality for all the Baltic peoples.

We must give hope to the desire for freedom which continues to burn in the hearts of the Baltic peoples. Where the memory of freedom persists, as it does in the occupied nations of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, totalitarian domination can never succeed.●

CALL TO CONSCIENCE

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am honored to join my distinguished colleagues in the Congressional Call to Conscience for Soviet Jews. I particularly commend my colleague from Maine, Senator MITCHELL, for taking the initiative in this area during the second session of the 99th Congress.

Recent events give us some hope for improvements in United States-Soviet relations. The November summit meeting and the prospect of a second summit fuel hopes for a partial thaw in relations between the superpowers. The release of Anatoly Shcharansky and the reuniting of more than a hundred divided spouses are signs of this development.

However, we should not let these events lull us into forgetting the plight of the 350,000 Soviet Jews who are still denied the right to emigrate. Jewish emigration which reached its peak of 51,000 in 1979, dropped to 1,140, and now is even lower than last year's level.

Repression in the Soviet Union is not confined to those Jews who seek to emigrate. The approximately 2.5 Soviet Jews suffer sweeping restrictions on the right to practice their religion. No seminars exist to train religious leaders. Neither Jewish religious texts nor ritual objects are produced in the Soviet Union. Persecution of unofficial Hebrew teachers continue. In addition, anti-Semitism remains a part of the military indoctrination program in the U.S.S.R., and anit-Semitic programs have been shown on prime-time television.

The case of Mikhail Kremen vividly portrays the plight of Soviet Jewry today. He first applied for emigration in late 1973, only to be denied permission on grounds of having been privy to state secrets. At his prior job as an engineer at an electronics plant, he worked only on open, nonsecret projects.

Mikhail's life since 1974 has been marred by a series of hardships and harassment. In October 1976, Mikhail was brutally beaten and imprisoned for 15 days simply for inquiring of the Ministry of Interior why they had denied him permission to emigrate. In July 1978, during the trial of Anatoly Shcharansky, Mikhail was again imprisoned.

The Kremen's problems with Soviet authorities are not confined to Mikhail. By 1980, his wife, Galina, applied to emigrate. She was subsequently informed that she had no chance of receiving her visa before her husband. Sasha Kremen, Mikhail's son, was arrested in November 1982 and sentenced to 4 years imprisonment in a labor camp outside Moscow. He is scheduled to be released in November of this year.

The release of refuseniks, like Anatoly Shcharansky, can be directly attributed to pressure applied by the West on the Soviet regime. The Kremen's and hundreds of thousands like them have not been so fortunate. We owe it to those refuseniks to redouble our efforts to guarantee their right to emigrate and to live in freedom outside the Soviet Union.

In closing, I am reminded of the words of Ida Nudel, a former Soviet Jewish prisoner of conscience and now a refusenik:

> No matter how I am tormented, how weak I am, how lonely or senseless my present life, I do not regret or renounce any of my actions. We believe our suffering is not for nothing, and this belief keeps us from despair. I believe that some day I will walk up the steps of an El-Al aircraft, and my suffering and my tears will remain in my memory only, and my heart will be full of triumph. And God grant that it will happen soon.

Through our efforts and those of millions worldwide, we can help transform the tears of Ida Nudel and Mikhail Kremen into triumph and their suffering into liberation.●

NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL EXPORT WEEK

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of National Agricultural Export Week. This week was designed to highlight the importance of America's agricultural exports to our balance of trade and to the revitalization of American agriculture. This week also provides an excellent opportunity to explore the problems we face in our agricultural export market.

The importance of our agricultural exports cannot be overestimated. Earnings from agricultural exports have contributed $333 billion to our Nation's balance of payments in the past decade. American farmers rely on world markets to consume about 40 percent of their output.

Yet we face a precipitous decline in world markets. U.S. exports have fallen from a high of $43.8 billion in 1981 to $31 billion in 1985, and current forecasts for this year project a further reduction to $27.5 billion. We have lost market share in every major commodity during this period. From 46 to 33 percent in wheat, from 72 to 55 percent in feed grains, and from 71 to 50 percent in soybeans. The projected surplus of $7 billion in farm trade this year will be the lowest since 1972.

Two weeks ago, Mr. President, I spoke about the devastating repercussions in our farm communities from the administration's policy on the international debt crisis. This administration would try to solve the Latin American debt problem with more debt. The so-called Baker plan calls for an increase of private bank debt, in addition to plans for increased lending by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

Recent reports from the banking community indicate they have seen the flaws in this approach. The market value of claims on Latin American debtor countries is already below par value. I think the banks are wise to resist a call to forge ahead with massive new lending at this time.

When I spoke on this issue before, I iterated that American farmers are directly threatened by expanded agricultural lending to Latin American farmers that promotes exports. I referred to a World Bank loan to Argentina which resulted in the lowering of taxes on soybean exports, helping to flood world markets and force down prices.

Today, I want to focus on a loan to Brazil, directed specifically at exports. In 1984, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, part of the World Bank, made a $303 million loan to Brazil; the money was used in part to establish a revolving fund to rediscount prefinancing credits for exporters of agricultural and agroindustrial products. In short, the World Bank's plan for Brazil was a direct, specific subsidy of its agricultural exports.

Now, if the banks are going to balk at making further loans, the weight of the Baker plan is going to shift to the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. Mr. President, the World Bank provides very valuable assistance to developing countries for a variety of purposes, the majority of which do not directly threaten the economic health of the United States. For example, there were loans to Brazil that same year to finance basic education and technical training. If one were inclined to view the situation from a self-serving point of view, economic and social development in these countries is in the long-term interest of the United States, as future markets and as future economic partners, rather than recipients.

But we need to ensure that we are not contributing, in the shortrun, through our tax dollars, to the collapse of American agriculture. That serves no one's best interests.

Yet, that is exactly what we are doing. The feed grain market provides an excellent example. Feed grain exports have declined from 69.3 million metric tons in the 1980–81 marketing year to a projected 48.8 million metric tons in 1985–86, nearly 30 percent. Corn exports from last October through December were only 515 million bushels, 85 percent of a year earlier. Barley exports declined 22 percent in that same period. In Tennessee, corn harvested for grain declined from 1980 to 1983 and has only increased in the past 2 years due to a shift by farmers from a crop even more devastated by the export market, soybeans.

Yet in the last decade, Argentina, Brazil, Canada, and Australia—the main competitors of the United States in the international grain trade—have added about 40 million acres to their grain and oilseed cropland base, and increased their yields by 22 percent. Argentina's corn exports are projected to increase from 7.1 million metric tons in 1984–85 to 8.3 million metric tons in 1985–86, while the United States market share of feed grains has declined nearly 15 percent since 1981.

Why we would recommend making this situation worse is beyond me. We literally cannot afford to subsidize the competition. Our farmers cannot afford to fight the competition and their own Government as well.

It is not my intent simply to complain, however, I think the Baker plan needs more direction, and I would like to offer constructive solutions. Rather than subsidizing farm exports, we should be encouraging the development of sound economic structures within the debtor nations so they can better manage their debt problem from within. Several debtor countries have already begun such programs and others should be encouraged and assisted in doing so.

Mr. President, there are a great many ways to defuse the debt bomb without harming our American farmers. The tremendous financial sophistication available in the major private banks, the World Bank, and the IMF must be brought to bear on these problems in creative ways. I intend to discuss some of these possibilities in the near future. Subsidizing competitors' exports, however, in a global agricultural trade war is not creative. It is destructive.●

FHA EXTENSION

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in calling for an immediate end to our war of wills over the Federal Housing Administration's [FHA] Single Family Housing Mortgage Insurance Program. For the past year Congress has held this program—and the hundreds of thousands of homeowners who depend on it for financing—hostage in a battle over housing policy. Congressional authority for this program has expired six times since the beginning of the current fiscal year on October 1, 1985.

We have heard many reasons and rationales for the congressional delay in action since the last short-term extension of the FHA program expired on June 6. Members of the other body have stated that a series of short term extension bills is the only way to force the Senate to take action on an omnibus housing bill. We have heard that amendments to the FHA extension bill are the only way to protect certain States' pet urban development action grant [UDAG] projects. These explanations provide little comfort, however, to the thousands of people whose mortgages have been delayed because of a lack of FHA authorization.

The current lapse in FHA authorization is creating acute anxieties among these citizens. They appreciate that the recent drops in interest rates have created a great demand for home financing, and that the large number of FHA applications will cause some delays. They understand that a shortage in the number of appraisers will slow the application process. They cannot understand, however, why their elected officials compound this situation by refusing to reauthorize the program.

I share their frustration. The present delay is costing them—individual Americans—thousands of dollars in increased interest and closing fees. It is time for Congress to focus on this group of citizens and put the FHA program back into full operation.●

NOMINATION OF DORCAS HARDY TO BE COMMISSIONER OF SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, last night, the Senate approved the nomination of Dorcas Hardy to be the Commissioner of the Social Security Administration, a position of enormous responsibility and one not to be taken lightly.

As my colleagues may know, I had asked that full Senate consideration of the nomination be delayed until I had the opportunity to evaluate her responses to a number of serious questions I had submitted to her about the Social Security Administration's disability benefit policies.

I was particularly interested to know how the Administration would implement the recent Supreme Court decision in Bowen versus City of New York, argued successfully on behalf of the city by Frederick A.O. Schwarz, Jr., the mayor's corporation counsel. In that case, the Supreme Court ruled unanimously that the Social Security Administration must reopen the cases of nearly 15,000 mentally ill New Yorkers, whose disability benefits had been terminated, or whose applications had been denied, between 1978 and 1983.

I have since received written responses to all of the questions. Ms. Hardy has been responsive and forthcoming. Moreover, in her June 16 letter to me, Ms. Hardy stated:

I intend to do all I can to avoid the confrontational situation that evolved in the disability program prior to 1984 and will work with the Congress and the States to further the fair and uniform delivery of this critical social program.

Although I continue to hold serious concerns about recent events at the Social Security Administration, I believe it is unfair to hold Ms. Hardy accountable for the past policies to which I so strongly object. I expect, and I have indicated this to her, that those policies will not persist or recur under Commissioner Hardy's tenure at the Social Security Administration.

Mr. President, as others in this body are equally interested in the policies undertaken by the Commissioner of Social Security, I ask that a copy of my questions, and the Commissioner's responses, be included in the RECORD.

The material follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 10, 1986.

Hon. DORCAS R. HARDY,
Assistant Secretary for Human Development Services, Department of Health and Human Services, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY HARDY: As you are well aware, the Supreme Court last week delivered a unanimous decision in the case of Bowen v. City of New York. Under the ruling, the Department of Health and Human Services will be required to reopen the cases of some 10,000 mentally disabled New Yorkers, and reevaluate their claims for disability coverage.

As the Commissioner of the Social Security Administration, you would be actively involved in the implementation of the disability program, and in the enforcement of this recent court decision.

In that light, I would appreciate your responses to the following questions. I would be most interested in receiving preliminary answers to the questions tomorrow morning, before the Senate Finance Committee vote on your confirmation. I understand that additional time may be required to respond fully to these questions, and I would hope to receive your responses at your earliest convenience. If you have any questions, please contact Dorian Friedman on my staff at 224-7567.

Thank you very much.

Sincerely,

DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN.

QUESTIONS SUBMITTED TO DORCAS HARDY, COMMISSIONER-DESIGNATE, SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

PAST ILLEGAL PRACTICES

1. What steps will you take to ensure that any policy that sets forth the basis for determining claims is not kept secret from claimants and their advocates?

2. I note that the State of New York was a plaintiff in this case, apparently because its Office of Disability Determinations could not successfully convince SSA that its policy was illegal other than by going to court. What steps will you take to open up communication with State adjudication agencies to prevent their having to go to court as the only way of ending illegal policies?

3. Will you continue to authorize appeals such as this one in which SSA essentially concedes the ruling on the merits—that you acted illegally—but seeks to bar the granting of any relief to the victims of the illegal policy?

4. By when will the relief ordered by the district court in City of New York be implemented? What steps will SSA take to locate class members who may not be at their last known address? Will SSA cooperate with the relevant New York City and New York State agencies, and with attorneys for the class, to help find lost class members and otherwise to implement relief fairly and quickly?

PROCESS FOR EVALUATING A CLAIM

1. There has been litigation in New York, as well as in other areas of the country, challenging the manner in which Step 2 determinations are made. Specifically, in Dixon v. Bowen, (589 F.Supp. 1784, aff'd, 785 F.2d 1102), Judge Lasker found, and the Second Circuit affirmed, that SSA had construed the determination of "severity" in a way which resulted in the illegal cutoff of thousands of disabled individuals. Instead of applying a minimal, threshold criterion—e.g., that someone with a cut on his finger does not have a severe impairment—SSA has required the claims adjudicators to make broader medical judgments regarding the nature of the impairment, while ignoring vocation factors such as age, education and work experience. Making those judgments at Step 2, instead of at Step 4 or 5, has, in violation of the statute and regulations, precluded the claimants from presenting proof regarding work experience and the demands of available jobs.

What steps has SSA taken to ensure that Step 2 evaluations are made as intended by the regulations—i.e., that the only claims to be denied at this point are those which are based on impairments of clearly minimal severity? What steps will you take to prevent the abuses which Judge Lasker found occurred in New York? What steps are being taken to implement the relief ordered by Judge Lasker?

2. There has been litigation around the country challenging the failure of SSA to make, pursuant to Step 3, "medical equivalence findings" or, in other words, to grant benefits based on a judgment that the impairment is equivalent to one set forth in the listings. There have also been allegations that SSA has failed even to provide any guidance to its evaluators regarding how to make such medical equivalence findings.

What steps has SSA taken to ensure that Step 3 "medical equivalence" findings are made in appropriate cases? What guidance, if any, does SSA provide to its evaluators regarding how to make such findings?

3. What position is SSA taking with respect to Marcus v. Heckler, presently pending in Chicago, in which the failure to make such medical equivalence findings is being challenged?

NONACQUIESCENCE

1. The conference agreement to the 1984 Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act states: "The conferees urge that a policy of non-acquiescence be followed only in situations where the Administration has initiated or has the reasonable expectation and intention of initiating the steps necessary to receive a reveiw of the issues in the Supreme Court." H. Conf. Rep. at 37, 1984 U.S. Code, Cong., & Admin. News 3095 (emphasis added). Do you intend to abide by that policy? How do you intend to notify adjudicators, claimants, and claimants' advocates that a particular decision will not be acquiesced in? If SSA were denied a stay pending the appeal of a circuit court decision to the Supreme Court, would you allow SSA to non-acquiesce in the circuit court ruling from which the appeal is pending?

2. SSA has asserted in its appeals to the Second Circuit in Schisler and Stieberger that it does not non-acquiesce in the Second Circuit's treating physician rule, as set out in Bluvband v. Heckler. Will you instruct all disability claims adjudicators in the Second Circuit states to follow the Bluvband rule? Will you instruct all disability claims adjudicators in the country to comply with relevant circuit court precedent? Will you inform them of the relevant precedent by providing copies of relevant opinions of ALJs and the Appeals Council, and informing adjudicators at the state agencies, of their contents and implications?

3. The reading the Second Circuit panel deciding Schisler gave the Bluvband opinion is slightly different from the reading of Judge Sand in the Stieberger order. Which will you follow while the Stieberger appeal is pending in the Second Circuit?

4. The district court judge in Stieberger found that SSA has in the past and continues to ignore binding circuit cases in deciding claims for benefits. Does SSA intend to reopen the claims that were illegally denied under this policy? If not, why not? If not, does SSA intend to assert res judicata defenses against claimants who reapply?

OTHER ISSUES

1. In Schisler v. Heckler, a case challenging terminations of benefits without evidence of medical improvement, SSA took the position that a court may not, in advance of the adjudication of claims by SSA, impose substantive requirements on those adjudications. (Slip op. 12-13). In other words, SSA argued that system-wide challenges to SSA's policies resulting in general prospective relief could not be brought in the context of a class action lawsuit. Do you intend to adhere to that position? If so, how do you justify it?

2. The district court judge in Stieberger also found that SSA had in place for several years a policy of reviewing internally the decisions of ALJs who had comparatively high rates of benefits allowances, which affected the decisional independence of the ALJs. Does SSA intend to reopen the claims that were illegally denied under this policy? If not, why not? If not, does SSA intend to assert res judicata defenses against claimants who reapply?

3. I note that SSA has reinstated the Continuing Disability Investigations, in which SSA re-examines claims to ensure the recipient of benefits is still entitled to them. In the past, this process engendered a series of lawsuits which resulted in findings that SSA terminated large numbers of claimants improperly—for instance, by failing to evaluate impairments in combination. What steps do you intend to take to prevent such abuses from recurring?

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES,
Washington, DC., June 11, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: This is in response to your recent questions prompted by Bowen, et al. v. City of New York et al. regarding practices, policies and procedures for making determinations on disability claims under the Social Security and SSI disability programs. I have given preliminary answers to a number of the questions which your staff indicated were of greatest concern to you and will provide complete responses to the entire list of questions as soon as possible.

I agree with you that these are serious issues and that ensuring an effective, fair and timely disability determination process is a priority for the Social Security Administration.

I look forward to working with you in the future on these issues which are of importance to both of us.

Sincerely,

DORCAS R. HARDY,
Assistant Secretary
for Human Development Services.

Enclosures.

Senator Moynihan.

Question: Will you continue to authorize appeals such as this one in which SSA essentially concedes the ruling on the merits—that you acted illegally—but seeks to bar the granting of any relief to the victims of the illegal policy?

Answer: As you know, only the Solicitor General can decide whether or not to appeal a particular case. Any recommendations to the Department of Justice are made on a case-by-case basis, after the interests of both claimants and the government have been carefully assessed.

While I am not in a position to judge the recommendation made by SSA in the City of New York case, I understand that the individuals involved in recommending the appeal believed that it was imperative to defend the statutory language requiring claimants to exhaust their administrative remedies prior to commencing an action in the Federal courts. In future deliberations concerning possible appeals, I can assure you that careful consideration will be given to the impact of an appeal upon individual claimants.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: In Schisler v. Heckler a case challenging terminations of benefits without evidence of medical improvement, SSA took the position that a court may not, in advance of the adjudication of claims by SSA, impose substantive requirements on those adjudications. (Slip op. 12-13). In other words, SSA argued that systemwide challenges to SSA's policies resulting in general prospective relief could not be brought in the context of a class action lawsuit. Do you intend to adhere to that position? If so, how do you justify it?

Answer: The Social Security Administration did not argue in Schisler that systemwide challenges to SSA's policies resulting in general prospective relief could not be brought in the context of a class action lawsuit.

The government's future jurisdictional arguments in Social Security class actions will have to be considered in light of the Supreme Court's recent decision in the City of New York case. We will be working closely with the Department of Justice to ensure proper implementation of the Supreme Court's decision in this case and the government's position in future class actions will, of course, be formulated in light of the City of New York decision.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: What steps will you take to insure that any policy that sets the basis for determining claims is not kept secret from claimants and their advocates?

Answer: SSA's policies and operating procedures are issued to adjudicators through the Program Operations Manual System (POMS), through the Federal regulations process including notice in the Federal Register, and through Social Security Rulings. I understand that the policy cited in the court case was issued in 1978 and was not issued in accordance with these prescribed procedures. I also understand that subsequent action has been taken to correct this incorrect policy.

Section 10 of the Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act of 1984 requires the publication of regulations setting forth uniform standards for disability determinations pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act. Such regulations are binding at all adjudicative levels. I understand that steps have been taken to comply with these requirements.

As Commissioner, I will ensure that these procedures are fully implemented and that claimants, their representatives, and advocates have access to and are informed of policy issuances at any Social Security office.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: By when will the relief ordered by the district court in City of New York be implemented? What steps will SSA take to locate class members who may not be at their last known address? Will SSA cooperate with the relevant New York City and New York State agencies, and with attorneys for the class, to help find lost class members and otherwise to implement relief fairly and quickly?

Answer: Implementation began immediately after the court's decision. SSA identified all potential class members through its systems and began screening case folders to determine class membership. Approximately 14,000 cases have thus far been found to be a part of the class. About 5,000 cases have not yet been screened because the folder cannot be located. Special procedures for processing these cases are being proposed to plaintiff's counsel.

SSA will expedite these cases. SSA has already begun review of the denial cases not under the court's stay. Review of the denial cases under the stay will begin in July. The target for completing these cases is January.

In locating class members who may not be at their last known address, SSA has prepared an implementation plan to work closely with plaintiff's counsel in developing processing instructions. These instructions are expected to be completed in about 30 days. SSA also plans to match its records with the records of New York City and State welfare offices in an effort to obtain better addresses and to otherwise cooperate with the agencies.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: The conference agreement to the 1984 Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act states: "The conferees urge that a policy of non-acquiescence be followed only in situations where the Administration has initiated or has the reasonable expectation and intention of initiating the steps necessary to receive a review of the issues in the Supreme Court." H. Conf. Rep. at 37, 1984 U.S. Code, Cong., & Admin. News 3095 (emphasis added). Do you intend to abide by that policy? How do you intend to notify adjudicators, claimants, and claimants' advocates that a particular decision will not be acquiesced in? If SSA were denied a stay pending the appeal of a circuit court decision to the Supreme Court, would you allow SSA to non-acquiesce in the circuit court ruling from which the appeal is pending?

Answer: In June 1985, the Social Security Administration adopted a policy whereby it would acquiesce in circuit court decisions which conflict with agency policy and that policy was expanded in December 1985. Since the implementation of the agency's acquiescence policy, hundreds of circuit court decisions have been reviewed by a special SSA Task Force and, to date, twenty rulings in which SSA has acquiesced in various courts of appeals decisions have been issued. These twenty rulings are binding on all agency adjudicators at all levels of administrative review. A number of additional circuit court decisions are currently being considered for possible acquiescence rulings.

SSA expects that any future nonacquiescence in circuit court decisions will be rare. However, should such action become necessary in the future the agency will have to examine the specifics of such a case and decide whether the issuance of a ruling or regulation would be the most appropriate way to notify adjudicators and claimants.

A decision to nonacquiesce in future circuit court decision where a stay of judgment has not been granted and appeal is pending in the Supreme Court would only be made after close consultation with this Department's Office of the General Counsel and the Department of Justice and only after a careful evaluation is made of all the legal and administrative aspects of such a case.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: There has been litigation around the country challenging the failure of SSA to make, pursuant to Step 3, "medical equivalence findings" or, in other words, to grant benefits based on a judgment that the impairment is equivalent to one set forth in the listings. There have also been allegations that SSA has failed even to provide any guidance to its evaluators regarding how to make such medical equivalence findings. What steps has SSA taken to ensure that Step 3 "medical equivalence" findings are made in appropriate cases? What guidance, if any, does SSA provide to its evaluators regarding how to make such findings?

Answer: I believe it is inaccurate to say that SSA has failed to provide guidance to evaluators regarding "medical equivalence findings." Our policy is clearly stated in regulations and in the POMS (Programs Operations Manual System). As you are aware, the decision as to whether an impairment is of equivalent severity to one found in the Listing of Impairments is a decision reserved for program physicians.

Recognizing the concerns raised by current litigation in this area, SSA has increased efforts to ensure understanding of this policy. As an example, SSA recently conducted training for disability adjudicators, including program psychiatrists, on how equivalency decisions are to be handled in certain mental retardation cases under the new mental impairment regulations. A POMS instruction on this type of case is in final clearance.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: I note that the State of New York was a plaintiff in this case, apparently because its Office of Disability Determinations could not successfully convince SSA that its policy was illegal other than by going to court. What steps will you take to open up communications with State Adjudicatory agencies to prevent their having to go to court as the only way of ending illegal policies?

Answer: It is important that SSA have open lines of communication with the State Agencies. During the last several years, and especially in the implementation of the 1984 Amendments, SSA has extensively involved State Agencies in the development of new policies and operating procedures. As Commissioner, I intend to work with State Agencies to resolve and discuss issues in the belief that we can resolve controversies before proceeding to court.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 13, 1986.

Hon. DORCAS R. HARDY,
Assistant Secretary for Human Development Services, Department of Health and Human Services, 200 Independence Avenue SW., Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY HARDY: On June 2, 1986, the U.S. Supreme Court unanimously affirmed the ruling of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in Bowen v. City of New York. In that case, the plaintiffs argued, and the trial judge found, that from 1978 until 1983 the Social Security Administration had in place an unlawful, unpublished policy under which "countless" deserving claimants were denied benefits. The Social Security Administration did not appeal this finding of fact. It did, however, seek to narrow the impact of the court's findings by filing appeals arguing that the courts had no jurisdiction over claimants who had failed to exhaust their administrative remedies or who had failed to appeal an administrative decision within 60 days of receiving it.

The Supreme Court rejected these arguments, holding that claimants would not be held to the 60 day or exhaustion requirements because the Social Security Administration had followed a systemwide, unrevealed policy that was inconsistent in critically important ways with established regulations. The Court rebuked the Social Security Administration and the Department of Health and Human Services, stating that "The Secretary had the capability and the duty to prevent the illegal policy. . . The claimants here were denied the fair and neutral procedure required by the statute and regulations. . ." (slip op. p. 19).

In short, this may represent the first time in history in which the Supreme Court has had to tell the Social Security Administration what its responsibilities are to its millions of beneficiaries.

I understand that these events did not arise under your purview, and that you were not responsible for adopting the policies to which I so strongly object. Nevertheless, I hope that these recent events have instilled a sense of remorse within the Social Security Administration and of alarm on your part.

In your testimony before the Senate Finance Committee on May 15, stating one of your main goals at the Social Security Administration if confirmed as Commissioner, you said, "We must provide the best service across the country that we know how. The American people whose lives we touch deserve prompt, courteous, and efficient service, and fair and dignified treatment. I am committed to maintaining high standards in the quality and level of services."

Your stated commitment is admirable. However, I believe it is also at serious odds with the record of performance of the agency itself over the last few years. The Social Security Administration has harassed and hurt thousands of beneficiaries by placing numerous administrative and adjudicative obstacles between them and the benefits to which they are entitled by law. The Social Security Administration has also denied or terminated benefits to countless eligible claimants. In sum, the Social Security Administration's deliberate—if unstated—policies over the last five and a half years have given the agency the public image of being uncooperative and unsympathetic to the constituency it is required to serve.

Unfortunately, your preliminary answers have not resolved my serious doubts that these policies would continue under your administration. I would have hoped for more direct and forthright answers. For instance:

In response to one question, you state that only the Solicitor General can decide whether or not to appeal a particular case. Of course, the Social Security Administration has a role in this process. In what cases will the agency recommend that Justice pursue an appeal?

In response to another question (Schisler v. Heckler), you state that future jurisdictional arguments in class actions will have to be formulated in light of the City of New York opinion. This is an admirable sentiment, but does not answer the question of whether you will continue to urge that systemwide relief cannot be granted in class action cases.

Finally, in your preliminary response to my question on "non-acquiescence" (i.e., refusal to apply circuit court decisions to any case but that of an individual who brings suit), you state that any future non-acquiescence in circuit court decisions will be "rare." Does this mean that you will continue to refuse to apply circuit court decisions to any case except that of the individual who brought suit, without appealing them or without public notice? How, otherwise than by a ruling or regulation, would the Social Security Administration notify adjudicators and claimants, as well as their advocates, of a decision to refuse to acquiesce?

Madam Secretary, I appreciate the efforts made by you and your staff in responding to several of our questions thus far. I look forward to complete and satisfactory responses to all of my questions in the near future. As you know, on Wednesday I voted to report your nomination, but asked Chairman Packwood to postpone full Senate consideration pending your responses to these very serious concerns. He agreed to my request. Be assured that I am prepared to move forward with final consideration of your nomination if such answers are forthcoming, as I am sure they will be.

Sincerely,

DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN RESOURCES, OFFICE OF HUMAN DEVELOPMENT SERVICES,
Washington, DC, June 16, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: Your recent questions and letter of June 13, 1986, raise legitimate concerns regarding administration of the disability insurance program. The program must be administered in a fair, humane and effective manner, and should be perceived by the public in the same way. As Social Security Commissioner, I will be committed to ensuring that those who are entitled to disability payments in accordance with Social Security procedures, policies and regulations promulgated openly and legally receive their benefit. Improper denial of benefits, any kind of illegal conduct, or lengthy delays are certainly not hallmarks of a well-administered program and are intolerable to me as a public servant. I believe better management techniques and approaches can be developed to curtail such practices.

Several different factors contributed to the outcome of Bowen v. City of New York: questionable policies, judgments about court appeals, and a lack of clear guidance. As I stated, I believe strongly that it is vital to ensure that the disability program be administered in a fair, humane, and consistent manner. This obligation extends not only to the relatively small number of high-profile cases that challenge SSA procedures, but also the thousands of more routine cases that SSA must consider each year.

I understand that policies such as the one cited in the City of New York court case have been corrected and steps are being taken to make whole anyone affected. I am committed to thorough enforcement and implementation of the recent decision. Previous questionable policy issues were addressed by the Congress in the debate and passage of the 1984 Disability Amendments; SSA staff has worked closely and diligently with Congressional staff as well as the States in the implementation of guidelines resulting from these amendments. I intend to continue these close working relationships and to fully implement the spirit and intent of the amendments.

With regard to the specific points you raised in your letter of June 13:

I believe that recommendations to the Department of Justice on appeal of court cases must be made on an individual basis after considering the potential effects on the claimants and the government. These recommendations will be made with the utmost concern for beneficiaries and with relevant decisions such as the City of New York in mind. I will not be in the business of appealing decisions for no reason but there will undoubtedly continue to be instances where I believe it to be in the best interest of the government and the Social Security program to pursue our legitimate point of view.

In regard to systemwide relief on class action cases, it will be my policy that systemwide relief will be granted to the class in accordance with any such court orders except in those unusual situations where an appeal or clarification is pursued.

In response to your question about acquiescence, I understand that the Congress did give guidance to SSA during the deliberations surrounding the Amendments. The Social Security Administration has made substantial changes in the decision-making process on appeals of court cases and compliance with circuit court decisions. While I would not want to say that I would never non-acquiesce, I will say that I believe it should be limited to very special circumstances. I can not provide a further clarification of "rare" at this time.

In addition, based on the 1984 amendments, I am optimistic that non-acquiescence will not be an issue as it has been in the past. Since 1985, SSA has issued 20 rulings of acquiesence, and has not non-acquiesced in any Court of Appeals case.

In terms of notification, SSA will continue to issue Acquiescence Rulings in instances where circuit court rulings differ from national Social Security policy. These rulings advise adjudicators in States within the appropriate circuits to apply circuit court law. Relevant administrative law judge and Appeals Council opinions will be published as Social Security Rulings when appropriate. Non-acquiescence decisions, if any, will be communicated in the same manner, that is by ruling or regulation, whichever is more appropriate. Rulings are available to advocates and the public generally at any Social Security office. I believe these procedures for notification are fair and it is my understanding that they have been effective.

I intend to do all I can to avoid confrontational situation that evolved in the disability program prior to 1984 and will work with the Congress and the States to further the fair and uniform delivery of this critical social program.

Sincerely,

DORCAS R. HARDY,
Assistant Secretary
for Human Development Services.

Enclosure.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: There has been litigation in New York, as well as in other areas of the country, challenging the manner in which Step 2 determinations are made. Specifically, in Dixon v. Bowen, (589 F. Supp. 1784, aff'd, 785 F.2d 1102), Judge Lasker found, and the Second Circuit affirmed, that SSA had construed the determination of "severity" in a way which resulted in the illegal cutoff of thousands of disabled individuals. Instead of applying a minimal, threshold criterion—e.g., that someone with a cut on his finger does not have a severe impairment—SSA has required the claims adjudicators to make broader medical judgments regarding the nature of the impairment, while ignoring vocation factors such as age, education and work experience. Making those judgments at Step 2, instead of at Step 4 or 5, has, in violation of the statute and regulations, precluded the claimants from presenting proof regarding work experience and the demands of available jobs.

What steps has SSA taken to ensure that Step 2 evaluations are made as intended by the regulations—i.e., that the only claims to be denied at this point are those which are based on impairments of clearly minimum severity? What steps will you take to prevent the abuses which Judge Lasker found occurred in New York? What steps are being taken to implement the relief ordered by Judge Lasker?

Answer: In October 1985, SSA published a ruling clarifying the "not severe" policy to emphasize that an impairment should be found not severe only if it has no more than a minimal impact on an individual's ability to perform any work related activities. In addition, this ruling was supplemented with additional guides for adjudicators such as a Program Circular to highlight the policy clarification and a training package for adjudicators. Also, on March 5, 1985, SSA published an interim final regulation to implement section 4 of P.L. 98-460 which requires that the combined effect of all impairments be considered, even if none considered separately would be found to be severe, in determining whether an individual's impairment(s) is severe.

There have been several sets of instructions issued to implement the Dixon orders. Potential class members whose claims had been denied were notified about the Dixon action on October 12, 1984. Potential class members whose benefits had been terminated were notified on a case-by-case basis between July 1984 and July 1985. Specifically, these individuals were notified that the Dixon order required SSA to reopen their claims. Additionally, those terminated were advised that their benefits would be reinstated pending the new review pursuant to the Dixon order. State agency and SSA adjudicators were instructed by teletype instructions on July 30, 1984, to stop using Step 2 as the basis for denial. Adjudicators were further advised to consider vocational factors in those claims where the individual was found unable to perform his or her past work.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: The district judge in Stieberger found that SSA has in the past and continues to ignore binding circuit cases in deciding claims for benefits. Does SSA intend to reopen the claims that were illegally denied under this policy? If not, why not? If not, does SSA intend to assert res judicata defenses against claimants who reapply?

Answer: The Stieberger class action case is presently on appeal to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and we are awaiting a decision. As the case now stands, SSA has not been required to reopen any cases in the class (which has been certified back to 1981 by the district court). In response to your question concerning the res judicata effect of prior administrative decisions, of course all individuals have the right under SSA regulations to file new applications for benefits at any time. SSA's normal policy set out in existing regulations provides that, in some situations, claimants who have filed new claims are barred from relitigating the question of their benefit entitlement if the new application pertains to a previous time period which has already been the subject of a prior decision. I would plan to abide by these longstanding administrative finality regulations absent a court order requiring the contrary.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: The district court judge in Stieberger also found that SSA had in place for several years a policy of reviewing internally the decisions of ALJs who had comparatively high rates of benefits allowances, which affected the decisional independence of the ALJs. Does SSA intend to reopen the claims that were illegally denied under this policy, If not, why not? If not, does SSA intend to assert res judicata defenses against claimants who reapply?

Answer: The Social Security Administration does not agree with the assertion in this question that Judge Sand's decision in the Stieberger case "found that SSA('s) . . . policy of reviewing internally the decisions of ALJs who had comparatively high rates of benefit allowances . . . affected the decisional independence of the ALJs." After a lengthy analysis of the Bellmon review program (Slip op. 118-166), Judge Sand concluded that "(w)hether plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits of their challenge to Bellmon review as implemented prior to June, 1984, is an issue we need not decide." (Slip op. at 163) Therefore, SSA does not intend to reopen claims which were previously denied under the Bellmon review program since there is, in our view, no reason to do so. In regard to the application of res judicata, it would apply to persons who have received an unfavorable decision after Bellmon review and who reapply to the same extent that res judicata applies in any other circumstance, namely when the subsequent application is based on the same facts and raises the same issue or issues as were previously adjudicated.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: I note that SSA has reinstated the Continuing Disability Investigations, in which SSA re-examines claims to ensure the recipient of benefits is still entitled to them. In the past, the process engendered a series of lawsuits which resulted in findings that SSA terminated large numbers of claimants improperly—for instance, by failing to evaluate impairments in combination. What steps do you intend to take to prevent such abuses from recurring?

Answer: I intend to continue implementation and administration of the 1984 Amendments, which clearly expressed the will of Congress as to how these problems should be corrected. For example, in regard to evaluation of impairments in combination, section 4 of the 1984 Amendments required that multiple impairments must be considered in deciding medical severity. Regulations to implement this provision were published on March 5, 1985.

The primary issue in litigation surrounding the continuing disability review (CDR) process was whether an individual's medical condition had to show improvement before benefits could be terminated. The 1984 Amendments mandated that medical improvement is generally the standard for continuing eligibility decisions, and section 2 of the amendments set forth the specific medical improvement review standard to be used in CDR's. Implementing regulations were published in December 1985. The revised criteria for evaluating mental disorders, as required by the same legislation, were published as regulations in August 1985. Finally, extensive training of disability adjudicators has been conducted, special quality review mechanisms have been developed, and detailed operating instructions have been issued to insure consistent and uniform application of the new policies.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: What position is SSA taking with respect to Marcus v. Heckler, presently pending in Chicago, in which the failure to make such medical equivalence findings is being challenged?

Answer: SSA has not yet taken a position. The class action complaint in the Marcus case was filed in March 1985. The district court in October 1985 certified a class consisting of residents of Illinois. The government at this time is responding to discovery requests filed by the plaintiffs. Pending completion of discovery, the Federal government is in the process of developing its litigation position in Marcus.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: SSA has asserted in its appeals to the Second Circuit in Schisler and Stieberger that it does not non-acquiesce in the Second Circuit's treating physician rule, as set out in Bluvband v. Heckler. (1) Will you instruct all disability claims adjudicators in the Second Circuit states to follow the Bluvband rule? (2) Will you instruct all disability claims adjudicators in the country to comply with relevant circuit court precedent? (3) will you inform them of the relevant precedent by providing copies of relevant opinions of ALJs and the Appeals Council, and informing adjudicators at the state agencies, of their contents and implications?

Answer: (1) Yes, in accordance with the district court's order in Stieberger, SSA has instructed all adjudicators in New York State to follow the Second Circuit's treating physician rule, as set out in the Bluvband case. However, in regard to Schisler, there is an apparent discrepancy between the Schisler and Stieberger cases in the rules set out by the Second Circuit. Therefore, SSA is requesting the Second Circuit to rehear Schisler and to provide a consistent rule for all adjudicators in the Second Circuit.

(2) SSA is issuing Acquiescence Rulings in instances where circuit court rulings differ from national Social Security policy. These rulings advise adjudicators in States within the appropriate circuits to apply circuit court law.

(3) Relevant administrative law judge and Appeals Council opinions are published as Social Security Rulings when appropriate.

Senator MOYNIHAN.

Question: The reading the Second Circuit panel deciding Schisler gave the Bluvband opinion is slightly different from the reading of Judge Sand in the Stieberger order. Which will you follow while the Stieberger appeal is pending in the Second Circuit?

Answer: The district court's order in Stieberger—to apply the Bluvband treating physician rule—applies to all residents of New York State and requires that all claims for disability benefits decided on and after the date of the order be adjudicated under specific instructions provided in the court's order. Operating instructions, consistent with the Stieberger decision and reviewed by attorneys for the plaintiffs in that case, have been issued by SSA to persons adjudicating disability claims filed by residents of New York State. We will continue to comply with the district court's order in Stieberger unless it is set aside or modified as a result of the government's pending appeal. We have not applied the decision of the Second Circuit in Schisler pending final action on the petition for rehearing.●

NAUM & INNA MEIMAN IN PAIN

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, Naum and Inna Meiman are suffering. The Meimans are a Soviet couple who have applied to emigrate to Israel numerous times and have always been refused.

Inna is a woman in pain. She is critically ill with cancer. Although her cancer is treatable according to Western medical authorities, the Soviet doctors have told her there is nothing more they can or will do. Time is running out for Inna. She must have the advanced medical treatment being offered to her in the West.

Inna also is in pain because she sees what is happening to her husband. Naum has experienced harassment by Soviet authorities for over 10 years. He lost his job after first applying for a visa. Their apartment has been ransacked, and their telephone has been cut off. They have been isolated from society.

It is time to allow doctors in the West to treat Inna. There is no reason this sick and elderly couple should be denied their basic human rights.

I urge the Soviet authorities to allow the Meimans to go to Israel.●

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, JUNE 23, 1986

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate reconvenes on Monday, June 23, the reading of the Journal be dispensed with; that no resolutions come over under the rule; that the call of the calendar be dispensed with; that following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be special orders in favor of Senators HATFIELD, PROXMIRE, GORE, and MELCHER for not to exceed 5 minutes each, to be followed by a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond 1 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each; provided, further, that the morning hour be deemed to have expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Senate will convene at 12 noon on Monday.

The leaders will have 10 minutes each.

There will be special orders in favor of Senators HATFIELD, PROXMIRE, GORE, and MELCHER for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

There will be routine morning business not to extend beyond 1 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The Senate will then resume consideration of H.R. 3838. No rollcall votes will occur during Monday's session.

We have tried to avoid a last-minute rush on Tuesday, and Members should be prepared to indicate that they are not going to offer their amendments or be here to offer their amendments preferably on Monday, because I know that the distinguished chairman of the committee has a rather pressing engagement and will leave town about 6:30 on Tuesday. If we back up everything on Tuesday and start voting on Tuesday, we could be around here 7, 8, or 9 o'clock, waiting to dispose of the bill.

I know that my collegues will cooperate with the managers, and we can dispose of most of the amendments on Monday.

I also wish to indicate what will happen after disposition of the tax bill.

There will be a supplemental appropriations conference report; Calendar No. 666, S. 2507, the housing billl; Calendar No. 636, S. 2045, the Commodity Future Trading Act; Calendar No. 655, H.R. 4151, diplomatic security bill; the House message to accompany House Joint Resolution 652, FHA temporary extension; Executive nomination of Daniel Manion, to be U.S. Circuit Judge.

□ 1730

So I think with those few items, we ought to be able to finish our work hopefully by Thursday; if not, on Friday, June 27.

There will be a number of rollcall votes Tuesday on the tax bill and I would assume rollcall votes Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, unless we can complete our work on Thursday. Then there would not be a Friday session.

I am reminded also that on Tuesday the first vote will be 15 minutes and all subsequent votes will be 10 minutes each if in fact the votes have been stacked.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY, JUNE 23, 1986

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there being no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until the hour of 12 noon on Monday, June 23, 1986.

The motion was agreed to, and at 5:29 p.m., the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 23, 1986, at 12 noon.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HANDICAP OF LIMITED EDUCATION

HON. JACK FIELDS
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, among the many wonderful people who live in the Eighth Congressional District is the great former heavyweight boxing champion of the world, George Foreman, also a 1968 Gold Medalist in the Olympic games in Mexico City. None of us can forget that night when he waved the American flag from the center of the ring in the Arena Mexicana, as he lifted our hearts in a troubled time and made known to the world his love for his country.

I'm delighted to say that that was no whim or flash in the pan with him, as through the U.S. Information Agency and other good efforts he has continued to speak for America all over the world. During the week of June 15, he was a participant in the VII Inter-American Special Symposium for the Handicapped in St. Lucia, in the Caribbean.

Hardly, a man physically handicapped in anyway himself, he knows a great deal about another shortcoming—the handicap of a limited education, as he was a high school dropout and because he gave up the fight with this books he had to make up for it by taking—and giving—great punishment in the ring. He spoke to the young people of St. Lucia about the importance of staying in and with school. George learned to box in a Job Corps Center operated in Pleasanton, CA, by Litton Industries, and it was in that Job Corps recreation hall that he first learned he could negotiate a future with his fists.

Unlike so many other athletes, he always had his eye on what he would do with his life beyond boxing. Now a minister in Humble, TX, his money saved to give him freedom to do as much and as many things as he enjoys and finds helpful to society, I ask permission to insert his remarks in the RECORD:

REMARKS OF GEORGE FOREMAN, FORMER HEAVYWEIGHT BOXING CHAMPION OF THE WORLD AND OLYMPIC GOLD MEDALIST IN THE 1968 GAMES IN MEXICO CITY BEFORE THE SPECIAL SYMPOSIUM FOR THE DISABLED AND HANDICAPPED, ST. LUCIA, JUNE 15–18, 1986

Distinguished guests, ladies, and gentlemen:

You have done more than you think by asking me to be a part of this very special festival for the disabled and the handicapped. You have brought me back to my wife's homeland, and the neighborhood of my mother-in-law. She has told me she doesn't mind how many places you think I might be helpful to what you are trying to do, or how many of your people you ask me to talk with, as long as I set aside a little time for her. She wants me to help fix the roof on her house. I don't really think she has thought this thing through very well, as who in the world would want somebody who weighs as much as I do on her roof?

In the United States we once had an author named Mark Twain. One of his most famous characters was Tom Sawyer. Every year, this Tom Sawyer was told by his Aunt Polly that the time had come for him to whitewash her fence. He hated to do that, but he had to do it, so he did the next best thing. He made his friends think it was a great privilege that was denied them, and he actually talked them into paying something to allow them to help him do it. It was more than that—they did the whitewashing and he supervised it. Right after I finish here today, taking a cue from Tom Sawyer, don't be too surprised if you see me out in front of this place selling hammers, nails, shingles, and a road map to my mother-in-law's place. That's how I'm going to try to get her roof fixed—without me falling throught it.

Seriously though, we are here today to address the very real problem of finding ways to introduce the handicapped to types of instruction which will make them employable. This is close to my heart as I was once involved in such a program—skill training. And as you are trying to enlist the private sector in your effort, it was a representative of the private sector which ran the center where I was enrolled. The center was run by one of America's biggest and most forward-looking companies, Litton Industries. My handicap was not physical—I had more than enough in muscles and good health—my handicap was self-inflicted—a limited education.

I disliked school with a passion, every part of it except recess, lunch, and when school was out. I could smell mathematics and could never see any way it would be useful to me—other than add up all the things I didn't have and wanted and had no hope of getting. If anybody had told me then that the day would come that they would pay me $5,000,000 for a fight that I lost—the one against Muhammad Ali in Africa—and I'd find mathematics useful then, I would have said to lock that guy up as he was out of his mind. Geography to me was Houston and Marshall, TX, and poor neighborhoods in both. I was so sure I was never going to go anywhere else—other than to jail—it was of absolutely no concern to me.

When my friends went off to prison, they were always escorted and the people driving the police wagon knew where they were going—so knowledge of geography was of limited worth. Just last year the U.S. Information Agency asked me to go to the Camaroon and Nigeria in Africa to talk to young people there as a sort of goodwill ambassador for the United States. That was a lesson in geography I will never forget, and I was sorry every step of the way that I hadn't cracked those books about the world and its people in school when I'd had the chance. Grammar and language studies meant little to me—I caused people to get out of my way by doubling up my fists and looking mean. I didn't need spoken words for that, or any proper order for them in saying them out loud.

And then, the day would come when—after losing the championship—that the great television network—ABC sports—hired me as what they call a color commentator to work with none other than Howard Cosell. Among sports commentators he is without exception the most knowledgeable about grammar and language. He really made me think about what grammar and language can mean. Civics—that was another nothing for me as somewhere in it was law and order—which meant there were policemen attached. When I was a mugger in the streets—they came after me, and sometimes with dogs. I felt I could do without civics, too.

School itself was a series of disappointments for me. When I was young I tried to get the attention of my teachers so they would see me as important—as I thought I was. They saw me as a kid big for his age and therefore potentially dangerous, so they told me to get lost. I finally thought if I was to get any attention at all, it was within my capabilities to be the "meanest kid in the neighborhood." I got very good at that—so good, in fact, when I was in the ninth grade I decided to wave bye-bye to formal education. I became a self-declared graduate, but no diploma went with that. I thought "who needs it?" And that I would show them how unnecessary such things were.

This meant I could give full time to becoming a society problem. My mother didn't think much of my decision and told me so. She was a lady barber and there were six other kids in our family, so there wasn't very much she could do about it other than complain and express her disappointment.

In those days, I knew every policeman and they all knew me—in both cases for all the wrong reasons. They were always looking for me and I was looking out for them. More and more they were able to catch up with me and finally they read me the two ways my future might go—one was to jail, first as a juvenile delinquent to a reformatory and that would prepare me for later prison sentences or worse as I grew older. The other was open to me if my mother would sign an application for me—still under age—to enter a program called the Job Corps. I may not have been well educated, but I had always preferred fences I could jump. The Job Corps was the direction I took.

In that Job Corps Center operated by Litton Industries, the staff that was hired to train us looked over what was coming in the door and they—and America, too—were appalled at how little chance at life any of us really had. Until then, it didn't really know how much society was being menaced by kids like myself addicted to cutting and running from educational facilities, first to play in the streets, and then prey on people in the streets.

By making ourselves unemployable except for lifting and carrying we put ourselves in position for every bad thing to happen to us in terms of role models we would choose to follow proably to our own destruction, directions we would take which had no solutions for what ailed us that day and promised us absolutely nothing but disaster for tomorrow, and perhaps worst of all—we concluded that people who worked were foolish, as only suckers did that. A person's mind is a fantastic thing as it can justify about anything that suits you, or it can send out signals as to whether you are doing what's best for you. The tricky thing is that what suits you is always easiest to do, and what's best for you is always the hard part.

No matter what kind of a handicap one has—whether it be physical, or one of attitude, or from disability, I believe the first important discovery you will ever make is when you find that there are those who really care about what might happen to you if they didn't help.

Here in Saint Lucia today, we are gathered to make that kind of a statement—that we do care. We have come to your country from all over this hemisphere to say here in Saint Lucia that somebody—several somebodies care about your young people who are the key to Saint Lucia's future, particularly those who have been shortchanged physically or in some retarded way. We hope by focusing on this dilemma, we generate enthusiasm for assisting the handicapped gain stature as an employable resource and to aid in copying constructively with life around them. Life's betterment needs the best from all of us, and as much as we can give, each in our special ways.

I can tell you from personal experience that there is nothing quite so pleasantly surprising as to find you can do something you had never thought you could do. When I look at the size of these hands of mine—and they have always been big—if someone had told me I was ever going to be an electronic assembler when I was young, I would have laughed at such an idea. Yet in the Job Corps, a whole bunch of us were put to work assembling transister radios. They threw in one important thing—they called it an incentive. Our incentive was that if we followed instructions, did what they told us to do, and assembled our radios correctly, they would not only work but each of us could keep the transister radio he'd built.

I did what they told me, all the while thinking of how much easier it would be to shoplift one, and not expecting it to work. But it did. That was the first surprise. Then they gave it to me, and that was the second surprise. It told me there were knowledgeable and believable people in this world, and I hadn't known too many like that before. That transister radio meant so much to me. It was the first constructive thing I had ever done with my hands. There was no diploma attached to this lesson learned as I had the evidence there in my hands.

Here in Saint Lucia today, I would like to say to all parents, no matter their station economically, urge your children to stay in school and make the most of it.

I ask all you young people to listen to the wisdom of your parents and teachers when they ask you to avoid the handicap of a lack of education.

And I ask you who are handicapped in some way to look hard for the ways around the obstacle you've been given as the additional burden you bear.

The George Foreman you see before you today would be telling you a great untruth if with all the strength I have I would shake my fists in the air and declare I'm a self-made man. Nobody is that, He is the combination of all the influences and people who helped him and who cared about him. The Job Corps was a National Government Program. It got me out of the streets and heading straight for prison and more. It was a private sector company, Litton Industries, which cooperated with a national effort to do something to reduce the problem. Litton picked up on me when I had no prospects at all, and its people have been available. Every time I've called on them.

Some might be casual about such help and believe in their minds it is actually owed to them. That is dangerous thinking, and I know because there was a time in my life when I thought the whole world was against me. All the time I was thinking that it was George Foreman who was against me. I had to first lick George Foreman before I could win an Olympic Gold Medal and become world champion by licking Joe Frazier down here in Jamaica.

No handicap is easy to overcome, even more true when it's within yourself. But every time one more person among us deficient in some way makes an upward move, we all win. It's all very well to recognize the limitations a handicap may seem to have inflicted but all kinds of surprises and happiness and fulfillment awaits those who focus on what can be done in spite of one.

A SALUTE TO "CAMP BOARDWALK," ATLANTIC CITY, NJ

HON. WILLIAM J. HUGHES

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention to a very special reunion to be held in Atlantic City November 2–4. "Camp Boardwalk Revisited," as it has been named, will reunite many thousands of World War II veterans who went through basic training in Atlantic City, rested there after a tour overseas, or convalesced at the military hospital that is now Resorts International Casino Hotel.

Shortly after the United States entered the war in December 1941, all the major hotels in Atlantic City and many smaller ones were drafted by the military to be used as soldiers' barracks. Convention Hall became a command center in what was dubbed the U.S. Camp Boardwalk of World War II, one of the largest training facilities in the country and the major one on the east coast. About 200,000 members of the Armed Forces either went through basic training here or received treatment in the military hospital. For thousands of others, Atlantic City was a spot for rest and reunion with family members after an overseas tour of duty.

Atlantic City's role in the war effort was unique in that the entire city was a participant. Local residents volunteered in the hospital and mingled freely with the military. It was common for residents to invite the GI's into their homes. The community adapted itself to the military presence by passing ordinances designed to prevent any disturbances. These included curfews for young people and prohibiting alcoholic beverages to be served after a certain hour. The military made use of the city streets for training purposes. The boardwalk was suddenly filled with new soldiers learning to march in line and with hospital patients, including many amputees and paraplegics rolling in wheelchairs. The large crowds of soldiers were a boon to the area's economy.

Camp Boardwalk Revisited will be held at Convention Hall on the Atlantic City Boardwalk and will reunite veterans from 30 States including California and Hawaii. Special hospitality groups will be held over the weekend to reunite surviving spouses, POW's, Purple Heart recipients and couples who met at Atlantic City during the war.

The residents of Atlantic City and the veterans who passed through there during the war are to be commended for participating in what may have been one of Atlantic City's finest hours. I know that my colleagues will want to join me in wishing Camp Boardwalk a happy and successful reunion. It promises to be a great event.

WILLIAM F. MATSON

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I learned of the passing of William F. Matson, president of the Pennsylvania Rural Electric Association on June 16, 1986.

The members of the Pennsylvania congressional delegation have lost a true friend and the rural people served by the electric co-ops under his leadership have lost a very capable and forceful advocate.

For most of us, it is difficult to comprehend that not too long ago people living in rural areas did not have electricity. Farms and small villages were so scattered that investor owned utilities would not serve them. Through the efforts of Bill Matson and the excellent team he led, thousands of rural Pennsylvanians were given the opportunity to have a reasonably priced and dependable supply of electricity. The way of life in rural Pennsylvania literally changed overnight.

Mr. Speaker, Bill Matson possessed the ability to provide a vision of the future and he had the will to translate that vision into reality. I ask that our colleagues join to express sorrow at Bill's untimely passing and that we extend our deep sympathy to his family, his colleagues, and to all of those whose lives he has touched.

INTERVIEW OF THE PRESIDENT

HON. BOB LIVINGSTON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, the President gave an interview to Radio Marti on June 9, 1986, regarding the situation in Nicaragua and U.S.-Cuban relations. This interview was broadcast to the people of Cuba, portion of which appear below. I commend it to my colleagues who wish to be fully informed on the President's policies in Central America.

INTERVIEW OF THE PRESIDENT BY RADIO MARTI, JUNE 9, 1986

1. Mr. President, the Cuban government syas that the United States is conducting imperialist aggression against the legitimate government of Nicaragua. What is your reaction to this charge?

Well, if I were not as used to the extravagant claims of Cuban propaganda as I am, I would be outraged by such a charge. First of all, there are no U.S. forces in Nicaragua. But there are several thousand Cubans there. So it makes you wonder who might be the real imperialists. That's not even to mention the Soviets or the Bulgarians, or the Czechs, or the East Germans, or the Vietnamese, or the North Koreans, or the PLO, or the Libyans, or the Iranians. Does anyone really believe that these people are in Nicaragua to help them harvest their coffee crop?

What we are doing is supporting democracy in Nicaragua and all the people who seek to build it. They're the real revolutionaries. They joined the popular effort to overthrow Somoza, but then they saw their democratic revolution betrayed. What we're witnessing is very much a repetition of the betrayal of the Cuban revolution by the communists. In each case, the reins of power were seized by a well-organized, disciplined minority of communists who liquidated the genuine democrats. They do not rule by the people's consent. They are militarizing and regimenting Nicaraguan society because they fear the power of the real deomocratic revolution, still very much alive. The people are joining a spontaneous uprising against the Sandinistas—an uprising which today has more than twice as many guerrillas as did the Sandinista movement when it was fighting Somoza. The Nicaraguan democrats have organized themselves into an effective movement. All they need is enough material support to compete with the vast quantities of arms supplied to the Sandinistas by Cuba and the Soviet bloc. By the way, they should not be called Sandinistas—they've stolen the name of a true national leader who in fact rejected communism. What they really are, in truth, are "Stalinistas" because their revolution is a Stalinist one.

2. Why do you disagree with some members of Congress who are urging you to delay any further aid to the Nicaraguan resistance and to seek a solution through negotiations?

In the first place, there's no truce in the fighting because the communist regime feels that it can achieve its objectives without peaceful negotiations with the democratic opposition, and by delaying negotiations with its Central American neighbors. It should be clear to everyone that the Sandinista strategy is to delay. The longer they can drag out negotiations, the easier it is for them to destroy the democratic forces while Congress waits to see if a peace treaty is just around the corner. But with each day of delay, the communists are attacking and killing freedom fighters while we deny them the means even to defend themselves.

Since the March 19 vote in Congress, denying aid to the resistance, the Sandinistas have used the delay to move to consolidate their totalitarian control over society. They have increased their militarization of the country, invaded Honduras, and launched an unprovoked attack on a number of Miskito Indian villages. That attack triggered a panic that led to an exodus of 11,800 villagers to Honduras. The regime has forced thousands of small businessmen to shut down. And the persecution of the Church continues every day. Didn't Cardinal Obando y Bravo just say that the communists were suffocating the Church?

Unless we help those who are resisting these crimes against the Nicaraguan people, we will share responsibility for the increasing toll of human suffering. Any further delay by us just plays into the hands of the communists and their stalling tactics.

We have never shied away from negotiations as a solution, but we would want them to result in a real democracy in Nicaragua in which all sectors of the Nicaraguan society are really free to participate. We have always supported a dialogue of reconciliation and believe that this is the answer. President Duarte has taken the courageous step of reopening talks with the armed and unarmed opposition in his country—why can't the Sandinastas? Are they afraid that these talks would lead to the real democratic outcome we all hope to achieve? Are they worried that they would result in real arms reductions and the elimination of their Soviet, Cuban and other Soviet Bloc advisors?

4. Mr. President, before your Geneva Summit with Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev, you delivered a major speech aat the United Nations in which you referred to five regional conflicts which were of major concern to the United States. Cuba is militarily involved in three of them: Angola, Ethiopia and Nicaragua. Do you believe that your general policy of supporting the forces of freedom in these conflicts increased the danger of conflict between the United States and Cuba?

No, I don't. The real conflict going on in each of those countries is between the communists dictatorship and free people fighting to regain liberty for their entire country. None of these dictatorships could stand on their own without the massive intervention of Cuban troops and advisors sent as mercenaries for the Soviet Union. This intervention has placed innocent Cuban soldiers in the midst of other people's battles, and their lives are a great risk. The United States would like to see these battles come to an end as quickly as possible—with freedom replacing dictatorship. That's why we support freedom fighters in each of these countries—indeed in all countries. But we have no intention to get involved directly in any of these conflicts ourselves. Today, the freedom movements in Nicaragua and Angola are so strong that, if it weren't for the intervention of Cuban and other foreign forces, they could win all by themselves. Innocent Cuban soldiers are in a trap—and many may have to give their lives if they are forced by their government to stand in the way of these freedom movements. We deeply regret that Cuban families may suffer because their government insists on waging war in faraway lands.

5. Since January 1961, the United States has not maintained diplomatic relations with Cuba. Throughout this period, the Cuban government has pursued a policy of hostility toward the United States and has kept the Cuban populace in a military state of preparedness under the supposed threat of U.S. military intervention. Do the Cuban people have anything to fear from the United States?

To the contrary, I would hope that the Cuban people would look at the United States as their friend and moral supporter. Unfortunately, they have been subjected to all sorts of propaganda about the supposedly aggressive intentions of the United States. In particular, the Cuban government has used propaganda to blame my Administration for the frequent defense mobilizations in Cuba and for the increasing militarization of Cuban society. But these mobilizations began before I was even nominated to be President. And they're nothing but false alarms. The Cuban government is using the so-called "American threat" as an excuse to maintain its de facto martial law. So long as it has such an excuse, it can maintain a military-style system of authority that reaches into every household in Cuba. This, I suspect, is the way that the government keeps control over the force that it fears most of all—the free will of the Cuban people themselves. The government fears a free election. It knows that never in history has the full majority of a free electorate elected a Communist Party to power in any major nation.

6. Mr. President, what conditions do you think are necessary to improve relations between the United States and Cuba?

America's relations with Cuba will improve on the day that Cuba stops exporting violence, stops exporting terror and stops facilitating the trafficking of drugs. These conditions are simple. The Cuban government must begin to respect the rules of international life. It must, in effect, start to live by the Golden Rule—"Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

At the time of the Cuban missile crisis, President Kennedy stated that there would be peace in the hemisphere if the nuclear missiles were removed and Cuba stopped exporting revolution. The Soviets removed the missiles; but Cuba never did stop its subversive activities in the region. And these activities were not just a problem for the United States. They were a threat to countries throughout Latin America. That's why the Organization of American States expelled Cuba. Cuba still isn't a member and it won't be until it begins to behave like a good neighbor. Likewise, there cannot be good relations between the United States and Cuba, until Cuba remembers the Golden Rule.

Imagine if we did to Cuba what it does to us and its other neighbors. Many Cuban parents would be heartsick over their children destroying their own lives with addictive drugs. Cuban towns would actually live in fear of attack by well-armed guerrillas. We do not want these things for the Cuban people. And so we do not do these things to Cuba. Why does the Cuban government do such things to its neighbors?

7. When Radio Marti broadcasts began one year ago, the Cuban government unilaterally suspended an immigration agreement with the United States and curtailed exile visits to the island. Critics have charged that the decision to establish Radio Marti is keeping Cuban families apart. Do you feel that braodcasting by Radio Marti prevents the reunification of Cuban families?

No, I don't think so. It is the sincere wish of the United States to see Cuban families reunited. This was one of the key points in the U.S.-Cuban immigration agreement. But that agreement was suspended by the Cuban government when Radio Marti went on the air. It was not Radio Marti that suspended reunification, it was the arbitrary decision of the Cuban government made with an eye to getting us to stop braodcasting the truth about Cuba.

In fact, we've learned many times from communist refugees about the problem of whether to keep silent about communist human rights violations in the hope that these regimes will release people and reunite families. We've learned that if we're silent, the communists would have a perpetual lever to enforce this silence—they could always hold people hostage to prevent the truth about the regime from being told. We can never accept such a situation. The truth as an instrument for the protection of human rights is too precious for us ever to relinquish it.

9. The United States has committed itself to helping the Nicaraguan people realize their dream of democracy. But what can it do to help the Cuban people achieve the same dream?

That's a difficult question. We want very much to see democracy in a free Cuba. A democratic Cuba would be a country at peace with itself and at peace with its neighbors. Democracies do not wage war on their neighbors. Democracies are always more peacefully inclined than totalitarian dictatorships, because the people can restrain the excesses of their leaders. But however strong and deep our affinity for the Cuban people, we cannot solve their problems.

What we can do is offer the Cuban people a beacon of hope—by standing up for ideals we cherish—freedom, unconditional individual human rights, and equal justice under law, and by standing by our friends and allies in the world who share these ideas. We also have an obligation to resist those ideas and forces, such as communism, which enroach on democratic ideals and destroy democratic societies. If we're successful in resisting Soviet and Cuban expansionism, which we have been, we can show the world that communism can be resisted. And if the people living under communism can see this, they will know that there is hope. And if people have hope, then they can avoid becoming demoralized and paralyzed. They can learn that the future can be in their own hands—that it hasn't been completely taken away from them.

10. Would you like to send a personal message to our listeners in Cuba?

Yes, I would. I would like you, the Cuban people, to know of America's deep and abiding respect for you and your contribution to Western civilization. There is a great number of your fellow Cubans in the United States whose hard work is making our country a better place. In fact, the city with the largest Cuban population outside Cuba is here in the United States—the city of Miami. Thousands of you have family members living here. Your relatives are part of the heart and soul of our nation. It is my hope and prayer that the barriers separating you will someday be torn down.

That day will come when our relations with your country can be reestablished on the basis of the historic tradition which has guided both nations. Americans fought for your independence and Cuban battalions fought for our independence. One of George Washington's close friends was Juan de Miralles, a Cuban maritime businessman, who helped guarantee the credit notes for the purchase of arms and supplies for the American rebels. His wife, Dona Marie Josefa, and other Cuban women, even sacrificed their jewelry to raise funds for American independence. It was this kind of devotion to the principles of our cause that won Miralles the highest regard of Washington, the Father of our country.

I believe that the new day will come when U.S.-Cuban relations, based on the ideals of democracy, will be restored. The philosophical foundation of these relations already exists in the hearts of the Cuban people. We see them most dramatically expressed in the courage of the "plantados"—the men who will not sell their souls to gain greater creature comforts in the Cuban gulag. It is this principled devotion to the truth—not the so-called truth of the Communist Party but the real truth as revealed to man in his soul—that will be the source of that new day and a new era of peace between our nations. I hope and pray that this day will come soon. God bless you.

GOOD AIRPORT SECURITY BEGINS AT HOME

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, while recent terrorist incidents reveal that international airports and airlines have become new targets for terrorists, our Government must do all that it can to ensure that American international airports are made as safe as possible. It is difficult for the U.S. Government to preach good airport security to our allies around the world, if we ourselves are negligent in this important area.

Over the past few years, the Congress has devoted much time and attention to the need to protect U.S. Embassies overseas. A few months ago, the House passed the Omnibus Diplomatic Security and Anti-Terrorism Act of 1986. That proposed legislation is now pending before the Senate. As our Government strengthens the security of our diplomatic missions around the world, terrorists have begun to shift their targeting from diplomats to tourists. Obviously, terrorists have found international airports and aircraft to be soft targets. The 1985 terrorist attacks on the Rome and Vienna airports, as well as last year's hijacking of TWA flight 847 and the recent bombing of TWA flight 840, are tragic examples of the vulnerability of our air carriers and foreign airports.

Given the threats of Qadhafi and Abu Nidal to bring terrorism to the United States, I encourage the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA] to do all that it can to quickly improve the security of our domestic airports. Under the Foreign Airport Security Act, the FAA is already conducting periodic security assessments of foreign international airports used by U.S. carriers. If an FAA assessment demonstrates that a foreign airport is substandard from a security point of view, the Secretary of Transportation, after advising the Secretary of State, must notify that foreign government and recommend the necessary steps to upgrade the security of that facility. If after 90 days that government has not brought its airport up to the appropriate standards, sanctions can be imposed by our Government.

Last week, the Government Activities and Transportation Subcommittee of the Committee on Government Operations held hearings on the adequacy of security at Dulles Airport. An FAA official rated security at Dulles Airport marginal earlier this year.

Given the rising number of terrorist incidents involving the aviation industry, and the possibility of terrorism here in the United States at some point in the future, I encourage the FAA to do all that it can to obtain additional resources to properly undertake the important task of securing U.S. airports as well as complying with the requirements of the foreign Airport Security Act.

With these concerns in mind, I commend the following editorial from the Washington Post on the status of security at Dulles International Airport to my colleagues in the Congress:

DANGEROUS DULLES

As if any more anxiety needed to grip the increasing numbers of people flying in and out of Dulles International Airport, officials have acknowledged that security there is alarmingly poor. Guards have failed to recognize pistols hidden in carry-on luggage in nearly one out of every four spot-checks conducted by airlines, and as many as 25 percent of the 9,000 identification badges issued to employees at Dulles—for access to restricted areas—cannot be accounted for. These are the findings described by an official of the Federal Aviation Administration, which is responsible for assessing security at Dulles and which earlier this year rated it "marginal." While officials note that the FAA has moved to improve security since this evaluation, clearly they've got much more to do.

As it stands, the people who screen departing passengers and baggage are employees of private security firms, and they are not required to have any formal training for their duties. There aren't any educational requirements, either. The pay is less than dazzling, with screeners starting at $3.75 an hour and working up to $4.20. Not surprisingly, the annual turnover rate is about 30 percent.

Is this any way to run a security system at an airport that has been growing faster than any U.S. airport over the past year? You're talking heavy passenger traffic, up from 3.4 million in 1984 to almost 5.1 million last year. Leaving the screen checks to a pickup crew of itinerants with no training or sense of mission is irresponsible. And even though a new identification system is being set up to replace the old one with all the missing badges, what's to ensure that the new system will be monitored any better than the old one?

As long as Dulles remains under federal control—and that could and should end this year if the House joins the Senate and the administration in support of legislation to lease Dulles and National to a regional authority—Congress should demand that security be upgraded. More training in security techniques, better pay and closer supervision are essential if the security forces are to be effective. All the sophisticated security machinery in the world isn't worth installing if no one is looking at it.

RIGHT TO LIFE COMMITTEE CONVENTION

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, last week the National Right to Life Committee held its annual convention in Denver, CO. I had the privilege of addressing the 1,300 delegates to the convention on Friday, June 13. Upon concluding my remarks, I had the honor of introducing my good friend and colleague, JACK KEMP.

I found JACK KEMP's remarks to be poignant, timely, and insightful. He touched a very responsive chord in the audience by delivering a very hopeful and compassionate message. Mr. Speaker, I share JACK KEMP's optimism that the sanctity of human life—born and unborn, healthy, unhealthy and handicapped—will once again be affirmed as a fundamental principle in our country. I recommend Mr. KEMP's remarks for my colleagues' consideration.

REMARKS BY CONGRESSMAN JACK KEMP

I thank you Chris, for that warm introduction. I thank you even more for your magnificant pro-life leadership in the U.S. House of Representatives—I am proud to be your comrade in arms.

And I am proud to be here today at this convention with all of you. You are a very special breed. I know that you have not come here to celebrate great prestige and position and power. You have not come to pay homage to the mighty.

You have come out of conscience and commitment the most simple and pure—a conscience and commitment that say our place is with the least of our brethren; our place is to protect the weak, to put the love of children first, to preserve their future at the expense of politics as usual or any other political consideration—that's why you are here.

And we are here together, you and I. Together, because of all the great questions of our time, of all the great challenges that define who we are and what we stand for, none commands greater moral authority than the preservation of innocent, human life.

It is a daunting challenge—hard, long, uphill all the way. In 1 year, we will celebrate the 200th anniversary of the American Constitution and our forefathers' solemn promise "to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to posterity." But unless the Supreme Court undergoes a change of heart—or of personnel—we will commemorate that occasion of a day when young lives—precious young lives—of some 4,000 children will be destroyed by abortions across this land.

We shudder at this grisly thought. And I am deeply troubled that, in the midst of this tragic betrayal, so many eyes will not see, so many mouths will not speak.

Even as we meet, some will not appear here. Others mock your cause. Still others are trimming long-held principles to winds of higher political ambitions. And the national leadership of one political party has all but turned its back on millions of its members and the decent, noble values they hold dear.

There can be no rejoicing in all this. But nor is there reason for despair. My friends, let our message be the same to one and all. You may stand with us or you may turn away. But you will never change the belief that grips the very core of our soul; we are not going to lose this great, historic battle for human rights, we are going to win.

We are going to win because our ranks continue to grow. And our ranks continue to grow because more and more Americans understand the sanctity of life transcends any political question of right vs. left—it is a profoundly moral question of right vs. wrong.

Who can look around this room and doubt that, with your faith, with your determination, with leadership from giants like Dr. Jack Willke, right shall make might and, yes, we shall overcome.

Already we have overcome in important ways.

Thanks to you, we have a hero in the White House in President Ronald Reagan, who not only champions the right to life but appoints judges who will uphold that right.

Thanks to you, the Department of Defense has been put out of the abortion business, and abortion is no longer permitted in the Indian Health Service.

Thanks to you, we passed the Smith-Denton law prohibiting subsidized abortions under Federal employees health insurance plans. Before Smith-Denton, 17,000 abortions were performed under those insurance plans. Last year there were none.

Thanks to you, the House of Representatives has moved to stop the city government of Washington, D.C. from using any Federal or local tax dollars to pay for abortions on demand.

Thanks to you, Congress adopted the Kemp-Helms amendment prohibiting U.S. international population-planning funds from ever again being used by organizations that participate in programs of coercive abortion or involuntary sterilization.

Thanks to you, the House is with us, the Senate is moving toward us, and most States are firmly pro-life. And this week's Supreme Court decision on the Thornburgh case, while still a defeat, shows we are only 1 vote away from reversing Roe v. Wade. People do not change their views on abortion we are told. Well, let me tell you, every person here today deserves praise and credit, because the chief justice of the Supreme Court has changed his view on abortion.

Ultimately, this is what we seek, not just a change of law, but a change of heart. And all across America, we are seeing an important see-change in the values Americans cherish and live by.

You know about these stories; you know about the teenagers in high school; and the women at work; and the abandoned mothers in the ghettoes and barrios across America. You know how each was pushed to the edge by intense pressure and anguish as they wrestled with the most difficult decision of their lives.

Yes, you know. You know because at some moment in that dark night for each, your warm hands of generosity and compassion reached out to touch a human heart, to soothe the sorrow and dry the tears, and to restore hope and save a helpless baby's life.

You are those miracle healers. You are the ones filling the cradles of America with the gift of life for those who yearn to adopt. You are the ones, God bless you, who show that, just as there will be no limit to our vigilance against those who practice and profit from this ugly business, so there will be no limit to our tolerance, to our friendship, indeed, to our love for every woman who cries out for help—for they, too, are victims. You are showing we must not only do the right thing, we must do it the right way.

Oh, yes, ladies and gentlemen, this movement is growing, and pushing on, and winning because we are guided by the shining star of an idea far brighter and more powerful than any party or individual. Strengthened by our numbers, heartened by our courage, emboldened by the rightness of our cause, let the word go forth from this convention; the pro-life movement is no straggling army falling back in retreat; we are a fit and fearless force rising on the wings of victory—and victory shall be ours.

The longer I live—and I became a grandfather this past year—the more I am impressed by the power of ideals and ideas. Bad laws can be changed. And a law as bad as Roe v. Wade must be changed and will be changed by a superior idea.

It is the American idea, written in our Declaration of Independence, written in our Constitution—a clear and compelling truth if only we could persuade one more Supreme Court Justice to read it there. Thomas Jefferson summed up the American idea best, "The God who gave us life gave us liberty at the same time."

To Jefferson and our other Founding Fathers, human liberty is inseparably linked to human life, the values which anchor our Judeo-Christian civilization. They were filled with wonder at the miracle of man created in the image of God. And they were driven by the conviction that an infinitely loving, perfect God would never give us the blessing of life so that we may be born as slaves. We were born to be free—free to unlock all the treasures of talent that lie within each mind and spirit.

It took Americans a long time to understand the meaning and consequence of this American idea. It took us a long time to understand that, when all enjoy equal worth and dignity in the eyes of God, we cannot diminish the rights of another person—because he is a black—or diminish the rights of another person—because she is a woman—without debasing the value of life and the standard of freedom for all Americans.

And may I say, respectfully, it is taking some on the Supreme Court too long to understand that neither can we treat the unborn as something less than human, neither can we "terminate," to use that cold and clinical word, a tender, young life without debasing the value of life for all Americans.

Life and liberty—they must go hand-in-hand. It's no coincidence that we who place the highest premium on life also believe that, as President Reagan said in his second inaugural, "there are no limits to what men and women can accomplish when they are free to follow their dreams."

We so often hear America's greatness attributed to our natural resources. Yet the world is filled with places rich in resources where people live in squalor.

No, America is great because the American idea is great and the measure of our greatness is our willingness to live up to that idea—to ensure that, here at last, the richest of all resources, the human mind and spirit, will be valued at their worth and freed to achieve their potential.

Nor is it a coincidence that those who reject the American idea, those who so casually deny the right to life and liberty are also deeply pessimistic about human potential. For these modern day malthusians, the world is hopelessly overpopulated. And our future will be hopelessly gloomy as long as we permit unneeded and unwanted people to drain away dwindling resources. Each new life for them becomes a competitor whose liberty can only be purchased at the price of our own.

It was back in the 60's that the United States first veered sharply from the American idea into these blind alleys of pessimism and despair. Some of the most tragic mistakes took root in the notion that our quality of life was threatened by the birth of children. More children meant more wants, more hunger, more social instability.

Childlessness became a virtue. Large families were out. The professional population planners were in—they were the new growth industry. The Congress and the executive branch put the weight of Government against childbirth, against growth, against the family.

Roe v. Wade was a logical conclusion to this blatantly antipeople mentality. And since 1973, we have seen the tragic results of these ideas descending like a tornado to devastate victim after victim.

Who are the victims? We see them all around us. They are the weak and powerless without a voice—babies never given a chance; the handicapped infants allowed to die—even helped along to die a little sooner; and the elderly reminded by the Governor of this State of their duty to die, like so many falling leaves in the late autumn of their years.

What has happened to America when a group, the Population Reference Bureau, attacks what it calls "the dubious goal of keeping people alive beyond their years of vigor, because of their disastrous . . . impact on society" and the Federal budget?

Other nations have slid even further down the slope of believing one person's liberty can only be purchased with another person's life. In India, during this period, whole communities were seized by the Government and forcibly sterilized—often in the most brutal conditions. In China, the policy of one couple/one child has been enforced by coercive abortion and infanticide.

As ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee Foreign Operations Subcommittee, I have fought successfully to end U.S. funding of organizations that support programs of coercive abortion and forced sterilization. You have my assurance that I am going to continue that fight.

Tragically, and to a startling degree, the anti-natalists have succeeded. Were it not for immigration, our population would already have fallen below replacement rates. No nation can long remain a world power when its most precious resource is a perishing resource. Most of the Western World today is shrinking. Only recently have serious scholars like Allan Carlson begun asking the haunting question—"Must our children be our enemies?"

To which all of us here reply, "Never!" Our children are not our burdens, they are our hope. Our children are tomorrow's dreams and ideas and imagination. Our children are the pioneers who will unlock the secrets of the universe, harness new technologies for peace, strive to create a world free from want and bring forth long-awaited cures for dread diseases like cancer. They are the artists and poets who will make life more vivid and gentle and kind, and the faithful who will send our prayers up to Heaven in a symphony to God.

We in the pro-life movement must make this case. America has no need to fear babies; we need to love them. America needs children. Indeed, America needs more children. America needs more policies that are forthrightly pro-children, pro-family and pro-people. And so it is high time for the Federal Government to rouse itself and help America's child-full families as they renew our land with another generation of builders and darers and dreamers.

Henry Hyde, Vin Weber and I have been working with the White House on an important initiative to set out the pro-life position plainly and clearly. Together, we plan to introduce the legislation in the near future and it will have three major parts.

First, like the Helms human life statute, it will state that abortion takes the life of an unborn child. It will declare that a right to abortion is not—I repeat, is not—secured by the Constitution. It will further state that in Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court erred in not recognizing the humanity of the unborn child.

Second, the legislation would make the Hyde amendment permanent.

Finally, the legislation would limit the use of all Federal revenues, so that abortion providers could no longer receive taxpayers' funding.

Please forgive me if I take advantage of this opportunity to appeal to you—can President Reagan count on you? Can the White House count on you? May I count on you to get this vital legislation passed this year?

And count on your support for the appointment of judges, and above all justices, who respect the sanctity of human life and traditional family values?

And your support for more pro-life members to your legislatures, to the United States House of Representatives and the Senate?

You'll have to bear with me, I'm still not finished with my appeals. I have one more, and it's the biggest yet. My friends, can we resolve, you and I, that victory for the American idea is our goal, that nothing short of victory will do, that from this day forth, we stand together for life, not just to repudiate abortion, but in the broadest possible sense to encourage the birth of more children, to foster stronger family life and to build stronger communities clear across America?

We can begin by ensuring fair treatment for those who have children; fair treatment for those who forgo added income to provide maternal child care; fair treatment for those who sacrifice to provide value-based education for their children, and, yes, fair treatment for those who adopt—that will be a victory for the American idea.

In this land where men and women came to breath free, I think it's about time we stopped allowing people to deduct the cost of abortions and started allowing people to deduct the cost of adoptions—that will be a great victory for the American idea.

Making sure that our Tax Code does not discriminate against one-earner families, does not penalize homemakers, does not transfer income away from those who care for children—that will be a victory for the American idea.

If you'll forgive me for putting my economic hat back on for a moment—some people would tell you I never take it off—I must make a point here about economic justice for families. In spite of the 1981 tax cut, family burdens are immense and growing. Ladies and gentlemen, the most overtaxed institution in America today is the American family.

That's why passage of the Senate tax bill, which would lower personal rates to 15 and 27 percent, lift 6 million low-income families onto the ladder of economic opportunity, and raise the personal exemption to $2,000 would be the beginning of an historic victory for American families.

Only a beginning, however. Because for my part, we won't see the light of true economic justice until we bring down personal rates even lower. We won't see true economic justice until we raise the personal exemption even higher to make up for the value eaten up by inflation over the years. And we won't see true economic justice until we finally summon the courage to make inflation illegal—yes, make inflation illegal with a monetary policy that makes the dollar as good as gold, so every dollar you earn and save will be worth as much in 30 years as it is today. Honest money is not just an economic issue, it is a moral issue.

But ladies and gentlemen, you of all people know the victory we seek will depend on more than a bigger G.N.P. and more dollars in our pockets, Victory will depend, above all, on the America we create from the values and traditions we carry in our hearts and live by each day.

Our children don't just grow up, our children have to be raised. It won't be good enough to develop a new generation of computers if we lose a new generation of Americans to depression, alcohol and cocaine.

It won't be good enough to put a new VCR in every classroom and living room in America, if children learn nothing about the old virtues: about the importance of faith and moral courage and square-dealing, about the importance of patriotism and personal responsibility and truthfulness—because these are the permanent things that will hold them and bind them and guide them long after today's technology has been scraped and rusted away.

And finally, it won't be good enough to coax our children to take risks and become entrepreneurs if violence stalks our streets, and our sea lanes and airways are unsafe, because unless we have courage to defend our Judeo-Christian, democratic values from the terrorists and totalitarians of this world, then peace will never be secure and we will never be truly free.

The American idea won't be easy, but it's worth everything we've got. In Whitney Houston's words, teach our children well and let them lead the way. Show them all the beauty they possess inside. Give them a sense of pride to make it easier. Let the children's laughter remind us how we used to be.

How long will it take? How long must we struggle and pray and picket and march until the American idea is victorious?

Our answer must be, as long as it takes. As long as it takes until there is no more pain and until there are no more tears;

Until red or yellow, black or white, all are precious in His and our sight;

Until those 4,000 children will not perish, but live to see the dawn of birth, and feel the joy of a mother's love;

Until they have their day in the sun, their chance to become our next George Gershwin or Jackie Robinson or Mother Teresa;

Until your commitment to life, to helping mothers and children in need, and to providing homes and care for the handicapped and the elderly is shared by all Americans;

Until America finally is one nation, under God, with liberty and justice for all.

Where we're going is beyond the mountain. We can't see it. But we know it's there. And know we're climbing higher and edging closer.

Ladies and gentlemen, we are in a battle for the heart and soul of this nation. And as long as there is a breath in our body and a beat in our heart, we will remember the dream. We will remember that our way must be the way of peace. But we will also remember Winston Churchill's determination in another battle, in another time—the days of peril when the British stood alone and did not flinch against the overwhelming might of their enemy.

By late October, in 1941, when Churchill returned to his old school at Harrow, he could say to those young men, the worst now is behind us; the tide will now turn; so let us learn the lesson of our valor: "Never give in, never give in, never, never, never, never—in nothing great or small, large or petty—except to convictions of honor and good sense."

My friends, we're not giving in, we're going on, and there's no stopping us now. Thank you for having me today. God bless you for the miracles you do and for the miracle you are.

MINORITY SCIENCE CONSORTIUM HONORS CBC MEMBERS

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to offer for the record a statement made by Jose F. Mendez, president of the Ana G. Mendez Foundation in San Juan, Puerto Rico. On May 20, 1986, President Mendez joined in honoring our colleagues, congressional Black Caucus member LOUIS STOKES and CBC-LSO associate member LINDY BOGGS for their contributions and support for a consortium agreement expanding minority youth participation in the sciences. The Mendez institutions, along with Jackson State University and the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory are charting new horizons for education in America. We believe this program, and the remarks of President Mendez will inform and inspire the people of this nation.

The statement follows:

DR. JOSE F. MENDEZ, PRESIDENTE, FUNDACION EDUCACION ANA G. MENDEZ

Ladies and Gentlemen, thank you for joining us tonight. In the Fall of 1983 a memorandum of understanding (MOU) was signed between Jackson State University, Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory and the Ana G. Mendez University system in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Energy. At the time we knew we were writing history. A major federal laboratory, a major black university and a hispanic university system had joined together, pooling their resources to deliver educational programs of excellence. Impacting the lives of approximately 24,000 black and hispanic young people.

The consortium collaboration has become a model for the advancement of the sciences at historically black colleges and universities and other minority institutions. Its accomplishments are impressive:

INSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE FOUNDATION

Bachelor degrees in chemistry and biology have been established at the University of Turabo.

A Bachelors degree in biology is being established at Metropolitan University.

Six AGMEF faculty members have been placed in Ph.D. programs in Physics, Chemistry and Biology at major universities (Notre Dame, University of Chicago, University of Puerto Rico).

Eleven faculty members are receiving Masters Degrees from Jackson State University in the field of Computer Science, in 1986.

Ten AGMF faculty have been appointed as visiting research scientists working with principal investigators at LBI.

A collaborative research program in Atmospheric Science has been established at Metropolitan University involving faculty and students from AAGMEF and LBL Scientific staff.

Curriculum Development projects funded by U.S. Department of Education, Minority Impact Science Improvement Program (MISIP) have been established at all three of our institutions.

We are updating our laboratory equipment and academic research capability through another DOE, MISIP grant of $180,000.

STUDENT PROGRAMS

Twenty-one gifted students from AGMEF have participated in research programs as research assistants at LBL during the past two summers including nine students that will go to LBL this summer.

Undergraduate students are participating in the AGMEF/LBL atmospheric science research program at Metropolitan University.

OUT REACH PROGRAMS

A comprehensive Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) has been signed between AGMEF and the Department of Education/ Puerto Rico Public Schools targeted at upgrading the science offerings for 700,000 students—Kindergarten through 12th grade.

AGMEF and P.R. Department of Education have received $335,000 for a Precollege program from Carnegie Corporation:

600 public school students will take this coming Saturday a special test developed by the College Board as applicants for the Precollege program to start this Summer.

Two high school students and four teachers from Puerto Rico will participate at LBL in its distinguished teachers program and students science awards week.

More than 34 students have been admitted to a recently established honors programs at University of Turabo.

These accomplishments, over an extremely short period of time could not have been made without our consortium relation with JSU and LBL and the dedicated efforts of our colleagues from our three consortium institutions.

I must also give special recognition to friends that have made possible the success of our consortium. I refer to:

Miriam Cruz—Our D.C. Representative.

Bill Albers—Consultant and Colleague.

Director David Shirley from LBL who has been most supportive.

Dr. Harold Wilson, Head of LBL's Office of Cooperative Education and Research.

Walter Hartsough, LBL Associate Director.

President James Hefner, Jackson State University, and his colleagues who have captured the dream and have been my strong support.

Argelia Rodriquez, Minority Impact Science Improvement Program.

Bernard Charles, Carnegie Corporation, who has become our mentor.

Mr. Alvin Trivelpiece, Department of Education.

Richard Stevens, Department of Education, another mentor for us.

Ike Sewell, Elmer Lee, and the staff of the Office of Minority Economic Impact, who have helped us to steer a clear and straight course.

And all our friends in the Congress, Federal agencies and the White House.

It is my very special pleasure to now recognize and present merit awards to several Members of Congress who have contributed greatly to the legislative process which created the consortium funding agreement. Congressman Louis Stokes of Ohio and Congresswoman Lindy Boggs of Louisiana . . . [other Members of Congress were honored].

We have taken on a difficult task and you can see that many of our dear friends have joined us in the task. Soon close to 40% of America's youth will be minority: Hispanic, Black, Asian, American Indians. We have not done a good job of moving them into the Post-Secondary Education World. For the security of our country. We must be reminded of the words of a renowned scholar who said: "The nation cannot prosper without sustained investment in science and engineering research and education in our universities."

OPTIONS FOR THE NORTHEAST/ MIDWEST REGION

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, as cochair of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition with my esteemed colleague, Mr. FRANK HORTON of New York, it has been my pleasure to meet and work with private sector leaders from throughout our region who share our concern about the economic future of the older industrial States. On Tuesday we received a report from a group of these leaders on some of the major issues facing our region.

The report, entitled "Options for the Region," was prepared by the Northeast-Midwest Leadership Council, and is the result of several months work. The council, which is composed of top business, labor, and education leaders, was formed at the request of the coalition to provide regular advice and assistance to the region's elected officials.

The leadership council adds an important dimension to our efforts to ensure continued economic growth in the Northeast and Midwest. Public policies favoring economic development will be far more effective if they have the strong support of the constituencies represented by the council's members.

Under the very able chairmanship of Mr. William S. Woodside, the chairman of the American Can Co., the council established four task forces to examine issues of importance to our States. "Options for the Region" reports on the activities of the task forces, offering policy recommendations and outlining their future work plan. The four areas are:

Educational investment and its role as a job creation strategy;

New means of assuring adequate supplies of low-cost electricity;

The impact of prospective tax law changes; and

The region's infrastructure and its impact on economic growth.

I encourage members of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, and our colleagues from other regions of the country, to read the report carefully. And on behalf of my cochair, FRANK HORTON, and all the members of the coalition, I want to express our gratitude for the hard work done by the members of the leadership council. So that we all can get a sense of the importance of this effort, I insert the letter from Bill Woodside conveying the report in the RECORD:

AMERICAN CAN CO.,
Greenwich, CT, June 16, 1986.

Hon. FRANK HORTON,
Co-chair, Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

Hon. HOWARD WOLPE,
Co-chair, Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVES HORTON AND WOLPE: I am very pleased to transmit to you the first formal report of the, Northeast-Midwest Leadership Council. This report, Options for the Region, outlines strategies for economic growth on which the region's public and private-sector leaders can have tremendous influence.

This report includes important recommendations for members of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition. Equally important, it signals a commitment by corporate, labor, and academic leaders in the older industrial states to be full partners with the Coalition in capitalizing upon the region's enormous assets. I believe this region-wide public/private partnership benefits our states greatly.

I am happy to note that members of the Leadership Council and our four task forces see this process as ongoing. Each of the task forces has defined a number of issues on which we can provide assistance over the next year.

The Leadership Council is pleased with the economic upturn the region is enjoying. Though certain sectors and geographical areas have not recovered fully, the region's future is bright. We have both the will and the means to sustain long-term economic growth, if we use our assets wisely. The attached report contains dozens of ways that we can work together to improve our already bright future prospects.

The Council believes the Northeast-Midwest organizations must redouble efforts to protect the region's educational investment. For decades, these educational institutions have given the region a great competitive advantage. However, problems exist which we cannot afford not to attack. The region's youth dropout rate is a disgrace. The education "infrastructure" of the buildings and equipment is in poor shape. Both our K-12 systems and our colleges and universities are having difficulty gaining proper funding and assuring quality teaching.

We think the educational reform movement has great meaning for the region. As our Education and Economic Development Task Force stresses, each of the above problems demand innovation. We simply cannot go on giving inadequate education to our children. We are eager to work with Coalition leaders to spur new efforts to change educational systems to better prepare the work force of the future.

Another Council task force has identified infrastructure as a continued priority for the region and developed a work plan to assist the Coalition on this issue. The Council is particularly concerned about the lack of certainty on governmental investment in public works. In many cases basic maintenance of public works systems in the region, is deferred even if such expenditures will avoid much larger costs in the future. Budget cuts and tax policy changes have made it impossible for public managers to determine the resources and investment tools they will have available.

To assist your efforts in addressing this problem, the Council plans to sponsor new Northeast-Midwest programs to rationalize infrastructure investment in the region. We need to plan better, preserve the essential federal government role, and find new means of financing necessary projects. In all these endeavors, we must remember that the condition of the region's highways, bridges, mass transit, water supply and pollution control systems are critical to our long-term economic health.

In these two projects and in our work on electricity and tax policy, we welcome our close relationship to the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition. I commend this report to you and look forward to meeting with you and other Coalition leaders to discuss our efforts further.

Best regards,

WILLIAM S. WOODSIDE,
Chairman, Northeast-Midwest Leadership Council.

WHAT ARE THE SOVIETS AFRAID OF?

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to share the following article by Charles Z. Wick, the Director of the United States Information Agency, entitled "What are the Soviets Afraid Of?" Mr. Wick presents some interesting and informed opinions on why the Soviet Government strictly limits the information available to its people.

I urge my colleagues to take a moment and read Mr. Wick's statement. It explains the challenges information poses to the entire Soviet system and offers some ideas on increasing the flow of information for the Soviet people. I think it will prove illuminating and I hope they can find the time to consider Mr. Wick's thoughts.

WHAT ARE THE SOVIETS AFRAID OF?

(By Charles Z. Wick)

Why do the Soviets continue to jam the Voice of America (VOA) and other broadcasts—a right supposedly guaranteed by international convention to which the Soviets are signatories? What is Moscow afraid of?

Why not permit our Russian language broadcasts to reach the people of the Soviet Union? After all, jamming violates international law and costs the USSR valuable resources, including money and some 15,000 technicians at 2,000 jamming stations. The Soviets spend more on jamming our broadcasts than we spend to transmit them. Last fall, a senior engineer at the BBC estimated the jamming cost to the Soviet economy each year at no less than $750 million and perhaps as high as $1.2 billion.

Does the Soviet regime fear subversion? We don't use disinformation to tell the American story. We are not trying to subvert the Soviet government, to overthrow it by force or other means. We go to great lengths to avoid the taint of partisan reporting, if for no other reason than this would violate the congressionally-endorsed Charter of the Voice of America and would be unacceptable to Americans as contrary to our principles and values.

Why then do the Soviets spend and spend to block out information available to the rest of the world? Surely not just to break international law! I asked these questions when I met recently with Leonid Zamyatin in Moscow. Mr. Zamyatin was then chief of the International Information Section of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party, as well as a member of the powerful Central Committee.

His response: The Soviet government does not want its citizens wasting valuable time deciding what broadcasts are worthy of their attention. Mr. Zamyatin was saying in essence: Why should our citizens listen to VOA telling the Afghanistan story when they can learn all we want them to know in the Soviet media; why hear bad news about the Soviet ruling class? Apparently, Mr. Zamyatin desires censorship on the theory that what people don't know won't hurt them—or the Soviet government.

Mr. Zamyatin's view is that the Soviet government is not interested in allowing its citizens to sit by their receivers and make their own decisions.

On the other hand, this well-placed and powerful member of the party elite admitted to me that he listened to (unjammed) VOA broadcasts in English. What he did not say—what he could not say—was that VOA is a principal source of honest, objective news to him and most other Soviet officials. It provides some of the same news and information denied by jamming to the majority of the Soviet Union's ordinary citizens who do not understand English.

Anyone who finds this sort of no-information policy and disinformation difficult to believe should look at the historical record.

On November 10, 1917, the Soviets officially limited freedom of the press. It was to be a "temporary" measure, but is still in effect with even more rigid controls almost 70 years later.

At the fourth Communist Party Congress in March, 1918, a man cried out complaining that "our newspapers have been closed." Lenin responded by saying: "of course, but unfortunately, not all of them. Soon they will all be closed . . . (and we) will wipe out the shameful purveying of bourgeois opium." Much more communication control followed.

In 1950 the Soviets jammed the BBC on the grounds it was filled with "lies." At the time, Soviet Ambassador Andrei Vyshinski responded to the criticism of the blackout by saying that it was necessary because the Russian people were becoming "upset" by the broadcasts.

Then came "detente" with some relaxation of jamming which allowed more information to flow.

But with the Soviet invasion and occupation of Afghanistan, Soviet jamming came back with renewed power. Today, their static bars the ordinary Soviet citizen from listening to the news of death and destruction in Afghanistan—on not only VOA, but Radio Liberty and the BBC. And there is only selectively released news of Afghanistan in the Soviet media. It is the electronic Bear which takes a terrible bite from the truth.

Soviet jamming is the most onerous evidence of the larger effort by the USSR to control communication. Television is a powerful medium in American society. And it is not lost on the Soviet party leaders that television has potentially the same kind of impact and influence in the Soviet Union as it does in the United States. But in the Soviet Union, the Communist party is the only sponsor and the only network, and the programs only carry the party line. It is essentially a closed circuit with limited access, by invitation only. What a contrast with the access the Soviets and others have to the diverse media outlets in the United States!

Since Geneva, some communication exchanges have occurred. The President and the General Secretary talked directly to each other's citizens on television, with resulting radio and print commentary, the first time since 1972. For our part, we continue to offer the Soviet audiences—through USIA's international print, broadcast and television services—people who can discuss and debate issues concerning American policy, our society and institutions, and our fundamental beliefs and values. All that is needed is a positive response from the Soviet leadership to create meaningful dialogue.

Certainly, exchanges in the fields of culture, education, science and technology, as outlined in our agreement signed last November 21 in Geneva, are important. These exchanges, along with our exhibits program and presentations by performing artists, are essential to fulfillment of the agreement. They help to further a dialogue between numerous people in both nations.

Since November, a great deal has been written and commented on what some have termed, the "Spirit of Geneva," implying a lessening of tensions, of more friendly relations between the U.S. and the USSR. Of course, that appeals to millions of Americans who desire arms reductions, a more constructive relationship, and more peaceful world.

But "spirits" are elusive and ephemeral. Ultimately, they drift away and dissipate unless we give them form or create substance from them.

The Soviet government prevents its citizens from having access to divergent opinion and uncensored news because it fears the effect of an informed public opinion on its ability to maintain power.

These Soviet bureaucrats know that information produces knowledge; that knowledge produces ideas; and that ideas often have consequences regimes cannot control. Therefore, they are afraid.

At the summit meeting between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev, it was evident that both countries could advance the cause of the world peace by better understanding of the issues by the people of both countries. If the Soviets will turn off the jammers and allow the people to hear the news and views from elsewhere, it would go a long way towards removing the doubt and mistrust that now exists. In addition, the Soviets will save an estimated $750 million a year, or more.

Until they face up to their fears, and force themselves to allow their citizens a basic right guaranteed by international law, we can only remain hopeful—not optimistic—about meaningful exchange and better understanding.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO LEN M. THORELL

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Len M. Thorell, a distinguished business and community leader in my district, who will be the recipient of the National Management Associations' Gold Knight Award. Mr. Thorell is the vice president and general manager of Todd Pacific Shipyards Corp.'s Los Angeles Division.

A native of Stratford, CT, Len Thorell received a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering from the University of Bridgeport in 1951. Following a year at Portsmouth Naval Shipyard as a piping system engineer, he attended Officer's Candidate School at Newport, RI, and was commissioned in March 1953. His tour of duty included planning and estimating officer at the Office of the Supervisor of Shipbuilding, U.S. Navy in Groton, CT, and submarine squadron communications officer on board the U.S.S. Orion.

Following his service in the Navy, Len Thorell joined General Dynamics and served in various engineering and management positions at their Electric Boat Division, their Washington, DC, office, and at the Quincy Shipbuilding Division. In July 1978, Len joined the Los Angeles Division of Todd Pacific Shipyards Corp. as manager of engineering. In January 1981 he was appointed assistant general manager-technical and by July 1981 he assumed his present position as vice president and general manager of the Los Angeles Division.

Mr. Thorell maintains a high level of professional awareness regarding innovative technical developments in the maritime industry. His fine work over the years, and his expertise in shipbuilding, have earned him the respect of the Navy, commercial shipbuilders, maritime leaders, many of my colleagues in the House, and numerous Senators. Len Thorell is truly a well respected expert in both management and shipbuilding.

In addition to his fine professional work, Mr. Thorell is active with a large number of professional associations, and devotes time to community activities. Among the professional organizations of which he is a member, are the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers, the American Society of Naval Engineers, the Navy League of the United States, and the Society of Port Engineers, Los Angeles-Long Beach. He is on the Board of Governors of the Propeller Club of the United States-Port of Los Angeles-Long Beach, and a director of the Western Shipbuilding Association. His community activities, which are too numerous to list, include membership in the Chambers of Commerce of San Pedro, Long Beach, and Los Angeles; service as a director of the San Pedro Peninsula Hospital, and the Catholic Social Services of Long Beach, and membership on the Department of Mechanical Engineering Advisory Council of the California State University-Long Beach, and the advisory board for the Southern California Ocean Studies Consortium. Clearly, Len Thorell has been a positive force in improving the quality of life in the South Bay area of Los Angeles.

It is with great pride that my wife, Lee, joins me in congratulating Len M. Thorell on this auspicious occasion, and in wishing Len M. Thorell, his wife, Marilyn, and their children—Susan, Lennie and Caren, continued success and all the best in the years ahead.

ELECTRIC UTILITIES AND POWER COGENERATION

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, during the first session of this 99th Congress, legislation was enacted allowing three registered gas utility holding companies to participate in cogeneration activities. Because different constraints exist for registered electric utility holding companies, relief from the restrictions of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 was not sought at that time for electric utilities.

Legislation I am introducing today will grant relief to the registered electric utility holding companies to enable them to engage in cogeneration activities outside their normal service area, just as gas utility holding companies are now able to. Under existing law, electric utilities are permitted to invest in qualifying cogeneration facilities within their service area, as this is considered to be functionally related to their utility business. They are, however, currently prevented from investing in cogeneration facilities located outside the geographic boundries of their service areas, as this activity is not deemed to be functionally related to their power generation business.

By eliminating geographic restrictions presently imposed on electric utility holding companies, this legislation will assist energy-intensive basic industries and reduce our national reliance on imported energy, a goal particularly important in view of the current oil and gas crisis. Cogeneration is an extremely efficient means of generating power, and, by allowing electric utility holding companies to join gas utility holding companies in cogeneration endeavors, utilities bring their generating expertise as well as financial interests to ensure the success of the venture.

It is not my intention to release the electric utility holding company from regulation by the Securities and Exchange Commission with respect to the acquisition of securities, assets or other interests. The electric holding companies would also be subject to continued restrictions on intercompany loans and intercompany transactions as well as regular reporting and recordkeeping. No regulatory authority of the SEC is subject to change by my legislation; therefore the SEC retains the ability to prohibit any cogeneration activity it deems not in the public interest or not within the scope of the holding company system.

I commend this legislation to my colleagues' attention and welcome their support. Passage of this proposal will be a significant step toward continued energy independence and self sufficiency.

ASPARTAME CONSUMPTION AND SEIZURES

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, in April, the Washington Post published an article reporting allegations of a link between aspartame (marketed and popularly known as Nutra-Sweet) consumption and seizures.

These allegations—the result of a study by one doctor—run contrary to the findings in the scientific community. As one who has epilepsy, I would like to dispel the unnecessary concern about aspartame consumption. In an effort to do this, I would like to share with my colleagues the most recent published statement by the Epilepsy Foundation of America. This statement is as follows: "After study and review of available scientific reports, the Client Services Committee of the Epilepsy Foundation of America's Professional Advisory Board has concluded that at present, there is insufficient evidence to suggest that aspartame, a sugar substitute, should not be used by people with epilepsy."

In addition, I would like to share with my colleagues a letter which was written in response to the Washington Post article by the Epilepsy Institute in New York.

THE EPILEPSY INSTITUTE,
New York, NY, April 30, 1986.

HEALTH SECTION,
Washington Post, Washington, DC.

DEAR EDITOR: The story in the April 23 Health Section of the Post reporting allegations of a link between aspartame consumption and seizures unnecessarily raises deep concern, anxiety and undue fear for over 2½ million Americans with epilepsy. This is especially true of that portion of the epilepsy population (about 50%) that, through the use of medication, is seizure free.

As an organization devoted to people with seizure related problems, we are the Epilepsy Institute have evaluated the current scientific evidence and found espartame to be safe for people with epilepsy. Aspertame contains two amino acids found naturally in all protein-containing foods from meats to vegetables to milk. People consume these ingredients every day.

Allegations made by Dr. Richard Wurtman of Massachusetts Institute of Technology are not based on any scientific studies; they are based on anecdotal reports made by individuals who believe their experience may be linked to aspartame consumption.

Collectively, the members of the Professional Advisory Board of the Epilepsy Institute looked at the seizure activity of our patients, many of whom consume aspartame regularly, and saw no change over the past three years. At the Epilepsy Institute, where there are 5,000 client visits a year, there have been no reports of change in seizure patterns.

The Center for Disease Control Investigated nine anecdotal reports of seizures during its investigation of some 500 consumer complaints relating to aspartame. The CDC concluded that it "could not find convincing evidence that any of the documented seizures had a high probability of being due to aspartame-containing-products." Also, the American Medical Association, The United Kingdom Committee on Toxicology of Chemicals in Foods, the Scientific Committee for Food of the European Economic Communities and the Canadian Health Protection Branch have all affirmed the safety of aspartame for the general population.

At the Epilepsy Institute, we certainly want to evaluate carefully any allegation relating to the health of our patients. However, the only scientific way to do so is through controlled clinical studies, such as those now under way at Yale University and Mt. Sinai Hospital. For scientists to needlessly alarm the public without any scientific evidence would be irresponsible.

Sincerely,

REINA BERNER,
RICHARD REUBEN, MD.

H.R. 5062, DISLOCATED FARMER TRAINING AMENDMENTS OF 1986

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing a bill to amend the Job Training Partnership Act [JTPA] for the purposes of: Encouraging increased participation and delivery of services to dislocated farmers and ranchers under the act; improving existing data collection methods to more accurately account for rural and particularly farming community employment and unemployment statistics; and focusing more emphasis within the act on the problems and special needs of rural communities that can be met through programs authorized under JTPA. I am pleased to be joined in original cosponsorship of these amendments by Mr. LIGHTFOOT of Iowa and 20 other of my distinguished colleagues, who share a strong support for this and other measures aimed at meeting the needs of our Nation's farmers.

Since 1982, JTPA has served as the cornerstone of the Federal Government's efforts to provide employment and training assistance to economically disadvantaged adults and youth, and to workers who have been displaced from their jobs. While programs under JTPA can serve only a portion of those who are eligible for services, these programs are working well throughout the country, due in large part to the partnership that was established under the act between Federal and State governments, local officials and the private sector. However, there are still a number of problems within the act for which fine-tuning changes may be in order to make JTPA more responsive to all populations that it is designed to serve.

One such area of concern which would be addressed, at least in part through enactment of these amendments, is the concern that up until now, much of JTPA's thrust has been geared toward urban, industrial needs rather than focusing on the needs of rural communities. This of course has resulted from efforts to target assistance to those areas in which the highest concentrations of unemployed and economically disadvantaged individuals reside. And, it is understandable that we should make every effort possible to address the needs of those residents of our urban centers. However, at the same time, we must take care not to overlook rural America, its special problems and inherent needs that must also be addressed through Federal employment and training programs.

A situation which has heightened awareness that increased efforts must be made in meeting rural employment and training needs in recent years, has been the movement of growing numbers of farmers out of farming into other areas of employment. When enacted in 1982, the farm crisis had not yet risen to the proportion that it has today. Therefore, the need to address the problems of dislocated farmers was not specifically addressed in the statute. Since that time, last year in fact, the Department of Labor did issue regulations that have allowed distressed farmers to participate in programs under JTPA—and the Department should be highly commended for allowing States the flexibility to serve eligible farmers under both the title II–A and title III programs. Further, under the Secretary's discretionary fund, found in title III of JTPA, the Secretary of Labor has awarded over $5 million to date in grants to nine States, including Wisconsin, for dislocated farmer employment and training programs, which has benefited many in making the transition to alternative employment. However, even with this special consideration by the Department of Labor, many States and service delivery areas, particularly those with high concentrations of distressed farmers, continue to experience difficulties in identifying and serving this population.

While numbers vary, agricultural economists calculate that at least 100,000 farmers—roughly 5 percent of the Nation's 2.2 million—found themselves unable to finance their 1986 crop planting this spring. Other figures estimate that at least 200,000 farmers—or 12 percent of the total number—are close to insolvency. Over the 32-year period from 1950 to 1982, the United States experienced a trend in the agricultural sector that resulted in a decrease of approximately 3,147,461 farms nationally, or a decline of 58.4 percent. During that same period, Wisconsin also saw a decline of nearly 86,362 farms, or 51.2 percent. But, it should be noted that this trend has not been all negative. In fact, this decline in farming in many instances was a natural, positive move for many, who for various reasons saw better opportunities outside of agriculture. However, over this time there have been periods, especially in the past several years, in which this decline in farming has been accelerated by outside economic pressures which have resulted in a number of farm operators being forced to liquidate their holdings who wanted to stay in farming, but had no alternatives. These are the people that we want to help in this and other programs aimed at assisting the dislocated farmer. We cannot pretend that these problems do not exist and we must not turn our backs on those farmers who have decided or have been forced to leave farming in search of alternative occupations and sources of income.

For most who have to make this move into another occupation, it is an extremely difficult transition and one in which the majority will need some form of assistance. It is in the Nation's best interest to fully recognize the needs of these dislocated farmers and to see that our Federal employment and training programs assist them in moving back into the mainstream of the economy. However, providing this assistance can prove to be a very difficult and frustrating task.

PROBLEMS ENCOUNTERED IN SERVING DISLOCATED FARMERS UNDER JTPA

Although their employment and training needs are very similar to those who have lost their jobs through plant closings and layoffs, the overall situation of the dislocated farmer is vastly different from that of the dislocated industrial worker.

First, one of the biggest problems facing farm States and particularly local service delivery areas [SDA's] is that of simply identifying and reaching those eligible farmers who would benefit from the available programs. As opposed to the dislocated industrial worker who has a definite date of termination or at least of notification of that termination, the dislocated farmer has no such point in time at which he or she can be easily determined eligible for services under JTPA. To complicate this problem, many farmers in need of transitional services offered under JTPA are reluctant to seek government assistance or to formally admit to the fact that they must leave farming. Finally, lack of information, particularly due to rural isolation, has resulted in many displaced farmers not knowing about potential assistance. For these reasons, it is of utmost importance that effective outreach networks be established in areas with high concentrations of distressed farmers, not only to get the word out about the availability of transitional assistance, but to encourage them to come in and talk to program counselors and administrators, and if found eligible for services, to encourage their participation in the programs. Further, it is very important that effective linkages be made to improve coordination between employment and training, educational, social service, community health and mental health, and agricultural agencies, such as local extension offices, to provide information on availability of services to eligible farmers and to avoid needless duplication of these services.

A second major problem that continues to face SDA's in addressing the needs of this population is the inability to intervene quickly enough to help farmers making the transition to other occupations less painful. Early intervention is of particular importance to the distressed farmer, especially since he or she is not eligible for unemployment insurance as are most other dislocated workers. As mentioned above, industrial workers under the Dislocated Worker Program are eligible for services upon notification that their job will be terminated, even if this notice comes 6 months or a year in advance. Farmers have no such official notification. There are certainly many signals that warn of impending farm closures; however, these are not formally recognized in the statute. While the Department of Labor has allowed States the flexibility to define "dislocated farmers" for eligibility under the Dislocated Worker Program, title III—and several States such as Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota have provided definitions that do allow for earlier intervention than would otherwise be possible—these definitions vary significantly from State to State, with many States still fearing to be too liberal in their interpretation of the statute without increased Federal guidance.

This brings us to the third, and possibly most difficult, problem confronting SDA's in serving displaced farmers—that of actually determining their eligibility under both the title II–A and title III programs. Income records and expense reports are very complicated for farm operators which make it a very frustrating and time-consuming process to determine eligibility. As noted above, lack of a uniform policy by which to determine eligibility under title III has resulted in some farmers being declared ineligible for services until they have been foreclosed upon or until they have filed for bankruptcy.

Under title II–A programs for disadvantaged adults and youth, program participation is based on the participants' being determined as "economically disadvantaged." While many farmers should be able to qualify for job search, support services and job training assistance under this program, eligibility is determined on program applicants' previous 6 months income prior to applying for participation. For many farmers this 6-month "look-back" does not fairly reflect their true income for the whole year. Further, most farm operators determine their income levels only once a year for income tax purposes; therefore the 6-month provision currently in the act does not realistically reflect the economic status of the distressed farmer, as would a 12-month review. And then comes in the question of whether or not the selling off of farm assets should be counted as income when determining program eligibility.

Finally, not only farming communities, but rural communities in general, nationwide, face certain obstacles in the implementation of programs under JTPA which need to be addressed. First, there is shared concern that rural underrepresentation in employment and unemployment data directly affects formulas by which program moneys are distributed under JTPA as well as other major programs. Second, the special problems and needs inherent to rural communities at times seem to be overlooked by many major Federal programs, including JTPA. We must do more at the Federal level to ensure the effectiveness of our employment and training programs in rural communities, which includes the need to study and encourage employment generating activities within these areas in order that residents of these communities are not forced to leave in search of work.

WHAT EXACTLY DOES THIS BILL DO TO ADDRESS THE PROBLEMS ASSOCIATED WITH SERVING THE DISLOCATED FARMER UNDER JTPA?

PROGRAM ELIGIBILITY

To address the problems encountered by dislocated farmers in determining eligibility for participation in programs under JTPA, our bill would make several changes in current law.

To ease participation criteria for farmers under title II–A, the Basic Grant Program, this bill would amend the current definition of "economically disadvantaged" to allow for consideration of the previous 12 months' rather than the previous 6 months' income for determining eligibility. This should reflect more realistically the true economic circumstances of the financially distressed farmer. Further, these amendments would exclude the counting of any liquidation proceeds from family income when determining income eligibility for programs under JTPA, when such proceeds result from a sale of farm or business assets of that family resulting from voluntary or involuntary foreclosure, forfeiture, or bankruptcy. Finally under II–A programs, currently 10 percent of participants may be individuals who are not determined as being economically disadvantaged, but who experience barriers to employment due to other factors. Our bill amends this section of the act to include those individuals for participation who, due to rural residence, are geographically isolated, thus experiencing barriers to employment.

To address the problems associated with determining eligibility for displaced farmers and self-employed individuals under title III, these amendments clarify that self-employed individuals are eligible for participation under the Dislocated Worker Program if they are or will become unemployed due to general economic conditions in the community or because of natural disasters. Further, in order to encourage early intervention for dislocated farmers, this bill specifies that States may determine farmers eligible for participation under title III if the farmer certifies that the farm operations will terminate because of circumstances which may include one or more of the following events: First, the issuance of notice of foreclosure or intent to foreclose; second, the failure of the farm to return a profit during the preceding 12 months; third, the entry of the farmer into bankruptcy proceedings; fourth, the failure or inability of the farmer to obtain capital necessary to continue operations; fifth, the failure or inability of the farmer to make payments on loans secured by the farm premises; or sixth, the farmer's total debts exceed 70 percent of total farm assets. These criteria on which States may base eligibility determinations are not meant to be all-inclusive, they are simply meant to provide States with the guidance needed to intervene quickly, allowing assistance for farmers who are in the process of leaving farming, similar to that allowed to workers who have received notice of future job loss.

DATA COLLECTION

In order to adequately identify those farmers and ranchers who would qualify for assistance under JTPA, this bill amends title IV of JTPA, the Cooperative Labor Market Information Program, to require the Secretary of Labor to develop a means by which statistical data relating to permanent dislocation of farmers and ranchers can be collected and directs the Department to collect such data. Included in this information is to be the identification of: The number of farm and ranch failures; the number of farmers and ranchers dislocated, including farm spouses dislocated; the location of the affected farms and ranches; the types of farms and ranches involved; and if available, the causes for such failures. The Secretary would then be directed to publish a report based upon this data, including a comparison of these findings with data currently used by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in determining the Nation's annual employment and unemployment rates and an analysis of whether or not farmers and ranchers are being adequately accounted for in such employment statistics. This amendment is intended to formally identify, for the first time at the Federal level, those farmers and ranchers who are being forced out farming and who will be in need of transitional assistance. Further, it addresses the concern that rural underrepresentation is occurring in current unemployment statistics. A similar provision is also provided in the bill to encourage at the State level that the Governor's coordination and special services activities include, where appropriate, collection and dissemination of information on the number of permanent farmer dislocations, on both a State and local basis, to service delivery areas.

NATIONAL ACTIVITIES AND STUDIES

In order to fully understand and meet the special needs of rural communities in the future under JTPA, the bill calls for a number of studies to be conducted by both the Department of Labor [DOL] and the National Commission on Employment Policy [NCEP]. The bill requests that the DOL and NCEP conduct studies that would evaluate JTPA's current effectiveness in rural America, particularly evaluating rural needs for economic development and employment generating activities. The amendments would further require that the problems associated with serving the displaced farmer and eligible family members under current employment and training programs be identified and assessed, and that recommendations be made to Congress on how best to effectively serve this population in the future. Our measure further requires, that both the Department of Labor and the National Commission on Employment Policy examine current Federal coordination efforts between the Departments of Labor, Education, Health and Human Services, Commerce, and Agriculture in administration of Federal employment and training programs, and make recommendations on how to improve such coordination at the national level.

Because program coordination is so important to overall effectiveness of JTPA and particularly in its service to rural and farming communities, requirements are made throughout the bill that are aimed at increasing coordination efforts between Federal, State, and local employment, training, educational, social service, and agricultural agencies.

While this bill does not address all problems associated with serving displaced farmers—it does provide States with increased Federal guidance in serving the needs of rural and farming communities, without taking away necessary flexibility.

We see these amendments as a first step in addressing the needs of those farmers who have decided or are being forced to make the difficult transition to an alternative workplace. The Dislocated Farmer Training Amendments of 1986 simply amend current statute. The bill requires no new spending. While other measures have been proposed and certainly would be desirable that would provide additional money for employment and training assistance to farmers and workers in such need, in light of our budget deficit problems, it makes much more sense to update current programs at this time, such as we have done here today. Hopefully in the future we will be in a better position to provide additional funding for these types of services. I appreciate the cosponsorship and support of my colleagues for this legislation, and I invite Members on both sides of the aisle to join us in support of this bill.

ACID RAIN—WE HAVE FOUND THE DISEASE, IT IS NOW TIME TO UTILIZE THE CURE

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, it is now time to rid America of one of its most dangerous, man-made, environmental concerns. Over the last 30 years, thousands of lakes, streams and other water ways throughout the Northeast and Canada have been put on the endangered species list. In the Adirondack Mountain region of New York State alone, nearly 200 lakes have lost all aquatic life and over 300 more are slated for the same fate.

Acid rain, the deadly fallout of sulfur and nitrogen compounds from the sky is a tremendous threat to areas as far West and South as California and Florida. Recently, a bilateral study commission of American and Canadian officials called for the United States Government and industry to undertake a 5-year, $5 billion program to test cleaner methods of burning coal in factories and powerplants. While the White House at first questioned these findings, a recent summit involving the President and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney encouraged the administration to acknowledge this report and concede that acid rain is a manmade problem. This was a critical step in solving the effects of acid rain on our Nation.

However, it was the House of Representatives who has made the largest push for the control, and future elimination, of the acid rain problem. Through H.R. 4567, the House has carefully formulated legislation to control acid rain by sharply reducing air pollutants from coal-fired boilers and motor vehicles.

Under the measure users of coal-fired boilers would have to reduce their sulfur emissions by as much as 10 million tons over the next decade. Sulfur emissions are believed to be the primary cause of acid rain. The bill also calls for reductions in nitrogen oxide emissions from cars and trucks, another potential cause of acid rain, according to a schedule planned by the Environmental Protection Agency. The measure also spells out cuts for industrial emissions, and gives the States discretion in how to achieve these reductions. The proposal also includes a mechanism that would cushion utility customers from sharp electric rate increases.

I believe this is a very comprehensive bill in an attempt to make significant headway to end the ecological nightmare of dead lakes and defoliated forests. The legislation is the result of reasonable compromises between the concerns of industry and protection of the environment.

Although some feel that acid rain is not yet a critical problem, we do know that where acid rain occurs there is environmental damage. With H.R. 4567, steps are now being taken to ensure the well-being of our country, forests and streams. I urge my colleagues on the Energy and Commerce Committee to expedite action on this bill and work for its passage.

MORE SOVIET ARMS FOR SALVADORAN GUERRILLAS?

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, the following newsstory deserves the attention of the House and requires no introduction or comment from me. I ask that it be included in today's RECORD.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, June 19, 1986]

PANAMA DETAINS SHIP CARRYING SOVIET ARMS

PANAMA CITY, PANAMA.—A Danish ship was being detained for carrying 200 tons of undeclared Soviet-made weapons, ammunition, trucks and other military equipment through the Panama Canal, authorities said yesterday.

The authorities said the 400-ton Pia Vesta was detained Saturday in Balboa, the port at the canal's Pacific entrance, after an inspection showed that the cargo was not what was listed on the ship's manifest.

The Pia Vesta's captain, Johannes Christiansen, 47, and the seven crew members were being held for questioning, the authorities' statement said. It said six of the crewman were Danish, and one Indonesian.

The authorities would not say where the military equipment was being shipped. But La Estrella de Panama, an independent newspaper that often reflects government views, said that it was destined for leftist guerrillas in El Salvador.

Guerrillas of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front have been fighting for power in El Salvador for 6½ years. The newspaper did not say where it got the information about the destination of the equipment.

The Register of Ships lists the Pia Vesta as belonging to Jorgen Jensen of Denmark. Danish authorities have accused Jensen of illegally carrying weapons to the government of South Africa in 1981 and 1982. That case is expected to come up in a Danish court later this summer.

Denmark's consul in Panama City, Sven-Olov Ruben Fahlgren, said in an interview with Danish national radio that the ship's representative said the cargo was picked up in Rostock, East Germany.

East Germany is an ally of the Soviet Union, which supplies arms to Nicaragua.

News reports in Panama said the Pia Vesta went through the Panama Canal, went down to Peruvian territorial waters without going to port, then changed course and again made for Balboa, where it was detained.

The reports said Peruvian authorities has tipped Panama that the ship carried suspicious cargo.

The Panamanian government statement said the Pia Vesta's undeclared cargo including machine guns, rocket launchers and ammunition.

"It has 200 tons of military equipment," Fahlgren said in the radio interview.

DISLOCATED FARMER TRAINING AMENDMENTS OF 1986

HON. THOMAS E. PETRI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, displaced farmers should receive the same Federal job training assistance as other displaced workers under the Job Training Partnership Act. Under current law, however, farmers are often overlooked because the trigger for assistance is notice of job termination or layoff. But farmers do not receive this type of advance notice when their farm is going under.

Today, I am joining the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] in introducing legislation extending this trigger to include notice of farm foreclosure and other advance indicators of agricultural job termination. Rural unemployment deserves the same attention as urban unemployment. I urge the Education and Labor Committee to include our proposal in pending revisions of the Job Training Partnership Act.

TRIBUTE TO JOAN CAMPBELL

HON. MARTIN OLAV SABO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, it is a great honor for me to pay tribute today to Joan M. Campbell of Minneapolis on the occasion of her 50th birthday. Joan has distinguished herself as a political and civic leader both in my own congressional district and throughout Minnesota's Twin Cities metropolitan area.

In 1972 Joan Campbell became the first woman to chair the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party organization in Minnesota's Fifth Congressional District. She served three terms in that office.

During her years of party service, Joan earned a well-deserved reputation as a good-humored, evenhanded, and judicious leader who got things done. To this day, she is often called on to chair meetings where the anticipation of tensions are especially high.

Joan is currently serving in her 13th year as a member of the metropolitan Council of the Twin Cities. She was appointed to that post in 1973 and subsequently reappointed by three successive Minnesota Governors—not all of whom were affiliated with her political party.

As a professional nurse at the University of Minnesota Hospitals, Joan has combined her professional background and expertise with her political astuteness to become a leading advocate of health and human service programs in the Twin Cities metropolitan area. For many years she has chaired the council committee responsible for these program areas.

To recognize her invaluable service to the people of Minnesota, many of Joan's friends will be honoring her formally tonight at a dinner in Minneapolis. I join them in thanking Joan Campbell for all that she has meant to us and in wishing her the best in the years ahead.

TRIBUTE TO DR. AND MRS. WILBUR WEIR

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur Weir. On June 21, they will be the guests of honor at the American Academy Alumni Association of New York's annual dinner.

Dr. and Mrs. Weir have dedicated countless hours in service to the youth of Cyprus. With his wife Elizabeth, Dr. Weir guided the American Academy through several decades of change and along the way accumulated a string of accomplishments.

Dr. Weir came to Cyprus upon graduation from Geneva College in Beaver Falls, PA, in 1916. He left Cyprus after 3 years, only to return after obtaining a master's degree at Princeton University. Except for intervals in the United States, during which time he earned an Ed.D. degree from Teachers College at Columbia University, Dr. Weir served as headmaster of the American Academy until his retirement in 1961.

Wilbur and Elizabeth Weir have touched hundreds of lives while dedicating themselves to the true spirit of education. They have provided inspiration and encouragement to countless Cypriot youth. Their spirit and dedication deserve to be recorded in history as part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

It is with great honor and pleasure that I join with so many alumni of the American Academy in paying tribute to Dr. and Mrs. Weir. I wish them continued health and happiness in the many more productive years to come.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO DAVID K. MURPHY

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives a well deserved honor that will be conferred upon one of my closest personal friends and constituents, Mr. David K. Murphy of Sacramento, CA.

Tonight, Mr. Murphy will receive the prestigious Distinguished Santa Claran Award from the University of California at Santa Clara Alumni Association for his many years of community service and outstanding achievement since graduating from this institution of higher learning in 1965.

Over the years, Dave has emerged as one of Sacramento's most prominent community and business leaders. President since 1979 of one of Sacramento's leading independent insurance companies, Pickett-Rotholz & Murphy, Dave has devoted thousands of hours of volunteer time in a variety of capacities to assist in the activities of numerous Sacramento civic clubs and service organizations.

I can say without hesitation that he has one of the finest records of community service—a fitting tribute to his drive, dedication and caring for the quality of life of the Sacramento metropolitan area. He has served as president of the Active 20–30 Club of Sacramento, Junior Achievement of Sacramento, Camellia Festival Association and as an officer in numerous other local service and civic organizations, including the Sacramento Young Men's Christian Association, the Rotary Club of Sacramento, the Sacramento Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce, and the Independent Insurance Agents Association of Sacramento.

His vivacious spirit, professional composure, and warm friendship have served as an inspiration to all of his family, friends, and colleagues. I can think of no other individual who is more deserving of this demonstration of appreciation and commendation.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of Sacramento and my colleagues in the House, I would like to extend my best wishes and sincere congratulations to Dave and his wife, Susan, and the rest of his family on the occasion of his selection as recipient of the Distinguished Santa Claran Award.

THE ACID DEPOSITION CONTROL ACT OF 1986

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE], and the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] for the leadership they provided in fashioning H.R. 4567, the Acid Deposition Control Act of 1986. As a member of the 92 Group Task Force on Acid Rain, which Representative BOEHLERT headed, I can state with certainty that this measure was designed to address a pressing environmental problem in a bipartisan manner. I would also like to commend the members of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment for recognizing this and reporting H.R. 4567 out of their subcommittee so expeditiously.

It is hoped that H.R. 4567 clears the legislative hurdles it still faces just as smoothly, because Federal action is clearly needed to help curb the acid rain problem. According to a report recently released by the Hudson River Keeper and Fisherman's Association, acid rain is a definite and significant contributor to the increased acidic levels of the beautiful ponds and lakes of Harriman State Park, which lies within my congressional district. Countless other studies link acid rain to similar damage to lakes and forests throughout the Northeast. The acid rain problem is spreading quickly to other sectors of our country. Despite contentions from some that we need to further study the acid rain problem, the evidence linking sulfur dioxide and nitrous oxide emissions to acid rain is too great for Congress to ignore.

H.R. 4567 is reasonable and responsible legislation that will address the acid rain problem in a sensible, cost-effective manner. No one sector of the country will be forced to bear the full cost of reducing sulfur dioxide and nitrous oxide emissions. Members from 32 States representing a wide spectrum of political viewponts have joined in cosponsoring this vital measure. Accordingly, I urge all my colleagues to consider and support this bipartisan legislation. Acid rain will not abate until Congress acts. Let us joint together in enacting significant acid rain legislation this session.

H.R. 4883

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, on May 21, 1986, I introduced H.R. 4883 a bill designed, in part, to provide an opportunity to Shee Atika, Inc., to exchange its Settlement Act lands on North Admiralty Island for other lands in southeast Alaska and other considerations. Chairman UDALL and Congressman SEIBERLING cosponsored the legislation. On June 6, 1986, Chairman SEIBERLING's subcommittee held a hearing on H.R. 4883, and the bill is pending markup.

I have received many inquiries concerning the bill, and how it evolved, and since that is a matter of interest I would like to explain the process. Chairman UDALL, Congressman SEIBERLING, and I directed our staffs to work with all interested parties to determine their positions relating to proposed exchange legislation and thereafter to put together a bill which they determined to be the best solution and present it to us for our consideration. This was done and as a result, H.R. 4883 was developed. Our staff people met on numerous occasions with representatives of the Forest Service, to determine lands that might be available for exchange, and have been in close contact with the Office of the Governor of the State of Alaska and with representatives of Shee Atika, Kootznoowoo, Inc., the village of Angoon and numerous environmental groups, including the Southeast Alaska Conservation Council, the Wilderness Society, and the Sierra Club concerning an exchange package. Every conceivable alternative was reviewed and analyzed before the final decisions were made and incorporated into the bill. While it is always possible to conceive of another combination of alternatives for trade with Shee Atika, all of the alternatives have been studied, all are available for consideration by the committee and the decision now is whether to proceed with H.R. 4883 or conclude that there are too many parties with an interest in the exchange who hold such diverse views that consensus can never be reached.

SATELLITE TELEVISION PROGRAMMING ACCESS ACT

HON. DAN COATS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. COATS. Mr. Speaker, over the past several months, I have continued to hear repeatedly from a number of my constituents in Indiana that they have concerns over the issue of scrambling satellite-delivered programming.

During the hearings on this issue before the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, of which I am a member, I stated that I believe the dish owners should have access to scrambled cable programming, and that it should be available at a reasonable price; that there should be competition in the distribution of these signals; and that there should be a sufficient quantity of decoding equipment available at reasonable prices.

The subcommittee held 2 full days of hearings, receiving much-needed input from the various parties involved in this issue. It has been my hope that we could arrive at an equitable solution to address the problems as presented by some of the witnesses.

For this reason, I have been working with a bipartisan group of members in an effort to come up with a balanced proposal that responds to the concerns that have been raised during the debate on this issue. In my home district in Indiana, I have both a cable constituency in Fort Wayne and a rural constituency that uses the backyard dish. I have attempted to find a compromise that addresses the legitimate concerns of both groups and believe the bill I am introducing today strikes that balance.

A summary of the bill is as follows:

The legislation provides the Federal Communications Commission [FCC] with responsibility to ban the satellite scrambling of a cable channel unless home dish owners have access to that programming at cómpetitive prices. Those prices would be subject to a competitive marketplace. The FCC's rule would not involve any rate regulation. Instead they would determine whether the prices are subject to the forces of a free and competitive marketplace.

The legislation establishes an ongoing FCC investigation and evaluation of the newly developing home dish market for satellite cable programming, with annual reports to Congress. In addition, any illegal acts or practices discovered would be referred to Federal and State enforcement agencies.

The legislation removes administrative barriers to broadcasters' efforts to extend their broadcast signal to currently unserved areas of the country by use of translator stations.

The legislation increases penalties for jamming of satellites, such as the "Captain Midnight" incident on April 27. The bill also initiates new procedures to assist the FCC and other agencies in tracking down and prosecuting violators.

The legislation would be of a limited 5 year duration and does not create a permanent regulatory structure.

I believe that ensuring progress in communications technology is an important investment in our future, and this bill attempts to provide some stability and foster growth in this new market. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor the legislation.

TAX COUNSELING FOR THE ELDERLY PROGRAM

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, a valuable and worthy organization which for years has assisted the elderly population of our Nation with free tax counseling and services received the Presidential Citation for Outstanding Service in the Minority Sector. The name of the program is Tax Counseling for the Elderly, sponsored by the American Association of Retired Persons, and I am here today to record the long overdue recognition it so fully deserves. It has provided services for taxpaying groups traditionally underserved by tax counselors, especially minorities, the homebound, and the rural aged. In the spirit of volunteerism, the TCE has discovered that some of the most rewarding experiences can be found in assisting others in the community.

The need for tax counseling and preparation becomes even more compelling due to the changes the Internal Revenue Service has undergone in the past several years. As chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Treasury-Postal Service-General Government, as well as chairman the Select Committee on Aging, I have had the opportunity to see first hand the effectiveness of this program for the elderly volunteers, the IRS, and the recipients of the TCE Service. During the 1986 tax season, the program enlisted the help of more than 21,000 volunteer counselors who assisted in preparing nearly 1.3 million tax returns for older Americans, including 30,000 shut-ins and 42,000 persons in hospitals, nursing homes, and other sites. Several newspapers across the Nation have lauded the success of the program.

I ask my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to join me in saluting the Tax Counseling for the Elderly Program upon its receipt of the Presidential Citation for Outstanding Service.

RESULTS OF 1986 QUESTIONNAIRE

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, early each year I distribute a questionnaire to my constituents requesting their opinions about issues of importance to western Kentucky and the Nation.

To date, over 34,000 western Kentuckians have completed and returned their responses to my 1986 questionnaire. The responses were tabulated by my Washington and district staff and by over 100 college students at Murray State University and the University of Kentucky Community Colleges at Henderson, Hopkinsville, Madisonville, and Paducah.

I want to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues the results of my 1986 questionnaire which follow:

1. What steps do you favor to reduce the federal deficit?

(b) Passing the "line-item veto" to permit the President to trim a portion of an appropriations bill without eliminating the whole program—11,301

(c) Making further cuts in domestic spending, such as jobs programs, aid to the elderly, housing assistance, federal highways and parks, etc.—4,363

(d) Making cuts in defense spending—10,814

(e) Raising taxes which would cause your taxes to increase annually by a small amount—5,968

(c) Clean air and water?—10,385

(d) Agriculture price supports?—14,427

3. About 43 percent of the federal budget is spend for the entitlement programs, such as Social Security, Medicaid, Medicare, black lung benefits, veterans' benefits, railroad retirement benefits, etc. Would you support a two-year freeze as to future increase in these programs? Yes—19,643; No—13,528

4. In adopting a budget this year, should Congress achieve their deficit reduction target (Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act of 1985) through spending reductions only, tax increases only, or a combination of both?

(c) No income tax, just a national, federal sales tax of about 5 percent, somewhat similar to the Kentucky 5 percent sales tax?—12,130

6. Do you favor providing aid to anti-communist guerrillas in Nicaragua or Angola? Yes—14,595; No—17,879

7. Would you support legislation which would lower air quality standards to permit greater use of western Kentucky high sulfur coal by electric power producing plants? Yes—19,579; No—13,778

8. Do you believe Congress should continue and improve the federal agiculture programs? Yes—19,584; No—12,489

(b) more—3,636

(c) less—11,328

11. Do you favor the proposed comparable worth plan calling for similar pay for jobs classified as comparable in skill? CRISIS IN HEALTH CARE

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, a crisis of grave proportion in health care has surfaced in the city of St. Louis, MO, as a result of myopic, insensitive policies promulgated by Mayor Vincent Schoemehl.

The increase in cases of lead poisoning, as revealed by the following articles from the St. Louis Post Dispatch, is just one example of misguided health policies.

SAVING MINDS FROM WASTE

(By Paul L. Kuehnert)

The Greater St. Louis Lead Poisoning Prevention Council is a consortium of more than 20 public and private agencies in the St. Louis area concerned with the continuing problems of lead poisoning in children. Formed in 1984, the council is committed to the prevention and eradication of childhood lead poisoning.

On July 3, 1985, my immediate predecessor, Anthony Cuneo, addressed this board [Estimate and Apportionment] and stated:

"The recent dramatic changes within the city Department of Health and Hospitals affect both inpatient and outpatient services in St. Louis. The council is very disturbed about the possible negative effect these changes will have on the vital public health issue of lead poisoning, which endangers the health and well-being of numerous children. . . . Because of the recent changes, the (Lead Poison Control) Program has been fragmented; central coordination and management no longer exist. . . ." I must report that the council's deepest fears regarding "negative effects" of the "dramatic changes" have, unfortunately, been realized.

There are currently 3,100 children in the city with known lead poisoning, an increase of more than 50 percent from the 1,900 known cases last July. This increase is largely due to lower federal standards for what is considered to be a toxic level of lead in a child's blood that went into effect here last July.

Yet, while the problem has grown, the city's response has been less than adequate. The city-funded program of detection and treatment of childhood lead poisoning, now administered by St. Louis Regional Health Care Corp., is failing to identify children and, more important, to follow up on and treat children with known lead poisoning. Objective measurements of this failure include:

Follow-up blood testing of children with known lead poisoning has dropped 43 percent since July 1985, with 3,199 tests done from July 1985 through March 1986, compared to 5,604 done from July 1984 through March 1985.

Outpatient treatment with drugs to remove lead from children with very high lead levels is down 43 percent since July 1985, with 154 treatments given from July 1985 through March 1986, compared with 269 such treatments from July 1984 through March 1985.

As indicated by the above statistics, anywhere from 800 to 1,200 children are lacking in medical follow-up needed to prevent serious brain damage as a result of these program failures.

It should be noted that our council has repeatedly and consistently brought our concerns about the lead program to the attention of both Regional and city officials since a clear pattern of problems emerged late last fall. We have argued and we have reasoned. We have made suggestions and recommendations both verbally and in writing. And still, for these children, we have seen no substantive change or improvement.

Thus, it is our council's conclusion, reached by unanimous vote on May 13 with 26 agency representatives present and voting, that we strongly recommend that the lead clinic, program and staff, be returned to the jurisdiction of the health commissioner of the city of St. Louis, along with adequate funds to administer a comprehensive lead poisoning prevention and treatment program.

We recommend this change immediately and for these five reasons:

(1) Lead poisoning is truly of epidemic proportions in St. Louis. As with any epidemic, there should be control mechanisms and accountability mechanisms to deal effectively and appropriately with it. These mechanisms are to be had in the city Health Division.

(2) Expertise is needed to handle lead poisoning. The Health Division contains knowledgeable men and women with experience in this field. Their day-to-day involvement is crucial in adequately attacking this epidemic.

(3) Cost-effectiveness is a necessity in dealing with such a massive problem. Does anyone know how much Regional spent on the lead program this last year? Was it an increase or decrease over previous city subsidies? We must know how many dollars are going directly into this problem. We cannot have it buried in "outpatient care."

(4) In lead poisoning, medical and environmental measures must be coordinated in order to have the best outcome for the child. This coordination has been undermined by splitting up the program and the contracting out of the medical component. Restoring the program to the Health Division will restore this vital connection with the accountability and control of a common administration.

(5) It is, we believe, the law that this program be administered by the health commissioner. We believe city ordinance No. 56091 and the city Charter are quite specific about this.

Our final reference must be the children—these real, live, growing little people who are the reality behind the statistics. The effects of the sun during the summer months increases the mobilization of lead from the bones, where it is stored, to the bloodstream and, thence, the brain. Unknown numbers of children may be walking time bombs at risk for seizures, serious brain damage and even death due to lead poisoning this very summer because of the lack of screening and follow-up.

These dire forecasts cannot be made with any degree of certainly. However, the chance is there. And more than the chance, the reality of children being unmonitored even with low or moderate levels of lead causing gradual brain function loss is now present. By fragmenting and contracting out the lead program, the city has lost control over a disease that literally is damaging its future. We urge that you act immedicately to restore the lead program to the jurisdiction of the Health Division.

PREVENTING LEAD POISONING

Remarks on today's Commentary page call attention to the fact that lead poisoning has climbed to an unacceptably high and potentially fatal level for some children in St. Louis. That fact leaves a shameful blemish on the city's public health care system for permitting this preventable illness to get out of control.

The resurgence of the lead poisoning problem started after the Regional Medical Center began running the program last year. The city has experienced a 43 percent drop in outpatient treatment of children with lead poisoning since July of last year. In addition, the number of children found to have the disease rose by more than 50 percent during the same period.

Officials at Regional say the 50 percent increase is attributed to the fact that blood toxicity levels used to establish lead poisoning have been lowered by the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. But that doesn't make the city's sorry performance any less excusable; nor should the old response that progresss is being made be tolerated any longer.

One of the biggest disservices in the city's reorganized health care system has been that of disrupting the city's comprehensive program for identifying children who are potential victims of lead poisoning and treating and following up on those afflicted with the illness.

Officials at Regional have placed far less emphasis on prevention and follow-up treatment, although these two components accounted partly for the program's success when it was under the city health commissioner's jurisdiction. By their inaction, hospital officals have allowed defenseless children to fall prey once again to a preventable and potentially fatal illness.

THE DISLOCATED FARMER TRAINING AMENDMENTS OF 1986

HON. JIM ROSS LIGHTFOOT

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join Congressman GUNDERSON in sponsoring the Dislocated Farmer Training Amendments of 1986. This bill amends the Job Training Partnership Act [JTPA] to encourage the delivery of services to dislocated farmers.

As you may know, the downturn in the agricultural economy has taken a toll on farmers and their families. Unfortunately, some of these farmers have had no choice but to leave farming. However, many of these farmers have found out that this transition from farming to another occupation is not easy.

Many of them are unaware of the Federal employment and training programs that could help them get back on their feet. And, for some farmers, they have found out that they are ineligible for training assistance because they don't meet the eligibility guidelines.

Under JTPA, farmers can qualify for assistance under two programs: The title II–A program for economically disadvantaged workers and the title III program for dislocated workers. Both of these programs have and will continue to serve farmers. But, as brought out in a Government Operation's Subcommittee on Employment and Housing hearing that was held last year in Council Bluffs, IA, the JTPA Program was not designed with farmers and other self-employed people in mind. Therefore, trying to assist these people poses special problems of JTPA officials.

For example, eligibility guidelines under title II–A limit the number of farmers that can qualify for assistance. Under title II–A, a farmer's income during the last 6 months is used to determine his eligibility. Several JTPA administrators at the hearing suggested that this 6-month timeframe did not accurately reflect the income picture of farmers and that a 12-month period would be better.

Another problem mentioned by JTPA officials was that many farmers were unaware of what services were available to them and their families. JTPA officials in rural areas were also having difficulty identifying these farmers and convincing them that they would benefit from the JTPA Programs.

As one JTPA participant testified, when he first enrolled in the program, he was doubtful that it would offer him much assistance, but by the end of the program he was telling other farmers that the program was of value and that others should try it. He emphasized, however, that the program needed to be expanded to serve more of the farmers.

Another concern of JTPA officials was that they were uncertain if they were correctly following the guidelnes. For many States, job retraining is a new program for them. They don't have much experience with providing these services. Also, JTPA was designed by Congress to give the States a great deal of flexibility to establish programs to meet the particular needs of the State's workers. Overall, States have done a good job in providing job training services, including the State of Iowa.

But, there has been some concern that a State might go beyond the intent of JTPA when identifying eligible participants. In April 1985, the Department of Labor issued a policy statement that farmers and other self-employed people could qualify for assistance under title III. This has helped, and many farm states have expanded their definitions to include more farmers and self-employed people. However, there is still a lot more that could be done to bring more farmers into this program.

In an effort to accommodate more farmers under JTPA, Congressman GUNDERSON and I have introduced legislation to modify JTPA to meet the needs unique to farmers. This legislation does a number of things. First, it addresses the problem mentioned in last year's Employment and Housing Subcommittee hearing that using the past 6 months income to determine eligibility under title II–A did not accurately reflect a farmer's income. In this legislation, we change the definition of economically disadvantaged by allowing the farmer's past 12 months income to be used to determine eligibility.

In title III, we include self-employed people, including farmers, as eligible participants. We also include a definition of which farmers may qualify for assistance. This definition will provide the States with some guidance in determining which farmers are eligible for assistance.

One of the most common problems encountered thus far has been that farmers operate under different income conditions than other workers, and it is harder to qualify them for title III. This definition should help States better determine which farmers are eligible for assistance.

Also included in this legislation is a provision allowing the Secretary of Labor to issue regulations excluding liquidation proceeds from family income when such proceeds are due to a sale of a farm or business assets because of voluntary or involuntary foreclosure, forfeiture, or bankruptcy. This should assist farmers whose proceeds from these sales count as income, although they do not have access to this income.

In addition to changing the eligibility guidelines, this legislation encourages greater coordination at the Federal level among programs that would assist farmers and their families. During the last year, it has been determined that greater linkages need to be established among education, training, mental health counseling, and other programs that would assist farmers. Farmers and their families are unfamiliar with these programs and are reluctant to seek assistance. Increased efforts need to be made to ensure that farmers are made aware of and receive the services which would help them through these difficult times.

This legislation also calls for the National Commission for Employment Policy to conduct studies that address the employment problems of rural Americans. It requires the Commission to address the special employment needs of the displaced farm family and report back to Congress with its findings within 2 years.

Adoption of these changes in JTPA should help ease the transition from farming to another occupation for many farmers and their families. When JTPA was created by Congress in 1982, no consideration was given to how self-employed people, such as farmers, would fit in the program. States have done remarkably well in serving farmers under JTPA, but more needs to be done to make their jobs easier. Congress needs to recognize the special circumstances of farmers by approving this legislation. I urge my colleagues to join me and other Members of Congress by cosponsoring this legislation to encourage the delivery of training services to America's dislocated farmers.

TIPS FOR BECOMING A SUPER-PARENT

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the children of America are one of its greatest resources. The youth of today is the backbone of a vibrant and productive country tomorrow. Children are influenced from many quarters as they grow and develop. Teachers, clergy, and playmates are all factors in determining what kind of an adult a child will become. The most important influence on children, however, is their parents.

On June 18, 1986 the Washington Post published an article written by Bliss Temple, 11, and Vicki Vantoch, 12, which intelligently addresses this subject. The article, titled "Treat All Kids Equally," lists 35 rules which the girls believe that every parent should follow in raising their children. I am pleased to share their precocious insights with my colleagues in the House and to commend them for their good advice to all of us.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, June 18, 1986]

TREAT ALL KIDS EQUALLY

(By Vicki Vantoch and Bliss Temple)

1. Let kids choose their own clothes.
2. Treat all kids equally.
3. Get everyone's side before you judge.
4. Don't be nicer to those who cry all the time.
5. Teach your kids to know what's in the food they eat.
6. Let kids make their own decisions.
7. Let kids learn by experience.
8. Never push a kid to do something that's supposed to be fun.
9. Teach kids to be sanitary.
10. Teach kids to be independent.
11. Trust your kids.
12. Never spoil a kid.
13. Don't always do what your kid says.
14. Teach kids manners when they are young.
15. Know what's happening at your kid's school.
16. Use constructive criticism and compliments.
17. Make a point of not drinking, smoking or stealing.
18. Make a point of keeping yourself healthy.

CONGRATULATIONS TO CALIFORNIA ANGELS' PITCHER DON SUTTON ON HIS 300TH MAJOR LEAGUE VICTORY

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate California Angels' pitcher Don Sutton on the occasion of his 300th major league victory. Yesterday, Mr. Sutton became the 19th pitcher to achieve 300 wins, thus placing him on an exclusive list that includes Cy Young, Warren Spahn, and active pitchers such as Tom Seaver, Steve Carlton, and Phil Niekro. Don Sutton has earned a place in history and will almost surely be named to the Hall of Fame.

Don Sutton's career is an example of outstanding sportsmanship. In his 21 years as a major league pitcher, the 41-year-old right-hander has missed only four scheduled starts and is on this way to second on the all-time list, behind Cy Young, in games started. He is sixth on the all-time career strikeout list with 3,363 and is ninth on the all-time shutout list with 58. Don Sutton's outstanding career proves that dedication and hard work has its rewards.

Mr. Speaker, I am especially pleased to pay tribute to Don Sutton because of his long-standing roots in California. Although he was born in Clio, AL, and was raised in Florida, Don Sutton began his baseball career in the minor leagues in Santa Barbara, CA. After spending a year in the minors, Don went to work for the Los Angeles Dodgers where he spent the bulk of his career. He settled down in Laguna Niguel, CA, during his 14 years with the Dodgers from 1966–80. He returned to southern California at the end of the 1985 season when the Angels acquired him for their pennant push. I know he is pleased to have won his 300th victory in southern California where it all began.

HONDURANS AND COSTA RICANS FAVOR AID TO THE CONTRAS

HON. BILL McCOLLUM

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, we often hear that our Latin American friends do not favor United States support to the democratic Nicaraguan resistance. This assessment is wrong, as public opinion polls have repeatedly shown. Here's what the public in the two Central American "frontline states"—Honduras and Costa Rica—have said: Nicaragua is the major threat to their future and democratic society; the Nicaraguan resistance should be supported and that Nicaragua would be better off with a victory by the resistance; and the United States is a positive force in Central America.

These findings were confirmed by a 1985 poll released earlier this year by our colleague, BOB LIVINGSTON. They were re-confirmed in a poll taken during the last 3 weeks of February by Gallup International's Costa Rican affiliate, Consultoria Interdisciplinaria en Desarrollo [CID]. Based on a representative sampling of 1,228 Costa Ricans and 1,300 Hondurans, the poll's major findings are:

Costa Ricans overwhelmingly favor U.S. military and financial aid to the anti-Sandinista (Contra) forces by a 50-percent to 11-percent margin, and Hondurans favor such aid by 57-percent to 10-percent. The rest have no opinion.

Six persons in 10 in the survey countries think Nicaragua will be better off if the Contra forces win the conflict, and less than 2 in 10 favor victory by the Sandinista Government. Over 6 in 10 say their own countries will be better off if the Contra forces win, and less than 1 in 10 disagrees.

Two-thirds of the Costa Rican public and half the Hondurans believe that the majority of the people in Nicaragua favor the Contra cause. Ten percent in Costa Rica and less than a fifth in Honduras think that a majority in Nicaragua favors a Sandinista Government victory.

More Costa Ricans (57-percent) think the Contra forces treat people with consideration in the war zones than do the Sandinista Government troops (5-percent). A quarter denies either side respects the people. In Honduras, while 4 in 10 say the Contra forces treat the people with more respect than the Sandinista forces, an equal number claims both sides demonstrate lack of respect for the populace. One in 10 speaks more highly of the Sandinistas than the Contras, and even fewer speak well of both.

Costa Ricans and Hondurans are far more inclined to believe a Contra victory would result in free elections and return to democracy than doubt this (51 percent to 9 percent in Costa Rica, 57-percent to 6-percent in Honduras). The rest have no opinion.

Eight in every 10 Costa Ricans and Hondurans see Nicaragua acting as a tool of Cuba and the Soviet Union, not pursuing an independent policy.

GENERIC ANIMAL DRUG AND PATENT TERM RESTORATION ACT

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague from the Judiciary Committee, Mr. KASTENMEIER, in introducing today H.R. 5069, the "Generic Animal Drug and Patent Term Restoration Act."

This bill has two main features. First, it would establish an expedited approval system for generic copies of off-patent brand name animal drugs. Second, it would provide for the extension of patents covering animal drugs for up to 5 years. The actual extension would be equal to a portion of the time that the animal drug was under testing by the sponsoring company and under review by the Food and Drug Administration [FDA].

These two features are virtually identical to those in the generic human drug—patent term restoration bill—The Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act—that was enacted in the last Congress. That 1984 human drug bill expedited the approval system for generic copies of off-patent brand name drugs, and extended drug patents for up to 5 years.

The 1984 human drug bill has proven to be a major success. Many new generic drugs are available at prices which are significantly lower than their brand name counterparts, and a number of new innovative drugs have received patent extensions. The bill we introduce today can provide the same benefits in the animal field. If lower-priced generic animal drugs are available to farmers, the costs of producing food for consumers will be less. In addition, with patent extension providing new incentives for the development of new drugs, companies will conduct more research on innovative animal drugs that are safer for human consumption.

Mr. Speaker, Members in the House and Senate are familiar with the two basic goals of this bill because of our work on the human drug bill. When the 17-year patents expire on brand name drugs, whether they are human or animal drugs, consumers desire and deserve the aggressive price competition that is fostered by the availability of generic copies. This price competition is entirely consistent with our patent laws and free enterprise system. In addition, we can encourage higher research expenditures for new drugs by assuring longer patent terms during which the sponsoring company will have exclusive marketing rights.

This is an important bill which follows the precedent set by the 1984 human drug bill. We encourage all Members to join us in supporting it.

FREEDOM FOR THE SIKH NATION

HON. GENE CHAPPIE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. CHAPPIE. Mr. Speaker, on June 6, the second anniversary of the siege on the Sikh's holiest shrine, thousands gathered in New York, San Francisco, and Washington, DC, to mourn the more than 1,000 Sikhs who died at the hands of the Indian Army, and to plead once again for an end to the violence.

The Golden Temple incident has become a symbol of the strife and suffering that divides India. Unfortunately, the siege was not an isolated event. Indian security forces again desecrated the Golden Temple on April 30, 1986, and we have just learned that Gurdaspur and Amritsar, where the Golden Temple is located, have been put under Indian security force rule.

Such actions fan the flames of resentment and anger that have burned in Punjab since 1947 when India was partitioned into Moslem Pakistan and predominantly Hindu India. Many Sikhs felt cheated because they didn't get their own homeland. Since then, they have pressed unsuccessfully for a measure of religious and political autonomy in Punjab, where they make up a majority of the population.

The Sikhs' struggle isn't that well known in the United States. The Indian Government prohibits foreign journalists from covering Punjab, so the only news available to us comes from the Indian Government or from firsthand accounts that leak out despite the news censorship. While we hear a lot about the Sikh extremists who have taken up arms to make their point, there is another side to the story.

The Sikhs who live in my district and who monitor events in Punjab tell of government brutality and religious persecution against their countrymen. Their claims have been substantiated by noted Indian jurists and human rights advocates in a publication called "Report to the Nation: Oppression in Punjab," which is banned in India.

The Sikhs also charge that the Indian Government has infiltrated their organizations to discredit them. After a 4-month investigation, the Toronto Globe and Mail, which had conducted a 4-month investigation into the charges, reported that it had found evidence of an Indian Government intelligence operation, "designed to divide Canada's Sikh community and neutralize the efforts of a separatist lobby that promotes a Sikh homeland in the Punjab."

These reports are disturbing to me and the 6,000 Sikhs who live in my congressional district in northern California. Today, I join with Sikhs around the world in urging a stop to the bloodshed. The June 6 anniversary of the Golden Temple siege is a haunting reminder of the factionalism and suffering in India. Before yet another year goes by, I implore Mr. Ghandi to make peace by negotiating a permanent and real freedom for the Sikh nation.

THE HIGHWAY TRANSPORTATION BILL

HON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, in another week, the Committee on Public Works and Transportation will consider and mark up the 1986 highway transportation bill, H.R. 3129.

At that time, I plan to offer a series of highway beautification amendments with language similar in nature to that contained in the bill I have filed, H.R. 4635.

As many of you know, I have long been an advocate of reforming the existing Federal highway beautification statute which may be more properly deemed billboard protectionism.

Over the next several days, I plan to share with you through the 1 minute my reasons as to why this statute should be reformed as well as the many newspaper articles and editorials and television commentaries which have appeared throughout the country expressing similar support for this reform effort.

During this time, too, I would encourage each of you to consult with your constituents and local officials on this issue, and I think you will be surprised of their overwhelming support for billboard reform as well.

CURRENT FARM CRISIS

HON. BEAU BOULTER

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. BOULTER. Mr. Speaker, in light of the current depressed state of agriculture, the Secretary of Agriculture should jump at any chance he gets to constructively help the American farmer without busting the Federal budget. I am introducing a resolution today which, by bolstering farm income and reducing burdensome commodity surpluses, has the potential to do just that.

This is a chance to increase farm income, reduce carryover stocks and reduce future budgetary expenditures.

Section 1009(e) of the 1985 farm bill gives the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to accept bids from producers for the conversion of crop acres to diverted acres, in return for payment in kind from CCC surplus stocks.

The key element of this provision is that the payments aren't counted as part of the normal $50,000 per person payment limitation established under section 1001 of the farm bill.

My resolution expresses the sense of the Congress that the Secretary should take full advantage of the authority to implement this program and provide much needed relief. It will provide the opportunity for increased farm income as producers would have the option of submitting bids and receiving payments in addition to deficiency payments and land diversion payments.

The program would also reduce huge carryover stocks that are creating downward price pressure on the commodity markets, and would lower future government storage costs for holding those stocks.

Finally, the in-kind payments do not constitute a direct budgetary outlay.

This is the kind of help hard-pressed farmers need to get through this particularly hard time. My resolution has the strong support of the American Farm Bureau, the National Wheat Growers, the National Cotton Council, and the National Corn Growers. And I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important effort to increase farm income without busting the budget.

There aren't any simple solutions to the current farm crisis. However, the Government, through its past policies of high interest rates and embargoes, has had a hand in creating many of agriculture's problems, and Government must take some responsibility for providing assistance to our farm families and rural America.

THE BATTLE OF KOSOVO

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, normally the defeat of an army in battle is a low point in a nation's history but in the case of the people of Serbian descent one lost battle has been the cause for a glorious celebration. Each year Americans of Serbian descent celebrate the defeat of the Serbian army at the Battle of Kosovo in 1389, not because their army was defeated and their nation fell to the Turks, but because the Serbian people endured this defeat and the 400 years of rule by the Turks that followed without losing their religious faith or their Serbian heritage and traditions.

The drive of the Turks to conquer all of Europe began in the 1330's, and by 1371 they had won a decisive battle against the Serbian king, Vakashin Mrnyavchevick, at the banks of the river Maritsa. Although this defeat of King Mrnyavchevick was a disaster to the Serbian people and their army, the people of Serbia continued to struggle against the Turks until the Battle of Kosovo in 1389. The defeat of the Serbians at Kosovo led to the eventual domination of the people by the Turks in 1459 which brought them into the Ottoman Empire. A domination which lasted for 400 years.

Throughout this time the people of Serbia were subjected to cruel and inhuman treatment but they endured these cruelties and remained united under the Serbian Orthodox Church. The Ottoman Empire eventually faded and the Serbs were given the opportunity to regain their autonomy and eventually their independence in 1882. Following World War I the Serbian dynasty helped lead the way to establishing the Kingdom of Serbs, Croatians, and Slovenians, later to be renamed Yugoslavia. In 1945 the monarchy was abolished after the Communist invasion of Yugoslavia.

The Communists banned the celebration of the Battle of Kosovo in an effort to destroy the heritage and unity of the Serbian people. The people of Serbia have demonstrated their strength and pride for their heritage throughout history and the celebration of this defeat and Turkish domination is the embodiment of the endurance of the Serbian people. It is with pride, Mr. Speaker, that I join the Serbian people of my district and the entire Nation in commemorating this great battle and the endurance and pride of the Serbian people.

COAST GUARD AUXILIARY DAY

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, on June 21, 1986, the State of Michigan will celebrate Coast Guard Auxiliary Day. The celebration is being sponsored by the Ninth Central Region of the U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary.

The Coast Guard Auxiliary was founded by an act of Congress on June 23, 1939. Since then, it has performed innummerable public services. The Coast Guard Auxiliary provides boating education, courtesy marine examinations and search and rescue services, as well as providing support and backup services for its parent organization, the U.S. Coast Guard.

What is perhaps the most remarkable feature of the Coast Guard Auxiliary's fine work is that it is done largely on a volunteer basis. The spirit of voluntarism is one of our proudest national virtues; it is what makes the American people, and therefore America, great. Thus, the work of the Coast Guard Auxiliary embodies the spirit that has established this country as the strongest and freest in the world.

Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to commend to my colleagues in Congress and to the American people the work of the Coast Guard Auxiliary, and to congratulate it on Coast Guard Auxiliary Day.

THE 1986 CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE VIGIL

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, awhile ago I received a letter from a constituent of mine who is concerned about the many "refuseniks" that remain in the Soviet Union. I too am concerned. In the midst of post-Geneva optimism, plans for increased Soviet trade and increased cultural and student exchanges, the Soviets continue to harass and detain individuals who express a discontent with their Government or simply desire to emigrate.

Sometimes the story of a single person can tell more about a system of government than all the statistics in the world. I would like to describe the situation of one such individual who has been grossly mistreated. Vladimir Lifshitz is a Hebrew teacher who has Israeli citizenship. He was arrested on January 8, 1986, on his way to work. Shortly thereafter, searches were conducted in his apartment. He was accused of "disseminating anti-Soviet propaganda" because he privately reacted to his son's rejection from the Lenigrad Institute of Fine Mechanics and Optics. The content of his private correspondence to the West was the basis for his unjust conviction for slander. He was sentenced to a grim 3 years hard labor in a Soviet gulag. Mr. Lifshitz has suffered beatings at the hands of his captors.

Mr. Lifshitz is only one of many who have been so unjustly treated. At this time, it is especially important that we demonstrate our continued concern for human rights in the Soviet Union. In the anticipation of another meeting between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev, I hope our efforts will contribute significantly to the outcome of talks on human rights. For many refuseniks, we are their only hope.

TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL M. ISENBERG

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am sad to note that Michael M. Isenberg of Miami Springs, FL, passed away. Mike was a good and longtime friend, and he will be sorely missed by everyone who knew him.

Mike studied law at Northwestern University and began a successful career that was to last for over 50 years. But World War II intervened, and he served with distinction in the U.S. Army. Among the many honors he received, nothing gave him more satisfaction than the role he played in liberating the Temples in Neice that had been closed for so long during the Nazi occupation. The pain and suffering he witnessed during the war made a lasting impression on him.

Mike Isenberg moved from Chicago to Miami after the war and quickly developed the reputation as a kind and giving person who never hesitated to lend a helping hand to others. Through the years, he was especially active in Temple Israel, where he volunteered his time and effort with characteristic generosity and commitment.

Mike Isenberg was buried at Arlington National Cemetery, a fitting honor for a man who deeply loved his country and served it so well.

I want to express my deepest condolences to his wife, Louise, his two daughters, Jaclin Isenberg Mills and Linda Isenberg Keenan, and to his entire family.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO RANDOLPH B. KOHL OF THE LOS ANGELES AREA COUNCIL BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honor for me to pay tribute to Randolph B. Kohl who is leaving his position as director of finance for the Los Angeles Boy Scouts of America to become executive vice president of the Cancer Society for the State of California.

A native of Buffalo, NY, Randy attended Diocesan Seminary and College and later studied to enter the priesthood at the University of St. Bernards Seminary and College.

After a brief period in the U.S. Air Force, Randy began his tenure at the Boy Scouts of America as the director of exploring in New York. Later, he held various positions with the Boy Scouts of America in New Jersey, Washington, and, lastly, California. Most recently, he was awarded a master's degree from Columbia Pacific University of California.

Mr. Speaker, Randy Kohl has been a positive force in our community. The great success over the years of the Los Angeles Area Council Boy Scouts of America can be traced to Randy's efforts. As a matter of fact, it was through his guidance that enabled the Los Angeles Area Council to raise considerable revenue through many successful celebrity fundraising dinners.

My wife, Lee, joins me in commending and congratulating Randy Kohl on this special occasion. We wish him and his wife, Marylan, and their children, Kathleen, Lisa, and Richard, success and happiness in all their future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO THE REVEREND FATHER FRED B. MILLER

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the Reverend Father Fred B. Miller, pastor of St. Michael's Church, Lindhurst, NJ. On Sunday, June 22, Father Miller will be honored by his parish on his 40th anniversary of his ordination.

As pastor of St. Michael's Church in Lindhurst, Father Miller has devoted unlimited hours to the spiritual renewal of his people. His untiring efforts have resulted in his parish becoming a vital center for religious and social activity.

Father Miller was ordained on June 15, 1946, and first served the parish of St. Hedwig in Elizabeth and later the parish of the Most Sacred Heart of Jersey City, NJ. He came to St. Michael's Church in 1984 after serving as pastor of St. Benedict's parish for over 20 years.

Father Miller has committed himself to the service of his community and service to his fellow man. Possessed with a natural ability to bring comfort to those in distress, Father Miller has always been available when needed.

I am happy to have this opportunity to congratulate Father Miller on the 40th anniversary of his ordination. It is with great honor and pleasure that I join with so many of Father Miller's parishioners in honoring him on this day.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO MRS. HISAKO HIBI

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, on June 14, 1986, an exhibition displaying the paintings of Mrs. Hisako Hibi opened in San Francisco. The paintings, which depict life within the barbed-wire fences of the Japanese relocation camps of the 1940's, constitute a valuable documentation of the history of Japanese-Americans in the United States.

Mrs. Hibi is a 79-year-old Issei (first generation Japanese). During World War II she was contained at Tanforan Assembly Center in San Bruno and Topaz War Relocation Center in Utah. During this incarceration, she painted 70 oil paintings reflecting the dreary life led by the internees. Her pictures depict both the bare physical surroundings of desert and sagebrush as well as human suffering. However, amidst the suffering, Mrs. Hibi has meticulously imparted the sense of hope and survival felt by the internees.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Hisako Hibi's artistic contributions to Japanese-Americans and to our society as a whole are invaluable. It is rare to find an individual with the talent and ability to convey the emotional trauma of the internees as profoundly as she. On behalf of the people of Sacramento, I commend and thank Mrs. Hibi for her realistic portrayal of history.

MEDICARE CLAIMS SHOULD BE PAID ON A TIMELY BASIS

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join my colleagues Representative BILL GRADISON and Representative PETE STARK, in introducing legislation to force the Health Care Financing Administration to pay Medicare claims on a timely basis. HCFA's goal in dragging its heels is to save the Government money, but the end, additional interest on the Medicare Trust Fund, does not justify the deliberate delay of claims processing and the costs late payments imposes on providers.

This legislation will enforce ethical business practices in Medicare. Delayed payment is an unconscionable burden for home health care providers, physicians, pharmacists, hospitals, and suppliers of durable medical equipment to be asked to assume. Health care providers are being asked to sacrifice the solvency of their businesses for a poor decision on the part of their Government.

HCFA's new policy will force providers to conclude that Medicare patients are no longer worth the business. One physician in my district, an individual whose claims have been delayed as long as 8 months, has informed me that soon he must file bankruptcy proceedings, since he accepts Medicare patients on an assigned basis. I ask you, is the savings achieved by delaying a physician's claims worth the loss of a concerned professional?

This places Medicare patients in jeopardy. Previously, Medicare patients received reimbursement within 2 weeks. They now wait in excess of 45 days before they receive their check from Medicare. HCFA's directive to delay claims processing is, in reality, forcing seniors to make hard choices between health care and other pressing needs.

Finally, cost-shifting is ever more expensive in the long term, for the savings to the program do not begin to meet the costs incurred to providers. Claims must be paid, regardless of whether they are paid when the service is rendered, or within 8 months of the service. Meanwhile the home health agency, the hospital, the physician, must borrow to stay afloat. So the interest drawn off the trust fund actually comes from the pockets of health care providers.

Private business must pay its bills in a timely manner. But there are no timely payment requirements for the Medicare Program. I look forward to swift action on this legislation. It is what the Medicare Program deserves.

A TRIBUTE TO ALFRED L. SWEENEY

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 19, 1986

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to bring to the attention of my colleagues the death of on outstanding American.

Mr. Speaker, Alfred L. Sweeney died on June 14, 1986. He was a personal friend whom I greatly respected and admired. He was one of the top black newspapermen in America and enjoyed a distinguished career. In addition to the long friendship which he and I enjoyed, he and my brother Carl had an even longer friendship and involvement. Al Sweeney was a big, strong, warm, caring, loyal, and enormously talented human being who distinguished himself as an outstanding journalist. I am proud to have enjoyed his friendship. Several newspaper articles have been written capturing the highlights of his career. I offer these articles for the record so that colleagues can read them and join with me in extending our condolences to his daughter, Sheila and his two brothers, James L. of Dayton, OH, and John H. of Cleveland.

ALFRED SWEENEY, FORMER CALL AND POST EDITOR, DIES

Alfred L. Sweeney, a native Clevelander and former City Editor of the Call and Post, died suddenly in his Washington, D.C. home, Saturday. Sweeney joined the Call and Post in 1956 and helped mold it into an award winning newspaper. Under his guidance the paper won the Russwurm Award, the highest honor of a Black newspaper, three times.

Sweeney was also a leader of the movement which succeeded in electing Carl B. Stokes, as mayor of Cleveland. Sweeney was named deputy director of information for the Equal Opportunities Commission on August 23, 1965. He later left that position and became deputy director of public affairs for the U.S. Department of Transportation (DOT) where he received two distinguished service awards.

In March 1974 Sweeney was appointed director of the EEOC's Office of Public Affairs.

Sweeney retired several years ago but continued to write a syndicated column "Just Thinking" which also appeared in the Call and Post.

Prior to joining the Call and Post, Sweeney was an editorial supervisor of the Afro American Newspapers in Baltimore and Washington. These papers served as Sweeney's news base until his death.

With 30 years of journalism experience Sweeney won awards in national journalism, newspaper staff writing, and column writing.

As former president of the Capital Press Club in Washington, he received the organization's Newsman's Award in 1954.

Sweeney was a graduate of Wilberforce University and a member of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity. He also attended Western Reserve University and graduated from John Adams High School.

Survivors include one daughter, Sheila Sweeney; two brothers, John H. and James L.; two nephews, James and John; and one niece, Renee.

ALFRED L. SWEENEY, 66, DIES; WAS RETIRED EEOC OFFICIAL

Alfred L. Sweeney, 66, a retired public affairs director of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission who also was a columnist for the Washington Afro American newspaper, died June 14 at his home in Silver Spring. He had a heart ailment.

Mr. Sweeney was born in Cleveland. He graduated from Wilberforce University and then returned to Cleveland, where he was a newspaper reporter. He served briefly in the Navy during World War II.

He moved to Washington in 1942 and for the rest of the war worked for the Office of Price Administration. He also wrote for the old Washington Tribune, which is now part of the Washington Afro American. When the war ended he worked for the General Accounting Office until about 1947, when he turned to newspaper work full time.

From 1951 to 1965, Mr. Sweeney lived in Cleveland and was the city editor and the news editor of the Cleveland Call Post, a black-oriented newspaper.

In 1965 he returned here and joined the EEOC as an information officer. From 1967 to 1974, he was deputy assistant director of public affairs at the Department of Transportation. From 1974 to 1977, he was director of public affairs at the EEOC.

In 1978, Mr. Sweeney went to the Department of Agriculture. He remained there until 1981, when he returned to the EEOC and again became director of public affairs. He retired in 1984.

From 1965 until his death, Mr. Sweeney wrote a weekly column for the Washington Afro American.

He received honors for his work from the Capital Press Club and the National Newspaper Publishers Association.

Mr. Sweeney was a founding member and past president of the Capital Press Club, a life member of the NAACP and a member of the Public Relations Society of America, the National Press Club and the National Urban League.

His wife, Norma J. Sweeney, died in 1978. Survivors include one daughter, Sheila Sweeney of Silver Spring, and two brothers, James L., of Dayton, Ohio, and John H., of Cleveland.

SPECIAL IN A DISTINCT BREED OF JOURNALISTS

(By Ethel L. Payne)

Al Sweeney is gone and his passing reminds those of us who are referred to as "pioneers" and "veterans" in the black press that our numbers are dwindling. He was special in a distinct breed of journalists.

Al had a caustic tongue and he used words that could make the toughest wince because, like Harry Truman, he didn't give them hell. He just told what he believed to be the truth and they thought it was hell!

He used to make me mad as hell with his male chauvinism, but I respected him or I knew that this was a way of venting his anger and frustration at a system that enforced its own brand of apartheid.

Al loved writing and he loved the black press. He was good at his craft, and to the end, he never forfeited his integrity. Like so many others in our class, the lean years brought mean days when putting bread on the table and sending kids to college were blood-draining sacrifices.

Some had to swallow pride and go into government to survive the institution that made the rules for the prescribed code of living according to race, creed and color. For Al and others, the safety valve was the black newspaper where one could say "almost" what one pleased or even do anonymous pieces. The man might suspect, but he couldn't prove who the seditionist was.

Al, we'll miss you, You won't be forgotten, When the last one checks out, you'll be part of the plan for the next generation to follow as a blueprint for courage and initiative.

WAS PROUD OF HIS WORK FOR THE BLACK PRESS

(By Louis Stokes)

Al Sweeney was not only a personal friend, but a political advisor to me. He was an enormously talented and insightful writer with keen political instincts.

Al always looked behind the scene to really analyze a situation. He was proud of his background as a reporter for the Black Press. This was where he established his credentials and distinguished himself in his field.

During his stay in Cleveland as city editor at the Call Post he, my brother Carl and I became close friends. It was a friendship that lasted until his death.

It was Al's strategizing that launched Carl's political career in Cleveland, culminating in Carl's election as mayor of Cleveland in 1969, making him the first black mayor of a major American city.

Al followed our careers closely and wrote about both of us on many occasions. I shall always cherish those articles. Whenever he called to discuss an article he contemplated writing he enjoyed bouncing his thoughts off of you. Intermittently, he would inject some humor and then laugh heartily. He had fun analyzing and discussing the issues he wrote about. He was proud that his columns appeared in black newspapers around the country. As a columnist for the Washington Afro-American, he was hard hitting but he was always fair.

At a retirement party for him about a year ago, Al talked proudly of his career and of the friends he had made over the years. Many of us paid tribute to him on that occasion.

He was loved and admired by many people. The black press has lost one of its most distinguished and prolific newsmen. The rest of us have lost one of our dearest friends.

AL SWEENEY: AN APPRECIATION—HAD AN EVER-ABIDING INTEREST IN CIVIL RIGHTS

(By Betty Lou Dotson)

I will miss Al Sweeney: he was one of the first people I met when I came to Washington from Chicago. He was part of a dwindling group of dedicated journalists serving in the federal section.

Al helped me in my work, often offering valuable advice, some of which I heeded. Al had an ever-abiding interest in civil rights and was very forthright in stating his views.

He was a dedicated journalist and an incisive writer. Even after his retirement, his influence continued to be felt. I always looked forward to reading his weekly column in the Afro. After his retirement, as during the days when he was in the federal government, I often disagreed with him, but I always paid attention.

It was a privilege to have known Al and to have worked with him, I will sorely miss him.

'BIG AL' WAS A REAL PRO

(By Chuck Sharpe)

I had read his by-lines hundreds of times before I ever had the opportunity to meet Al Sweeney, and although I had seen pictures of him, he did not match the image I had conjured up of him.

I met him first at a National Urban League Conference. He was there on a "working vacation" and I saw him quite frequently in the NUL press room. From that chance meeting, I came to know and respect the person as much as I had respected his by-lines in the Cleveland "Call and Post."

Later, he was appointed director of public affairs at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) and offered me a job in that office.

I still remember his words: "I know that you are a good writer, but I understand that you are a little quiet and shy. The people in my office would run all over you." I did not reply and he turned to look at me. "Well!" he said. "Right!". I said "I suppose that I am a little quiet and a little shy. So, if you are looking for an army sergeant, I am not your man. But if you need someone to run your shop, I know that I can do the job."

Less than three weeks later I was his deputy, sorting my way through the usual office problems and dealing with them the same way I had for some 15 years before. It wasn't long before he said to me: "I don't know what you are saying to these people, but you seem to be getting along with them and getting the work done." Again, I did not reply, and this time he did not demand a response.

"Big Al", as we knew him, grew on me and I grew on him until a strong union based on professionalism and mutual respect cemented us together in a way that few people understood, It was a respect based on his experience and my awe of that experience. Al Sweeney was a "tough boss," but he also was a real pro who taught me many tricks of the trade that can't be found in books.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, June 23, 1986

The House met at 12 noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MOAKLEY].

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
June 19, 1986.

I hereby designate the Honorable JOE MOAKLEY to act as Speaker pro tempore on Monday, June 23, 1986.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Reverend Dr. Ronald F. Christian, assistant to the bishop, American Lutheran Church, Fairfax, VA, offered the following prayer:

We are assembled, O God, in a place where decisions are commonplace; power is assumed; prestige is anticipated; and honor is conveyed.

It is our prayer, O God, that the decisions we make this day and every day will be tempered by concern; power will be balanced with compassion; prestige will be softened with humility; and honor received with dignity.

Remind us always that lives are affected by what we say and do.

Give us guidance in all our doings so that justice for all might be the result and that glory be given to Thee, our Creator. This we humbly pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 297. Joint resolution to designate the week beginning July 27, 1986, as "National Nuclear Medicine Week."

THE VIXEN AND THE LIONESS

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, one of Aesop's succinct tales is about the vixen who paraded her litter of six cubs in order to sneer at the lioness. "And how many have you got in your litter?" she inquired. "Only one," was the reply, "but a lion."

Mr. Speaker, I have received many requests from economists and investment bankers for an explanation why people would trade in their dollar securities yielding 14 percent for the Eagle Bonds proposed in my bill, H.R. 4401. "What did you say the yield on Eagle Bonds was?" they demanded to know. "Not more than 2½ percent," I said, "but in gold."

Mr. Galbraith, former Ambassador to France under President Reagan, and now an investment banker in New York City, in April of this year wrote to this Member from California advising that in his opinion the U.S. Government could sell at least $100 billion of 30-year bonds convertible into gold at an interest rate of not more than 2 percent.

I would suggest that this policy option is something that this Nation should pursue. Transferring $100 billion of our national debt from an annual interest expense of close to an average cost of 9 percent to 2 percent is a savings of 7 percent, at least on that $100 billion, and over time it would be appropriate to find out if we could transform the entire burden of the national debt from an interest expense of 9 percent to 2 percent. In so doing, we would reduce the cost of maintaining that national debt of close to $2 trillion by 7 percentage points, a reduction in annual interest cost of $140 billion a year.

That one step alone goes a long way toward reducing the almost $200 billion annual deficit that we taxpayers have to pay. It is time that we pursue an option that makes sense.

THE EAST-WEST DIMENSION TO THE CRISIS IN CENTRAL AMERICA

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, during his recent address to the National Assembly, Salvadoran President Duarte said:

The Soviets and Cubans were present during the recent Contadora group meeting in Costa Rica. Why were the Soviets and the Cubans in permanent communication with the Nicaraguans during a Contadora group meeting?

It is a question that we need to ask in this body as well. It is absurd to claim there is no East-West dimension to the crisis in Central America when the Soviets and Cubans are actively involved in guiding Nicaragua's actions in the Contadora peace process.

In addition to questioning Soviet and Cuban presence in Contadora, President Duarte also emphasized the crisis in Central America is marked by the efforts of the Government of Nicaragua to destabilize the rest of Central America. "That is why Nicaragua, as the determining element supporting the Salvadoran guerrillas, contributes to the destabilization of El Salvador," President Duarte said.

Nicaragua, with the active support of the Soviet Union and Cuba, is threatening the growth of democracy in Costa Rica, Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras. We must act now to counter the Soviet-Cuban presence in the region.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken on Tuesday, June 24, 1986.

JAPANESE TECHNICAL LITERATURE ACT OF 1986

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 1073) an act to amend the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 for the purpose of improving the availability of Japanese science and engineering literature in the United States, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 1073

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Japanese Technical Literature Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. Section 5 of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3704) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting immediately after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) JAPANESE TECHNICAL LITERATURE.—(1) In addition to the duties specified in subsection (c), the Secretary shall establish and, through the National Technical Information Service and such other offices within the Department of Commerce as the Secretary considers appropriate, maintain a program (including an office in Japan) which shall, on a continuing basis—

"(A) monitor Japanese technical activities and developments;

"(B) consult with businesses, professional societies, and libraries in the United States regarding their needs for information on Japanese developments in technology and engineering;

"(C) acquire and translate selected Japanese technical reports and documents that may be of value to agencies and departments of the Federal Government, and to businesses and researchers in the United States; and

"(D) coordinate with other agencies and departments of the Federal Government to identify significant gaps and avoid duplication in efforts by the Federal Government to acquire, translate, index, and disseminate Japanese technical information.

Activities undertaken pursuant to subparagraph (C) of this paragraph shall only be performed on a cost-reimbursable basis. Translations referred to in such subparagraph shall be performed only to the extent that they are not otherwise available from sources within the private sector in the United States.

"(2) Beginning in 1986, the Secretary shall prepare annual reports regarding important Japanese scientific discoveries and technical innovations in such areas as computers, semiconductors, biotechnology, and robotics and manufacturing. In preparing such reports, the Secretary shall consult with professional societies and businesses in the United States. The Secretary may, to the extent provided in advance by appropriation Acts, contract with private organizations to acquire and translate Japanese scientific and technical information relevant to the preparation of such reports.

"(3) The Secretary also shall encourage professional societies and private businesses in the United States to increase their efforts to acquire, screen, translate, and disseminate Japanese technical literature.

"(4) In addition, the Secretary shall compile, publish, and disseminate an annual directory which lists—

"(A) all programs and services in the United States that collect, abstract, translate, and distribute Japanese scientific and technical information; and

"(B) all translations of Japanese technical documents performed by agencies and departments of the Federal Government in the preceding 12 months that are available to the public.

"(5) The Secretary shall transmit to the Congress, within 1 year after the date of enactment of the Japanese Technical Literature Act of 1986, a report on the activities of the Federal Government to collect, abstract, translate, and distribute declassified Japanese scientific and technical information.".

SEC. 3. There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1987 the sum of $1,000,000 to carry out the purpose of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on this legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the objective of this bill, S. 1073, is to increase the availability of Japanese technical literature in the United States in an effort to help this country remain internationally competitive. In today's global market, we can no longer ignore what the rest of the world is doing if we expect to compete effectively.

Mr. Speaker, I want first to express my appreciation to the ranking minority member of the full committee, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN], and particularly the ranking minority member of the subcommittee that I chair and that this bill started in, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT].

This bill is the product of both Republicans and Democrats. Science is not a partisan subject in our society, and this bill represents the very real interest and effective support of Members from both sides of the aisle.

I especially also want to recognize the interest of the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNDINE] for their cooperation and support for this bill during this process.

In 1985, Japan had a $45.6 billion trade surplus, while the United States had a record $150 billion trade deficit. At least part of Japan's economic success can be attributed to its active national effort to collect, translate, and subsequently apply foreign scientific and technical information to meet its own needs. The United States does not have a similar coordinated effort on a national level. This bill is a modest attempt to provide access to Japanese technical information in order to accommodate the widest possible cross section of American business and research.

In short, the bill directs the Department of Commerce to establish and maintain a program, including an office in Japan, to monitor Japanese technical activities; translate selected Japanese technical documents; consult with United States businesses, professional societies, and libraries regarding their information needs on Japanese developments in technology and engineering; coordinate with other Federal agencies to avoid a duplication of effort in this area; and prepare an annual report describing important Japanese technical developments. The Secretary is also directed to encourage United States professional societies and private industry to acquire, translate, and disseminate Japanese technical literature. This could be done through workshops, technical assistance, and other means. In addition, an annual directory is to be compiled and disseminated by the Secretary which would list all programs and services that collect, abstract, translate, and distribute Japanese technical information in the United States.

The requirement for maintaining an office in Japan could be met by using the existing Department of Commerce International Trade Administration office in Japan and/or strengthening the present limited effort of the National Technical Information Service [NTIS]. NTIS currently has only one employee in Tokyo collecting Japanese technical reports. This could hardly be called a significant effort.

The bill authorizes the sum of $1 million to be appropriated for fiscal year 1987 to carry out the program authorized in this bill. It is the intent of the committee, that insofar as is possible, the money is to be reprogrammed from Department of Commerce funds. This is an extremely modest sum in light of the effort being expended by Japan and other nations in their foreign information-gathering efforts.

With this legislation we do not intend to duplicate the private sector or anyone else but rather we intend to build on existing Federal efforts and encourage the private sector to acquire and make Japanese technical literature available to a broader segment of our industries and research institutions.

Mr. Speaker, S. 1073 has the bipartisan support of our committee members. I urge all Members to support this much-needed legislation.

□ 1210

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us addresses one of the central concerns of this Congress—how to keep our Nation competitive in the international marketplace.

But unlike most bills to improve our balance of trade, this one is simple and inexpensive. The $1 million authorized in this bill is a modest sum to allocate to such an important undertaking, and in the committee report, we explicitly request, to the extent possible, that the funds be reprogrammed from within the Department of Commerce.

This legislation gives us a basic competitive tool we have been neglecting—access to Japanese technical literature.

Anyone who doubts the importance of this tool need only examine the attention lavished on it by the Japanese. They make great efforts to acquire our scientific and technical information—not only information available in journals, but also that which can be gleaned by attending trade fairs, conferences, and other gatherings.

By contrast, we barely have access to published materials. A 1981 survey found that more than 75 percent of Japan's scientific and technical journals were unavailable in Western languages.

Yet there is a demand for this information. Requests were so numerous for one Japanese article on ceramics translated by our National Technical Information Service that the Agency turned a profit on its sales.

But current efforts to acquire Japanese information are inadequate.

We need a specific program dedicated to tracking what technical information is available, indexing it, and, when possible, translating it.

It is essential, though, that we begin to devote the kind of attention to acquiring Japanese information that they devote to acquiring ours.

We have to obtain all we can in the marketplace of ideas if we are to win today in the economic marketplace.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA], who has pursued this legislation with such interest.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I am personally very gratified that today we are considering the Japanese Technical Literature Act. This bill is the culmination of the efforts of many individuals. I would especially like to thank my colleagues, Mr. WALGREN and Mr. BOEHLERT for their tireless efforts on behalf of this legislation; it is only with their support and their wisdom that this important bill is before us today. Moreover, we owe a great debt to the junior Senators from both West Virginia and Montana for originally conceptualizing many aspects of this legislation and for their success in passing a companion bill in the other body.

The United States no longer commands an unchallenged lead in scientific and technical accomplishments. Other nations have emulated us by devoting resources and energies in prodigious amounts to the development of state-of-the-art products and processes. As a result, competition in the world marketplace is keener, and the United States must accustom itself to greater challengers from our trading partners.

Underlying the commercial success achieved by other nations is a solid body of scientific and technical material that is readily available, provided that it can be translated and disseminated in this country.

Without question, some of the finest scientific and commercial research is presently being done in Japan and, yet, we have failed to train enough translators with proficiency in both the Japanese language and in handling technical information. As a result, we have only scant awareness of the range of research being carried out in Japan, and we are in many instances oblivious to the progress made by first rate researchers and innovators.

The notion that the United States is alone in producing the next generation of commercial products and scientific breakthroughs is an antiquated one. Failure to recognize the strides made by other nations, and, failure to assimilate the technological information they produce will be to our own long-term detriment.

It is time for us to learn from countries such as Japan which set about years ago to engage in systematic collection of scientific and technical data and to put such information to good use. Similarly, we should be screening, abstracting, translating and distributing Japanese technical literature within our own country.

Therefore, it is the purpose of the legislation before us today, to improve awareness by Americans of the technological advances in Japan and to make such information more accessible. It is our intention that we no longer allow the language barrier to impede the flow of information from Japan to the United States. Greater access to this material will help us not only to understand our competition, but also to help us set new directions for our own commercial and academic enterprises.

This legislation builds on existing programs, and is designed to enhance—not duplicate—the ongoing efforts of private industry to make translated material available. The Department of Commerce will be required to conduct a range of activities. Their mandate would be twofold. They would be required to monitor Japanese scientific and technical developments and systematically report on such accomplishments. Moreover, on a cost-reimbursable basis, they would make available translated material that will reach government, academia, libraries, and private researchers.

This is a modest beginning. In fact, we should be seeking additional mechanisms for understanding our counterparts who are also striving for commercial and scientific success. The Japanese, by their own example, have demonstrated the importance of learning from others. To do so, however, requires greater proficiency in the Japanese language, and it requires a willingness to learn from others. We hope this legislation will serve as a catalyst in this regard.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate my esteemed colleagues who have lent their support for this bill and whose leadership and counsel were essential in crafting this bill. I would also thank my colleague, Mr. LUJAN, the ranking minority member of the Science and Technology Committee, for his abiding interest in legislation which makes that necessary link between science and technology and international competitiveness.

Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join today in expressing my strong support for S. 1073, the Japanese Technical Literature Act of 1986. This proposal is virtually identical to the proposal introduced by Senators BAUCUS and ROCKEFELLER and adopted by the Senate late last year. It is intended to increase the efforts of the U.S. Government to make Japanese technical literature available to U.S. companies and researchers.

The position of the United States as world leader in the areas of technology, innovation, engineering, and manufacturing is being severely tested in the international marketplace. To meet the challenge head on, the United States must not only recognize the full value of our own technology but we must also become aware of the research and technology being developed by our major competitors. While the United States has built the strongest scientific base in the world, many of our competitors have increased their commitment to basic research, at the same time that they continue to translate American research into competitive products.

This is one of many areas in which the Japanese have increasingly excelled. Not only have the Japanese worked diligently and successfully to acquire American technology, they are now spending, per capita, nearly as much as the United States on research and development. In particular, Japan has increased its commitment to advanced research in the areas of robotics, biotechnology, computer technology, and electronics, areas in which the United States has a great stake.

Industry and business in this country are slowly becoming aware that they must stay abreast of new Japanese innovations if they are to compete. Efforts to acquire, translate, and use Japanese scientific and technical information are increasing in the private sector. However, we believe the Federal Government must play a role in complementing these efforts and in helping overcome barriers of access, language, and cost that prevent American companies from acquiring valuable Japanese technical information.

This legislation proposes a specific program within the Department of Commerce to encourage the acquisition and utilization of Japanese technical information. The legislation builds on existing programs, making it clear that it is intended to complement ongoing or future private sector initiatives.

Specifically, the legislation would authorize $1 million to carry out four major tasks. The Department of Commerce would be required to issue an annual report on Japanese technological trends, especially trends in computers, semiconductors, biotechnology, and robotics. Efforts in Japan to monitor scientific and technical developments would be increased and selected Japanese scientific and technical documents for government, businesses, and academia, would be translated on a cost-reimbursable basis, and only to the extent that those documents are not readily available from private sector sources. The Department would be charged with coordinating existing Federal Government translation programs, including publishing an annual index of existing Federal translations and reporting on overall Federal efforts to translate and disseminate Japanese scientific and technical information.

Japanese businesses and scientists have access to our best scientific and technical information and have utilized this information to the detriment of our industrial competitiveness. It is time for the United States to have the same opportunities to learn from them. The legislation being considered today would help improve the ability of our business and industry to acquire important Japanese technical information and is a step toward improving our competitiveness. This is a worthwhile and modest investment by the Federal Government in our Nation's future and I hope it will be adopted by the House of Representatives today.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 1073, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEDERAL FIRE PREVENTION AND CONTROL ACT AUTHORIZATION, FISCAL YEAR 1987

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4252) to authorize appropriations for activities under the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4252

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 17(f) of the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974 (15 U.S.C. 2216(f)) is amended—

(1) by striking "is" and inserting in lieu thereof "are"; and

(2) by inserting immediately before the period the following: "and $18,300,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4252, the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALGREN, Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the bill, H.R. 4252, authorizes the activities of the U.S. Fire Administration, which is the Federal focal point for fire issues. The Fire Administration monitors trends in fire losses nationwide and sponsors programs to improve prevention and control methods.

The second activity is the National Fire Academy, which provides executive and leadership training at levels above that available from State fire academies, and also offers specialized training such as arson investigation and emergency handling of hazardous materials.

These programs were initiated in response to the 1973 report "America Burning" that highlighted this country's shocking rates of fire death and economic losses, which are among the world's highest. The programs have worked, in that our fire losses are sharply down from what they were in 1974. But we still have a long way to go, because we still have among the world's highest loss rates.

This year the administration has proposed major cuts in this area:

Zero funding for the Fire Administration;

Cutting the firefighters' stipends for travel to the Fire Academy; and Eliminating the planned Western regional version of the Academy.

Mr. Speaker, our hearings confirmed what we suspected about these proposals: They just don't make any sense. Witness after witness told us that the Federal fire programs are working and they are necessary. They will not be taken over by State and local governments. Even the Director of FEMA, who had to cut the programs to meet his budget goals, was unqualified in his praise of their quality and effectiveness.

In considering the fire authorization, we were struck by the irony that, from a cost-effective view, we should spend more, rather than less on fire. Statistics show that, in real dollars, losses due to fire have declined in each of the last 4 years. During that period, over 1.6 billion dollars' worth of America which would have otherwise burned up, did not burn. One effect of this change was that at least $300 million more in taxes was collected by the Federal Government, while only about $100 million of Federal money was spent on fire programs during those years. Still more important, about 2,000 fewer people died in fires during those 4 years than in the previous 4. If the fire programs were a private sector operation, we would have to rate them an unqualified success—they made money while providing an essential service.

Therefore, I proposed, along with Mr. BOEHLERT, the distinguished ranking minority member of the subcommittee, to restore almost all the cuts in this area proposed by the administration. I want to say here that Mr. BOEHLERT's leadership and cooperation have been extremely helpful in establishing the need for the funding level we included in this bill. It has been a pleasure working with him on the fire programs.

What we propose in this bill will fund the U.S. Fire Administration and National Fire Academy at $18.3 million in fiscal year 1987. It should be clear that this is less than the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year because we agreed with the other body, to support FEMA's proposal to hold in abeyance plans for a Western regional version of the National Emergency Training Center, which saves about $1.3 million. Our proposals received very strong support from our colleagues on the Science Committee.

In truth, the people of the United States, and the firefighters who protect them, deserve much more. We have cut the Federal fire programs as much as we dare. I hope the entire House will also support this authorization bill, to fund programs which are so important to all of us.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today, H.R. 4252, reauthorizes funds within the Federal Emergency Management Agency [FEMA] for the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974.

Since 1973, following the release of "America Burning," a comprehensive study of U.S. fire problems, Congress has been particularly concerned that there be a Federal focus on efforts to reduce and prevent loss due to fire. Congress, therefore, passed the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act in 1974, which established the U.S. Fire Administration and the National Fire Academy. The legislation also set up a national data center, a function which has been incorporated into USFA. Finally, the Center for Fire Research at the National Bureau of Standards was authorized funds for this effort are authorized in a separate bill to authorize funds for the National Bureau of Standards.

For fiscal year 1987, the administration requested $9.041 million. This request would eliminate the U.S. Fire Administration, delete funding for NETC-West, charge dormitory fees for the National Fire Academy [NFA] and eliminate the travel stipend given to those attending NFA classes.

The committee reinstated funds for all functions but the NETC-West. I did offer an amendment in committee to support the administration position on requiring those attending classes at the NFA to pay their transportation, but that was defeated. I believe this issue should be pursued further when the fiscal year 1988 authorization bill is acted upon. Nevertheless, the bill does provide adequate funding, for U.S. Fire Administration and National Fire Academy and therefore I support the committee recommendations.

In conclusion, I will point out that H.R. 4252 authorizes a total of $18.3 million, a level of approximately $4 million below the fiscal year 1986 appropriation level. I urge Members to support H.R. 4252.

"(B) with prior notice from the governmental entity to the subscriber or customer if the governmental entity—

"(i) uses an administrative subpoena authorized by a Federal or State statute or a Federal or State grand jury subpoena; or

"(ii) obtains a court order for such disclosure under subsection (d) of this section; except that delayed notice may be given pursuant to section 2705 of this title.

"(2) Paragraph (1) is applicable with respect to any electronic communication that is held or maintained on that service—

"(A) on behalf of, and received by means of electronic transmission from (or created by means of computer processing of communications received by means of electronic transmission from), a subscriber or customer of such remote computing service; and

"(B) solely for the purpose of providing storage or computer processing services to such subscriber or customer, if the provider is not authorized to access the contents of any such communications for purposes of providing any services other than storage or computer processing.

"(c) RECORDS CONCERNING ELECTRONIC COMMUNICATIONS SERVICE OR REMOTE COMPUTING SERVICE.—A governmental entity may require a provider of electronic communications service or remote computing service to disclose a record or other information pertaining to a subscriber to or customer of such service (not including the contents of communications covered by subsection (a) or (b) of this section) without required notice to the subscriber or customer if the governmental entity—

"(1) uses an administrative subpoena authorized by a Federal or State statute, or a Federal or State grand jury subpoena;

"(2) obtains a warrant issued under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure or equivalent State warrant; or

"(3) obtains a court order for such disclosure under subsection (d) of this section.

"(d) REQUIREMENTS FOR COURT ORDER.—A court order for disclosure under subsection (b) or (c) of this section shall issue only if the governmental entity shows that there is reason to believe the contents of a wire or electronic communication, or the records or other information sought, are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry. In the case of a State governmental authority, such a court order shall not issue if prohibited by the law of such State.

"§ 2704. Backup preservation

"(a) BACKUP PRESERVATION.—(1) A governmental entity acting under section 2703(b)(2) may include in its subpoena or court order a requirement that the service provider to whom the request is directed create a backup copy of the contents of the electronic communications sought in order to preserve those communications. Without notifying the subscriber or customer of such subpoena or court order, such service provider shall create such backup copy as soon as practicable consistent with its regular business practices and shall confirm to the governmental entity that such backup copy has been made. Such backup copy shall be created within two business days after receipt by the service provider of the subpoena or court order.

"(2) Notice to the subscriber or customer shall be made by the governmental entity within three days after receipt of such confirmation, unless such notice is delayed pursuant to section 2705(a).

"(3) The service provider shall not destroy such backup copy until the later of—

"(A) the delivery of the information; or

"(B) the resolution of any proceedings (including appeals of any proceeding) concerning the government's subpoena or court order.

"(4) The service provider shall release such backup copy to the requesting governmental entity no sooner than 14 days after the governmental entity's notice to the subscriber or customer if such service provider—

"(A) has not received notice from the subscriber or customer that the subscriber or customer has challenged the governmental entity's request; and

"(B) has not initiated proceedings to challenge the request of the governmental entity.

"(5) A governmental entity may seek to require the creation of a backup copy under subsection (a)(1) of this section if in its sole discretion such entity determines that there is reason to believe that notification under section 2703 of this title of the existence of the subpoena or court order may result in destruction of or tampering with evidence. This determination is not subject to challenge by the subscriber or customer or service provider.

"(b) CUSTOMER CHALLENGES.—(1) Within 14 days after notice by the governmental entity to the subscriber or customer under subsection (a)(2) of this section, such subscriber or customer may file a motion to quash such subpoena or vacate such court order, with copies served upon the governmental entity and with written notice of such challenge to the service provider. A motion to vacate a court order shall be filed in the court which issued such order. A motion to quash a subpoena shall be filed in the appropriate United States district court or State court. Such motion or application shall contain an affidavit or sworn statement—

"(A) stating that the applicant is a customer or subscriber to the service from which the contents of electronic communications maintained for him have been sought; and

"(B) stating the applicant's reasons for believing that the records sought are not relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry or that there has not been substantial compliance with the provisions of this chapter in some other respect.

"(2) Service shall be made under this section upon a governmental entity by delivering or mailing by registered or certified mail a copy of the papers to the person, office, or department specified in the notice which the customer has received pursuant to this chapter. For the purposes of this section, the term 'delivery' has the meaning given that term in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(3) If the court finds that the customer has complied with paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection, the court shall order the governmental entity to file a sworn response, which may be filed in camera if the governmental entity includes in its response the reasons which make in camera review appropriate. If the court is unable to determine the motion or application on the basis of the parties' initial allegations and response, the court may conduct such additional proceedings as it deems appropriate. All such proceedings shall be completed and the motion or application decided as soon as practicable after the filing of the governmental entity's response.

"(4) If the court finds that the applicant is not the subscriber or customer for whom the communications sought by the governmental entity are maintained, or that there is a reason to believe that the law enforcement inquiry is legitimate and that the communications sought are relevant to that inquiry, it shall deny the motion or application and order such process enforced. If the court finds that the applicant is the subscriber or customer for whom the communications sought by the governmental entity are maintained, and that there is not a reason to believe that the communications sought are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry, or that there has not been substantial compliance with the provisions of this chapter, it shall order the process quashed.

"(5) A court order denying a motion or application under this section shall not be deemed a final order and no interlocutory appeal may be taken therefrom by the customer.

"§ 2705. Delayed notice

"(a) DELAY OF NOTIFICATION.—(1) A governmental entity acting under section 2703(b) of this title may—

"(A) where a court order is sought, include in the application a request, which the court shall grant, for an order delaying the notification required under section 2703(b) of this title for a period not to exceed 90 days; if the court determines that there is reason to believe that notification of the existence of the court order may have an adverse result described in paragraph (2) of this subsection; or

"(B) where an administrative subpoena authorized by a Federal or State statute or a Federal or State grand jury subpoena is obtained, delay the notification required under section 2703(b) of this title for a period not to exceed 90 days upon the execution of a written certification of a supervisory official that there is reason to believe that notification of the existence of the subpoena may have an adverse result described in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) An adverse result for the purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection is—

"(A) endangering the life or physical safety of an individual;

"(B) flight from prosecution;

"(C) destruction of or tampering with evidence;

"(D) intimidation of potential witnesses; or

"(E) otherwise seriously jeopardizing an investigation or unduly delaying a trial.

"(3) The governmental entity shall maintain a true copy of certification under paragraph (1)(B).

"(4) Extensions of the delay of notification provided in section 2703 of up to 90 days each may be granted by the court upon application, or by certification by a governmental entity, but only in accordance with subsection (b) or (c) of this section.

"(5) Upon expiration of the period of delay of notification under paragraph (1) or (4) of this subsection, the governmental entity shall serve upon, or deliver by registered or first class mail to, the customer or subscriber a copy of the process or request together with notice that—

"(A) states with reasonable specificity the nature of the law enforcement inquiry; and

"(B) informs such customer or subscriber—

"(i) that information maintained for such customer or subscriber by the service provider named in such process or request was supplied to or requested by that governmental authority and the date on which the supplying or request took place;

"(ii) that notification of such customer or subscriber was delayed;

"(iii) what governmental entity or court made the certification or determination pursuant to which that delay was made; and

"(iv) which provision of this chapter allowed such delay.

"(6) As used in this subsection, the term 'supervisory official' means the investigative agent in charge or assistant investigative agent in charge or an equivalent of an investigating agency's headquarters or regional office, or the chief prosecuting attorney or the first assistant prosecuting attorney or an equivalent of a prosecuting attorney's headquarters or regional office.

"(b) PRECLUSION OF NOTICE TO SUBJECT OF GOVERNMENTAL ACCESS.—A governmental entity acting under section 2703, when it is not required to notify the subscriber or customer under section 2703(b)(1), or to the extent that it may delay such notice pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, may apply to a court for an order commanding a provider of electronic communications service or remote computing service to whom a warrant, subpoena, or court order is directed, for such period as the court deems appropriate, not to notify any other person of the existence of the warrant, subpoena, or court order. The court shall enter such an order if it determines that there is reason to believe that notification of the existence of the warrant, subpoena, or court order will result in—

"(1) endangering the life or physical safety of an individual;

"(2) flight from prosecution;

"(3) destruction of or tampering with evidence;

"(4) intimidation of potential witnesses; or

"(5) otherwise seriously jeopardizing an investigation or unduly delaying a trial.

"§ 2706. Cost reimbursement

"(a) PAYMENT.—Except as otherwise provided in subsection (c), a governmental entity obtaining the contents of communications, records, or other information under section 2702, 2703, or 2704 of this title shall pay to the person or entity assembling or providing such information a fee for reimbursement for such costs as are reasonably necessary and which have been directly incurred in searching for, assembling, reproducing, or otherwise providing such information. Such reimbursable costs shall include any costs due to necessary disruption of normal operations of any electronic communication service or remote computing service in which such information may be stored.

"(b) AMOUNT.—The amount of the fee provided by subsection (a) shall be as mutually agreed by the governmental entity and the person or entity providing the information, or, in the absence of agreement, shall be as determined by the court which issued the order for production of such information (or the court before which a criminal prosecution relating to such information would be brought, if no court order was issued for production of the information).

"(c) The requirement of subsection (a) of this section does not apply with respect to records or other information maintained by a communications common carrier that relate to telephone toll records and telephone listings obtained under section 2703 of this title. The court may, however, order a payment as described in subsection (a) if the court determines the information required is unusually voluminous in nature or otherwise caused an undue burden on the provider.

"§ 2707. Civil action

"(a) CAUSE OF ACTION.—Any provider of electronic communication service, subscriber, or customer aggrieved by any violation of this chapter in which the conduct constituting the violation is engaged in with a knowing or intentional state of mind may, in a civil action, recover from the person or entity which engaged in that violation such relief as may be appropriate.

"(b) RELIEF.—In a civil action under this section, appropriate relief includes—

"(1) such preliminary and other equitable or declaratory relief as may be appropriate;

"(2) damages under subsection (c); and

"(3) a reasonable attorney's fee and other litigation costs reasonably incurred.

"(c) DAMAGES.—The court may assess as damages in a civil action under this section the sum of the actual damages suffered by the plaintiff and any profits made by the violator as a result of the violation, but in no case shall a person entitled to recover receive less than the sum of $1,000.

"(d) DEFENSE.—A good faith reliance on—

"(1) a court warrant or order, a grand jury subpoena, a legislative authorization, or a statutory authorization;

"(2) a request of an investigative or law enforcement officer under section 2518(7) of this title; or

"(3) a good faith determination that section 2511(3) of this title permitted the conduct complained of;

is a complete defense to any civil or criminal action brought under this chapter or any other law.

"(e) LIMITATION.—A civil action under this section may not be commenced later than two years after the date upon which the claimant first discovered or had a reasonable opportunity to discover the violation.

"§ 2708. Exclusivity of remedies

"The remedies and sanctions described in this chapter are the only judicial remedies and sanctions for nonconstitutional violations of this chapter.

"§ 2709. Counterintelligence access to telephone toll and transactional records

"(a) DUTY TO PROVIDE.—A Communications common carrier or an electronic communication service provider shall comply with a request made for telephone subscriber information and toll billing records information, or electronic communication transactional records made by the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation under subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) REQUIRED CERTIFICATION.—The Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (or an individual within the Federal Bureau of Investigation designated for this purpose by the Director) may request any such information and records if the Director (or the Director's designee) certifies in writing to the carrier or provider to which the request is made that—

"(1) the information sought is relevant to an authorized foreign counterintelligence investigation; and

"(2) there are specific and articulable facts giving reason to believe that the person or entity to whom the information sought pertains is a foreign power or an agent of a foreign power as defined in section 101 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. 1801).

"(c) PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN DISCLOSURE.—No communications common carrier or service provider, or officer, employee, or agent thereof, shall disclose to any person that the Federal Bureau of Investigation has sought or obtained access to information or records under this section.

"(d) DISSEMINATION BY BUREAU.—The Federal Bureau of Investigation may disseminate information and records obtained under this section only as provided in guidelines approved by the Attorney General for foreign intelligence collection and foreign counterintelligence investigations conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and, with respect to dissemination to an agency of the United States, only if such information is clearly relevant to the authorized responsibilities of such agency.

"(e) REQUIREMENT THAT CERTAIN CONGRESSIONAL BODIES BE INFORMED.—On a semiannual basis the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation shall fully inform the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate concerning all requests made under subsection (b) of this section.

"§ 2710. Definitions for chapter

"As used in this chapter—

"(1) the terms defined in section 2510 of this title have, respectively, the definitions given such terms in that section; and

"(2) the term 'remote computing service' means the provision to the public of computer storage or processing services by means of an electronic communications system.".

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present H.R. 4952, the Electronic Communications Privacy Act of 1986, an essential piece of legislation which enjoys broad bipartisan support both inside and outside the Congress. I am proud that this measure is the product of the House Judiciary Subcommittee which I chair, the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice, and is cosponsored by the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, my good friend and colleague from California, Congressman CARLOS J. MOORHEAD, and myself. The bill was recently reported by the Committee on the Judiciary by a recorded vote of 34 to 0.

The Electronic Communications Privacy Act updates existing Federal wiretapping law to take into account new forms of electronic communications such as electronic mail, cellular telephones, and data transmission by providing such communications with protection against improper interception. The bill also benefits law enforcement by creating clearer procedures for the use of investigative techniques which involve the interception of communications.

This legislation, which grew out of extensive hearings and an Office of Technology Assessment study, enjoys the strong support of the business community, consumer groups, civil liberties organizations and the administration. In commenting on the bill the Department of Justice has said that "enactment of this bill would represent a major accomplishment for the 99th Congress." Business organizations supporting the bill include the National Association of Manufacturers, the National Association of Broadcasters, numerous telephone companies and trade associations involved in electronic mail, videotex, cellular telephones, paging services, and other telecommunications services.

This measure is relatively uncontroversial in that no amendments were offered in the committee. The Congressional Budget Office has indicated that it expects no significant costs from the bill. Finally, it should be noted that pending in the Senate is an identical measure sponsored by the chairman and ranking minority member of the relevant Senate subcommittee. Therefore, I hope that H.R. 4952 can be acted upon favorably this afternoon so that we can see prompt action in the other body.

Let me take a few moments to highlight what I believe to be the fundamental principles which guide this legislation.

The first principle is that legislation which protects electronic communications from interceptions by either private parties or the Government should be comprehensive, and not limited to particular types or techniques of communicating. For example, it is technically impossible to effectively differentiate between wire line phone calls and those which are carried by wire, microwave, satellite, and radio. Any attempt to write a law which tries to protect only those technologies which exist in the marketplace today; that is, cellular phones and electronic mail is destined to be outmoded within a few years.

The second principle which should be followed in this area is a recognition that what is being protected is the sanctity and privacy of the communication. We should not attempt to discriminate for or against certain methods of communication, unless there is a compelling cast that all parties to the communication want the message accessible to the public.

The third principle we should keep in mind is that the nature of modern recordkeeping requires that some level of privacy protection be extended to records about us which are stored outside the home. When the Founders added the fourth amendment's protection against unreasonable searches and seizures to the Constitution, they did so to protect citizens' papers and effects. In those days an individual's private writings and records were kept within the home. That situation has changed drastically today. Many Americans are now using computer services, which store their bank records, credit card data, electronic mail and other personal data. If we fail to afford protection against governmental snooping in these files, our right of privacy will evaporate. Moreover, if we fail to protect the records of third-party providers, there will be a tremendous disincentive created against using these services. Thus, the adverse business consequences of inadequate protection for third-party records with respect to communications has led several industry groups to support the privacy provisions of the bill.

Today Congress stands at a crossroads with respect to electronic communications privacy. We may provide the forum to balance the privacy rights of citizens with the legitimate law enforcement needs of the Government; or we abdicate that role to ad hoc decisions made by the courts and the executive branch. I believe this bill is a significant step in that direction, and I urge my colleagues in the House to support this landmark legislation.

The unusual nature of the coalition of business, Government and civil liberties groups who support this legislation is worthy of note. As my colleagues know the primary sponsors of this legislation in the House and the other body are the chairman and ranking minority member of the relevant subcommittees: Representative CARLOS MOORHEAD, Senator PATRICK LEAHY, the senior Senator from Maryland, Senator CHARLES MCC. MATHIAS and myself. It has been through the commitment and leadership of this group that this legislation has come as far as it has.

In addition, I would like to pay homage to a number of private individuals and organizations who have been instrumental in developing this legislation: I wish to thank: David Burnham, formerly of the New York Times; John Shattuck, vice president, Harvard University; Pris Regan, Office of Technology Assessment; Ron Plesser, former general counsel, U.S. Privacy Protection Study Commission; Jerry Berman of the American Civil Liberties Union; H.W. Willian Caming, Esq.; Phil Walker of GTE; Michael Cavanaugh of the Electronic Mail Association; Martina Bradford of AT&T; Barbara Phillips of Telocator; Bob Maher of Cellular Telephone Industry Association; Michael Nugent of EDS; David Johnson and Mitchell Lazarus of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering; Paul Myer of Capital Cities/ABC, Inc.; Terry Mahoney of the National Broadcasting Corp.; Steve Jacobs and Steve Bookshester of the National Association of Broadcasters; Joseph DeFranco and John Sturm of CBS; Steve Klitzman of the Federal Communications Commission; Trish Witacker of Bell Communications; Brent Regan of Southwestern Bell; Jim Golden of Southwestern Bell; Hugh Brady of Bell South; Doug McCollum of C&P Telephone Co.; Iris Schneider of NYNEX: Bruce Eggers of Ameritech; Martin McCue of U.S. Telephone Association; Steve Pomerantz of Pacific Telesis; David Peyton of the Information Industry Association; Larry Fineran of the National Association of Manufacturers; Mary Beth Griswold of GTE; Robert Sweezey of MCI; Ted Heydinger of CBEMA; Jay Kitchen of NABER; Perry Williams of American Radio Relay League; Ed Merliss and Doug Watts of NCTA; Howard Pastor of Timmons & Co.; Phillip Hochberg, Esq; Charles Meehan, Esq.; Magistrate James Carr; Prof. Clifford Fishman; Prof. Michael Goldsmith; Prof. Herman Schwartz; Prof. George Trubow; Rick Weingarten and Fred Wood of OTA; Peggy Miller of Trintex; Richard Fazzone and David Sherman of General Electric; Leslie Seeman of the Source; Mary Jane Saunders and Olga Grkavac of ADAPSO; Kay Riddle of Chase Manhattan Bank; Bill Warner of Control Data; and David Rubashkin of U.S. West.

Special mention should also be made of the personnel of the Department of Justice who assisted us on this bill, especially Cary Copeland, Roger Pauley, Frederick Hess, Richard Cinquegrana, Mark Evans, Dennis Miller, Harry Myers, R. Cubbage, Tom O'Malley, James I.K. Knapp, and Stephen Trott.

Finally, it would be appropriate to thank staff members who worked on this bill: Deborah Leavy, David Beier, Joe Wolfe, Marilyn Pedretti, and Sheila Groves. Staff from other subcommittees and committees such as Bernard Raimo, Michael O'Neill, Ed O'Connell, and Hayden Gregory deserve mention, as do Senate staff, John Podesta and Steve Metalitz. Last but not least credit for intelligent and careful legislative drafting must go to Doug Bellis of the Office of Legislative Counsel.

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, before we consider H.R. 4952, the Electronic Communications Privacy Act of 1986, I want to first commend the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Court, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice for their tenacious support of this bill. Both the chairman, Mr. KASTENMEIER, and the ranking minority member, Mr. MOORHEAD, worked long and hard to pursue the consensus of support that ultimately emerged in both the subcommittee and the full committee.

In addition, it should be noted that the staffs of both Members, Deborah Leavy and David Beier for Mr. KASTENMEIER, and Mr. Joe Wolfe for Mr. MOORHEAD, did yeoman work in keeping the sometimes fragile coalition together. This bill reflects the kind of bipartisan support both at the Member and the staff levels that too often is given only lipservice.

This bill provides a much-needed updating of the Federal wiretapping law by extending the range of protected communications to include cellular communications, electronic mail and data transmission.

Additionally, it establishes clear and much-needed procedures for law enforcement personnel to follow when they are engaged in the interception of otherwise protected communications.

As the chairman stated, this bill passed the full committee 34 to 0 without any amendment and is supported by the business community, consumer groups, civil liberties organizations, and the administration.

The Senate Committee on the Judiciary is presently considering an identical measure which has the same type of bipartisan support which this bill received in the House. In conclusion, I want to reiterate my thanks and congratulations to Mr. KASTENMEIER and Mr. MOORHEAD for their work on this important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice, and an original cosponsor of H.R. 4952, I urge my colleagues to support this valuable and much-needed piece of legislation.

Before yielding back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker, I wish to engage the chairman of the subcommittee in a short colloquy.

Mr. Chairman, what relationship does this legislation have to the speech and debate clause, article I, section 6, especially with respect to access to records?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWINDALL. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Under provisions of this act, the House will receive notice of any requested access to records. Resolution of the propriety of any such request will therefore be preserved.

Having stated that, if the gentleman would yield further, I wish to congratulate and thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SWINDALL] for his cogent comments and arguments and discussion in subcommittee on this bill. I do remember that. It was a major contribution.

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate my strong support for H.R. 4952, the Electronic Communications Privacy Act of 1986 and commend the chairman of the Courts Subcommittee, Mr. KASTENMEIER, for his efforts on this legislation. We are here in large part today because of the initiative he took in the 98th Congress when he introduced H.R. 6343, a forerunner of H.R. 4952. Needless to say, we have come a long way since then.

When the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice began its series of hearings on this issue, it did so with the recognition that since 1968, when Congress last addressed the issue of privacy of communications in a comprehensive fashion, the technologies of communications and interception have changed significantly. During the hearings it was well documented by the various witnesses that protection for the new modes of electronic communications such as electronic mail, cellular telephones, and satellite transmissions was either ambiguous or did not exist.

A recent report prepared by the Office of Technology Assessment entitled "Electronic Surveillance and Civil Liberties," examined the new electronic technologies and concluded that:

The contents of phone conversations that are transmitted in digital form or calls made on cellular or cordless phones are not clearly protected by existing statutes.

Data communications between computers and digital transmission to video and graphic images are not protected by existing statutes.

There are several stages at which the contents of electronic mail messages could be intercepted: First, at the terminal or in the electronic files of the sender; second, while being communicated; third, in the electronic mailbox of the receiver; fourth, when printed into hardcopy; and fifth, when retained in the files of the electronic mail company or provider for administrative purposes. Existing law offers little or no protection at most of these stages.

While there was a consensus among the witnesses on the need to update existing law with respect to the new methods of electronic communications, there were questions as to how that could best be accomplished. This past March, when the Department of Justice testified before the Courts Subcommittee, they took the position that while they supported many of the objectives of the legislation, they had severe law enforcement concerns about several of its provisions. After that hearing, the Department undertook a lengthy series of negotiations with representatives of the affected industries, as well as with the Courts Subcommittee. The results of those negotiations is H.R. 4952, a landmark piece of legislation that will provide needed protection for the new electronic communications technologies in a manner that is consistent with the important needs of law enforcement.

In short, H.R. 4952 provides clear rules governing the interception of private communications and thereby maintains the integrity of our communications systems. Likewise, the legislation establishes clear rules for Government access to new forms of electronic communications as well as the transactional records regarding such communications. Finally, the legislation removes cumbersome procedures from current law that will facilitate the interests of Federal law enforcement officials. The legislation is strongly supported by the Department of Justice and the satellite common carriers (AT&T, GTE, RCA, and Western Union; National Association of Broadcasters [NAB]; NCTA; the three TV networks; the cellular telephone industry; and private microwave operators, railroads, General Motors, GE, utilities, et cetera; as well as the National Association of Manufacturers [NAM]; the Chamber of Commerce; the ACLU; and others. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4952 is important legislation with strong bipartisan support; accordingly I urge my colleagues' support for the legislation.

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4952, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

I was testifying at that time before the Senate Special Committee on Aging on the problem of mandatory retirement. Had I been present for the vote approving the Journal of June 19, 1986, I would have voted "aye."

SENATE—Monday, June 23, 1986

The Senate met at 12 noon and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

The prayer this morning is Psalm 67.

God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; Selah. That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise thee. O God; let all the people praise thee. O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Selah. Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.—Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able and distinguished majority leader, Senator DOLE, is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer, Senator THURMOND.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate for my colleagues what we hope to do today. Under the standing order, the two leaders have 10 minutes each; then we have special orders in favor of Senators HATFIELD, PROXMIRE, GORE, and MELCHER, for not to exceed 5 minutes each; then routine morning business until 1 o'clock.

At 1 o'clock, we will go back on H.R. 3838, the tax reform bill. There are no rollcall votes expected to occur today. We are in the process, I believe on both sides, or will be on both sides, of contacting our colleagues and asking, particularly where they can work out the amendments, if they could come to the floor and do that today, because, as the distinguished minority leader pointed out, there is a real possibility that what could occur tomorrow, if everyone waits until Tuesday and 4 p.m. arrives and we have Senators who have four or five amendments that they wish to have disposed of, final passage could be delayed 2 or 3 hours.

I know the chairman, Senator PACKWOOD, indicates that he has a 6:30 airplane that he must catch. So, hopefully, we can work it out so that we will have adequate time for those who asked for time to speak before the final vote to have their time, including some time for the leaders and the managers, and that we can vote right at 4 o'clock tomorrow.

ORDER VITIATING SPECIAL ORDER FOR SENATOR HATFIELD

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am advised that the special order in favor of Senator HATFIELD will not be needed. I ask unanimous consent that that order be vitiated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF DANIEL A. MANION, U.S. COURT OF APPEALS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last week President Reagan called to ask my help in scheduling floor action on the nomination of Danile A. Manion to become a judge of the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. I assured the President that I would try to bring up the nomination before the start of the 4th of July recess for Congress. We hope to do that by an agreement, working with Members on both sides to see if that can be done.

The President followed up that conversation with a letter on June 20. In that letter, the President stated unequivocally that he would "fight for the nomination of Dan Manion."

The President also said:

This is not an issue of whether or not a President of the United States has the right to choose Federal judges who share his judicial philosophy, so long as they are qualified by reason of character and confidence. Presidents of both parties have asserted that prerogative; and I will not surrender it.

I agree with President Reagan and ask unanimous consent that the complete text of the President's letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, DC, June 20, 1986.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR BOB: During the campaigns of 1980 and 1984, I made clear to the American people the kind of men and women I would select to fill vacancies on the Federal bench, including the United States Supreme Court.

I promised they would be men and women of demonstrable character and capacity, of practical experience and proven ability in the law. I would nominate, I said, judges and justices who shared my deeply held conviction that the function of America's courts, including the highest court, is not to make laws for the American people, but to interpret the law. Judges in a democratic society should not use their appointed offices to impose their social or political views upon society—in our system of government this is the province of elected officials. This was a view stated again and again in those campaigns.

I believe I have kept faith with that commitment. And these thoughts were very much in mind when I selected Justice Rehnquist to succeed the retiring Chief Justice, and Judge Antonin Scalia to fill the vacancy thus created. Two nominees who better exemplify the qualities I pledged to seek in judicial appointments would be difficult to find.

Which brings me to the point of this letter. I am writing with a sense of profound concern about what is happening with the confirmation of Daniel A. Manion, whom I recently nominated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Dan Manion is a capable attorney, with a high reputation for integrity and substantial litigation experience. Colleagues he has faced in court and former Democratic opponents in the Indiana Senate have come forward to attest to his character and competence. Reviewing his record, the American Bar Association declared him fully "qualified" for the appellate judgeship to which he has been nominated.

Nevertheless, in recent weeks, Mr. Manion has become the target of a campaign that has sought to disparage his capabilities and his character, in order to defeat his nomination. Thus, I am writing to make known to you and your Senate colleagues my strongly held views about Dan Manion, and about his qualifications for service on the appellate bench.

First, the rating given to Dan Manion by the ABA, i.e., "qualified"—though disparaged by his critics—is the identical rating given almost half the Federal judges nominated by Presidents Nixon, Ford, and Carter. It is the same rating given two of my previous nominees to the Seventh Circuit, Judges Easterbrook and Posner, both of whom were distinguished professors of law at the time of their nomination. At what point was it that an ABA rating of "qualified" became an impediment to nomination to the Federal bench?

Second, Mr. Manion's legal experience is dismissed because it was gained largely at the State rather than the Federal level. But my own experience, before coming to Washington, was at the State level. It has been, and remains, my belief that our Federal circuit courts should reflect the diversity of the regions they serve. The Seventh Circuit contains Chicago, but it also contains smaller cities and towns, rural areas and farming communities, like Dixon, Illinois. Dan Manion, a country lawyer, would represent that diversity, just as the other judges whom I nominated to the Seventh Circuit bring experience from the academic world and the urban law community.

Moreover, when we recall that Mr. Lincoln himself and the late Senator Sam Ervin were proud to be known as "country lawyers," we ought to be hesitant before considering this kind of law practice a mark of ineligibility for service on the Federal bench. Nor should Mr. Manion's years of political experience in the State Senate and legal experience in Indiana's District Attorney's office be counted as of no consequence. Among the names any President should consider for the Federal courts, including the Supreme Court, when vacancies occur, are those of the most distinguished and experienced lawyers in the Congress of the United States.

Third, it is alleged that Mr. Manion, while serving as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the Indiana Senate, "defied . . . the Constitution," when he proposed a bill authorizing the posting of the Ten Commandments in Indiana's public schools.

But this distortion is rooted either in ignorance or malice. Where the Supreme Court had disallowed the mandatory posting of the Ten Commandments in the Kentucky public schools, Dan Manion sponsored a bill permitting the voluntary posting in Indiana's schools, and added a provision that should the Supreme Court rule voluntary posting unconstitutional, the postings would immediately be removed. His bill passed the Indiana Senate with strong Democratic support.

Dan Manion is also opposed by some because his father, Clarence Manion, former dean of the Notre Dame Law School, was a member of the John Birch Society. Yet, surely, in 1986, the time has passed when guilt by association is acceptable practice, when an act of political discrimination can be committed against a Federal nominee because his late father held deeply controversial views.

Addressing Mr. Manion during his appearance before the Judiciary Committee, one Senator revealed, I believe, the true and undeclared motivation behind the campaign to defeat my nominee. "I think you are a decent and honorable man," the Senator said to Dan Manion, "but I cannot vote for you because of your political views."

Bob, here we come to the heart of the matter.

Dan Manion's "political views" are close to my political views. In particular, Dan Manion's belief that Federal judges should interpret the law, and not impose from the bench their social or philosophical notions upon society, is my belief. That is the real reason this nomination is encountering such hostility.

So, let me state my position directly. I intend to fight for the nomination of Dan Manion; and I do not accept that there should be a hidden restrictive covenant in the confirmation process that reads: No conservative need apply.

What appears to be taking shape is an attempt by some Senators to use their "advise and consent" power to overturn the mandate of the American people—as expressed in 1980 and 1984.

This is not an issue of Republican versus Democrat. It is an issue of whether or not a President of the United States has the right to choose Federal judges who share his judicial philosophy, so long as they are qualified by reason of character and competence. Presidents of both parties have asserted that prerogative; and I will not surrender it.

In his letter of endorsement, Father Theodore Hesburgh, who has known him since Notre Dame days, said of Dan Manion that his life has been one of "service and commitment to justice," that he would bring to the bench "dedication, integrity and a keen knowledge of the law." This represents my view exactly; and there is one final personal reason I want this nominee confirmed. Dan Manion would be the first of the Vietnam veterans to reach the Federal Appellate Court; and I want the record to show I made that appointment.

Please let me know how I can be of help.

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN.

Mr. DOLE. Let me reiterate my intention of hopefully bringing this matter to the Senate floor this week. We are working with Members on both sides to see if we can reach an 8-hour time agreement and maybe do that on Wednesday.

SCHEDULE FOR REMAINDER OF THE WEEK

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me also say, for the benefit of Members, that if we can complete our business by, say, Thursday evening, there would not be a Friday session. To do that, we would all have to agree that we might have to be a little late tomorrow evening—we hope not to be in very late this evening—and maybe a little late on Wednesday, but, hopefully, get out at a reasonable hour on Thursday.

What we have in mind is—and I think there would not be any real dispute of things we probably should do this week—first, tax reform. Second, we must do the supplemental. Hopefully we could do that tomorrow. If we finish the tax bill at 4 o'clock, maybe we can follow that up yet on tomorrow. We are shopping for a time agreement. I am not certain whether we can agree.

We have the Commodity Futures Trading Act. I am not certain whether it will be possible to bring that up this week. We have the diplomatic security bill. We understand that should not take a great deal of time.

The House message to accompany the FHA extension, if we could work that out, it would be a matter of minutes.

The nomination of Daniel Manion. Again, if we could reach a time agreement, it would take most of Wednesday, but not all day.

We also hope to proceed to the nomination of Terrence Scanlon. I understand the investigation has been completed that was had asked for earlier. If that is satisfactory to Senator PROXMIRE, I do not see any problem proceeding with that nomination.

Then there is the Smithsonian Institution bill. There will be a rollcall, but I do not believe it is controversial. There is also the so-called risk retention bill, which, again, may not be very controversial, but may require a rollcall.

So I do not believe those measures would take a great deal of time, with the one exception, the Manion nomination. I will be working with the minority leader to try to schedule that.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. The majority leader has referred to the supplemental appropriation bill conference report. There have been rumors that that President might veto that bill. Does the distinguished majority leader know anything about the intentions of the White House with reference to that bill?

(Mr. HECHT assumed the chair.)

Mr. DOLE. I believe there is only one provision that concerns the White House. Again, I am not certain I am totally accurate, but I think the majority of the problems the White House had with the bill have been resolved. I do not believe there has been any definite statement it would be vetoed.

There is a REA provision that is a concern to OMB and others. It is my understanding Senator HATFIELD will make an effort on the floor to solve that problem. If it is not solved and the conference report is passed, I hope the White House would not veto it.

It is a very important bill. I know that it is very important to the State of West Virginia. It is very important to many farm States, because we have the so-called deficiency payments that are not being made because they are out of money.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader is accurate in saying the bill is important to West Virginia in many respects. There are flood moneys in the bill for the Federal Emergency Management Agency and for the Soil Conservation Service which are badly needed, not only in West Virginia, but also in Mississippi and several Western States, including the State of California. In West Virginia, the November floods of last year, the cleanup following those floods has not been as it should have been.

There are moneys in the bill that I put in the bill as a member of the Appropriations Committee. I added $8 million for the Soil Conservation Service in the bill and there are $250 million for FEMA.

So I hope the distinguished majority leader is accurate. Certainly, I join with him in sharing the hope that the administration will not veto that bill.

Mr. President, I would be glad to yield to the distinguished majority leader 2 minutes of my time because I have taken some of his.

□ 1210

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I support the provisions which the Democratic leader has referred to in the supplemental. I hope we can resolve any problem with the White House. I will be working on that today. It is my understanding as of Friday there has been no definite decision on whether or not to veto.

INTEREST RATES—PART II

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on June 12 I shared with my colleagues some observations on the course of the American economy and the need for further reductions in interest rates. Since then we have gotten some more data on the state of the economy—and I thought it would be appropriate at this time to expand on my view that interest rates need to be lower.

The economy is not growing as fast as we had hoped. In fact, it did not grow as fast as we had thought in the first quarter of this year. The GNP growth rate for the January through March period has been revised downward, from 3.7 percent to 2.9 percent. Many economists think the economy is growing at an even slower pace in the current quarter. A Wall Street Journal survey of economists indicates growth of only 2.3 percent in this quarter. The real question is what happens in the second half of the year, and there the economists remain sharply divided. Some say the pace will pick up smartly for the rest of 1986, while others see the economy chugging along at a 2- to 3-percent growth rate.

Mr. President, I do not pretend to have the ability to outguess the best economic forecasters in the country. But I think it is fair to say they cannot agree with each other. I do not suggest they should. It is not an exact science. No one can be sure what present economic trends really mean for the rest of this year, or for the rest of the decade, for that matter. And wherever there is a degree of uncertainty, some risks have to be taken in shaping public policy. Let me explain why I think encouraging the move toward lower interest rates is the lesser risk at this time—first, by reference to the recent history of American economic policy.

LOOKING BACK

When President Reagan took office in 1981, he faced the extraordinary challenge of wringing inflation out of the economy, boosting real growth, cutting taxes and regulation, and getting spending under control. He has succeeded admirably on all fronts, with some important assistance from this body—and from the able Chairman of the Federal Reserve, Paul Volcker. But, with the benefit of hindsight, we have to acknowledge that there have been delayed costs for breaking out of the stagflation trap. Costs we are feeling now.

Mr. President, to put it briefly, we are still experiencing what you might call a "disinflation hangover." The first, and widely-felt, price we paid for cutting inflation was the 1982 recession. We recovered strongly from that recession, and managed to keep inflation down: The great economic triumph of this decade, and a stunning reversal of the low-growth, high-inflation experience of the 1970's. What we did not realize so clearly at the time, was the revolution in international financial land trade relations that accompanied our economic success.

BREAKING NEW GROUND

Mr. President, by now clearly everyone understands that America's domestic economic leadership cannot really be isolated from its role in the world economy. When real interest rates rise in the United States, our trading partners must either match the return investors get in America, or increase exports to match capital outflows, or artificially restrain both trade and financial flows. So when our deficits and interest rates went up, and when we recovered from recession much faster than our main trading partners, there was another impact: The balance of trade shifted dramatically, as American consumers found imported goods an attractive option, while American exporters found their efforts hampered by an exceptionally high value for the dollar in foreign exchange markets.

MOVING FORWARD

Economists will be analyzing the trade and finance revolution of the 1980's for many years to come: But we have to move ahead now, and we cannot wait for the final, definitive word on why the revolution took place. But some things are clear enough right now to serve as useful guides to action.

First, U.S. recovery alone can't sustain the world economy. Healthier growth is needed not only in the developed nations, but even more importantly, in the developing world of Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

Second, a breakdown in the system of free and open trade and finance would be fatal to all our hopes for the world economy. Shutting the doors from nation to nation is the recipe for economic catastrophe on a scale we can scarcely imagine.

Third, support for anti-inflationary policies must be rallied by resort to microeconomic changes—domestic adjustments in all the free market economies—geared to improving productivity, maximizing comparative advantage, and harnessing the forces of the free market to make the best use of the natural resources, talents, and skills every nation and every people possess.

Mr. President, in many ways lower interest rates are the key to achieving all of these goals. Lower rates can provide a healthy economic boost to both the developed and developing world. As the dollar moderates and stabilizes, they can also dampen the demand for knee-jerk protectionist backsliding. And a lower interest rate environment gives a boost to productivity-enhancing initiatives like tax cuts and tax reform, deregulation, privatization, restraint on public-sector spending, and rolling back unfair trade barriers and wasteful subsidies.

I know Chairman Volcker shares these goals, and understands the risks. We all know that inflation is never put to rest for good, and that we must be ever-vigilant against a recurrence of the scourge and deception of inflation. But we no longer have the option of not taking any risks—we must be sure the risks we do take are carefully calculated, and grounded in commonsense. To this Senator, at this time, that means taking steps to move to the lower-interest rate environment the world economy seems to demand. In the weeks and months ahead, I will be speaking out concerning the extraordinary opportunity we have to launch an economic revolution—and the risks if we fail.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Democratic leader is recognized.

THE TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I join with the distinguished majority leader in urging that Senators bring their amendments to the floor today because otherwise, in the final moments tomorrow just prior to the vote on final passage of the tax bill, some Senators may find that they have no time for debate. So my staff will be prepared to contact the Senators whose names are on the list who have amendments, and who have not yet offered them. We will be urging Senators on this side, if they possibly can to come forward, get their amendments in today.

REACTION TO REAGAN COMMENTS ON JUDGES

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the New York Times, on June 22, has this story:

> Reagan defends his nominations to Federal bench, assails critics in Senate, sees Democrats as motivated by politics rather than concern for quality.

Mr. President, this is not a monarchy. I have heard similar administration comments before on the subject of nominations, as if the executive had unfettered power. The President's speechwriters should read the Constitution about the Senate's role. And the Senate is fulfilling its role, and the Judiciary Committee carefully studies the nominations submitted by the President. The President is entitled to nominate those individuals whom he wishes to nominate. He may nominate them on the basis of his philosophy, or whatever. But the Senate's role is to judge the qualifications of the nominees.

There may be those of us who will agree with a particular nominee's philosophy on this or that case as such philosophy appears to make itself clear. But in any event, Senators cannot escape the role which the Constitution places upon them. The Senate is not a rubber stamp machine. The Constitution lays out the responsibility of the Senate when it comes to the confirmation of nominations.

Qualifications—that is the key. Lack of quality in some of the appointments has been clear.

The President was quoted in his weekly radio address this past Saturday as saying, "We nominate only those with high qualifications."

But according to the ratings compiled by the American Bar Association, the quality of the administration's nominees for the Federal appeals courts has dropped significantly in Mr. Reagan's second term.

The ABA screening panel studied judicial nominees' education and legal backgrounds and rated them as "exceptionally well qualified," "well qualified," "qualified" and "not qualified."

A compilation released last month showed that half of the 28 lawyers nominated as appeals court judges since January 1985 were found to have the lowest acceptable rating.

In the first term, about 36 percent received a similar ranking.

The comparable figure for appeals court nominees in the Carter administration was 25 percent.

So I emphasize, Mr. President, that one-half of the nominations to the courts of appeals received only a "qualified" rating per the American Bar Association. As I have indicated also, that is the lowest positive rating. Three-fourths of those were found by a minority of the American Bar Association committee to be unqualified.

On the subject of partisanship, if the President means that the Democrats get together and decide to oppose a particular judge, in this instance Mr. Manion, for political purposes, I say the answer is absolutely not. I am the elected leader of the Democrats in the Senate, and there has been no getting together by Democrats, not this Democrat, with a decision out of a meeting to oppose Mr. Manion for political purposes.

I have not met with Democrats with respect to Mr. Manion.

If the President means that many Democrats might oppose Mr. Manion because he is not qualified, then the answer is probably yes. That is the reason why I am opposing Mr. Manion. That is our responsibility under the Constitution. Concerning the accusation that Democrats are being partisan, there have been only two rollcall votes on the last 100 Reagan judgeship nominations—Mr. Fitzwater and Mr. Kozinski. All were confirmed. There has been only one judicial nominee blocked in the Judiciary Committee, and that was Mr. Sessions. Those statistics are out of a list of dozens and dozens of nominees.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will continue to see clearly through the fog and the mist of the political charges and remember that the Constitution is a clear beacon as to where the Senate should go.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Washington Post of June 22, 1986, entitled "President Makes Push for Judges," and a second article from the New York Times of June 22, 1986, entitled "Reagan Defends His Nominations to Federal Bench," be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, June 22, 1986]

REAGAN DEFENDS HIS NOMINATIONS TO FEDERAL BENCH

ASSAILS CRITICS IN SENATE

(By Bernard Weinraub)

WASHINGTON, June 21.—President Reagan, saying criticisms of his judicial nominations were politically motivated, today denounced "partisan use of the confirmation process" by Democrats in the Senate.

Defending his appointments to the Federal bench, which have come under increasing criticism in his second term, Mr. Reagan said the attacks were aimed at qualified conservatives who simply failed to conform to "liberal ideology." He said his judicial appointments were marked by candidates of "proven abilities and the finest character."

The remarks, in the President's weekly radio address, were his sharpest criticism yet of Democratic senators and some legal scholars who have said that the quality of his judicial appointments, especially those submitted for Federal appeals courts, had declined markedly in his second term.

NO APPROVAL FOR 2 NOMINEES

Two weeks ago the Senate Judiciary Committee for the first time rejected one of Mr. Reagan's judicial nominees, Jefferson B. Sessions 3d, to be a Federal district judge in Mobile, Ala. Democratic critics said Mr. Sessions had made racially insensitive remarks.

Last month the panel voted 9 to 9 on recommending Daniel Manion, a conservative Indiana lawyer whose legal background had been questioned, for a seat on the United States Court of Appeals for the seventh Circuit in Chicago. The nomination was then reported with no recommendation to the full Senate, and the Judiciary Committee's ranking Democrat, Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware, has vowed to defeat the nomination in what is expected to be a close floor vote.

HIGH COURT CHOICES CITED

Mr. Reagan, in his address, linked the Supreme Court nominations this week of William H. Rehnquist and Antonin Scalia to his other judicial appointments.

"Justice Rehnquist and Judge Scalia are representative of the high caliber of our Federal court appointments," he said. "I have considered it a primary duty to appoint men and women such as Sandra Day O'Connor, of proven abilities and the finest character, to the Federal courts, and I think we have a proud record to show for it."

"Let's be honest," Mr. Reagan said. "The real objection to Dan Manion is that he doesn't conform to the liberal ideology of some Senators."

Mr. Reagan discussed his criteria for selecting judges. "On the crime issue and a whole host of other issues, we've sought to appoint judges who look at the law as something to be honored, respected and interpreted according to legislative intent, not whim or ideology." he said. "One other basic principle guides us: we nominate only those with high qualifications."

According to ratings compiled by the American Bar Association, however, the quality of the Administration's nominees for Federal appeals courts has dropped significantly in Mr. Reagan's second term.

A.B.A. screening panels study judicial nominees' education and legal background and rate them as "extremely well qualified," "well qualified," "qualified," or "not qualified." The compilation, released last month, showed that half of the 28 lawyers nominated as appeals court judges since January 1985 were found to have the lowest acceptable rating. In the first term about 36 percent received a similar ranking—"qualified" or "qualified/unqualified," indicating that a minority favored rejecting the nomination. The comparable figure for appeals court nominees in the Carter Administration was 25 percent.

Reached in Manteno, Ill., Senator Paul Simon, who heads the nominations review process for the Democrats on the Judiciary Committee and who is a leader in the opposition to Mr. Manion's confirmation, said: "The Senate has been more than fair to the Administration's judicial nominees. The last 100 have been confirmed with only two rollcall votes. But when the quality is the issue, with these lifetime appointments, we will be firm as well as fair.

"There is a marked decline in the quality of these appointments under Attorney General Meese, and that is the issue in the Manion nomination."

"If the White House has shown the same attention to quality in the nominations that it has to Supreme Court candidates, there would be no showdown next week in the Senate on the Manion case."

Unlike the controversy surrounding Mr. Sessions and Mr. Manion, the initial reaction to Mr. Reagan's intention to nominate Judge Scalia to the Supreme Court and Justice Rehnquist as Chief Justice has been highly favorable. There is no expectation that those nominations will encounter serious resistance, though some senators have voiced ideological objections.

Qualifications and legal experience have emerged as the central factors in the opposition to Mr. Manion. A lawyer in South Bend, he has never served as a lead counsel in a Federal trial, and Democrats on the Judiciary panel have said that he was a conservative ideologue without sufficient experience in Federal courts. He has also been closely associated with the political work of his father, Clarence Manion, a founder of the rightist John Birch Society.

The A.B.A. screening panel assigned Mr. Manion a "qualified/unqualified" ranking, indicating that an unspecified minority found him unacceptable.

Without naming Mr. Manion's critics, the President attacked them as partisan liberals. He said he had sent a letter to the Senate assailing the tactics of Mr. Manion's opponents.

"Partisanship in the Senate has pushed fair play by the boards, which is why I've sent a letter to the Senate expressing my strong opinion about the prerogative of the President to make qualified appointments to the Federal judiciary, and what I feel has been the partisan use of the confirmation process," said Mr. Reagan.

"Some are doing just about everything they can think of to prevent Daniel Manion's confirmation," said Mr. Reagan. He called his nominee "a fine lawyer" and "a person who has the ability and determination to become the kind to judge the American people want in the Federal courts—one who believes in the rule of law, who reveres the Constitution, and whose sense of fairness and justice is above reproach."

PRESIDENT MAKES PUSH FOR JUDGES

MANION GETS SUPPORT; OPPOSITION IN SENATE IS CALLED PARTISAN

(By Spencer Rich)

President Reagan urged the Senate yesterday to confirm embattled conservative Daniel A. Manion as a judge of the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, and accused Senate Democrats of engineering the defeat of some of his judicial and legal nominees merely because they were conservatives.

The president also called for Senate confirmation of William H. Rehnquist as chief justice and Antonin Scalia, an appeals court judge, as an associate Supreme Court justice. Both are considered strong conservatives.

In his weekly radio address from Camp David, the president accused the Democrats of "partisan use of the confirmation process." The address was a sharp counterattack to a surprisingly successful Democratic effort to thwart Reagan's efforts to reshape the judiciary in a conservative mold.

"The real objection to Dan Manion is that he doesn't conform to the liberal ideology of senators," declared the president, saying he had "sent a letter to the Senate expressing my strong opinion about the prerogative of the president to make qualified appointments to the federal judiciary."

A copy of that letter was released by Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole (R-Kan.), according to United Press International. Reagan is reported to have said, "Dan Manion's political views are close to my political views. In particular, Dan Manion's belief that federal judges should interpret the law and not impose from the bench their social or philosophical notions upon society, is my belief. That is the real reason this nomination is encountering such hostility."

But Sen. Paul Simon (D-Ill.) said in a statement, "There is a marked decline in the quality of these appointments . . . and that is the issue in the Manion nomination."

The stakes in the dispute are larger than Manion's nomination, which is expected to reach a Senate vote this week or next.

In the past year, Senate Democrats and some Republicans such as Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (Md.) and Arlen Specter (Pa.), backed by a coalition of liberal, civil rights and civil liberties organizations, have blocked a number of important nominations. They killed the nomination of administration civil rights chief William Bradford Reynolds to be associate attorney general and of Jeffrey I. Zuckerman to be general counsel of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Also rejected was Jefferson Beauregard Sessions III as a federal judge.

In the Judiciary Committee, the Manion nomination failed to win approval on a 9-to-9 vote, and thus goes to the floor without a favorable committee recommendation.

Opponents coupled allegations of extreme right-wing views or insensitivity on racial matters with charges of lack of judicial temperament or legal distinction. Sens. Joseph R. Biden Jr. (Del.), Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.) and Howard M. Metzenbaum (Ohio) have been among Democrats opposing Manion and some of the other nominations.

Administration officials are said to think that Democrats have found a formula in these charges for their effort to thwart Reagan's attempts to remake the federal judiciary and legal agencies. They are said to believe that a counterattack was needed to prevent further trouble on nominations. A White House spokesman agreed yesterday that the president's remarks on Manion should be interpreted as the start of a counterattack.

At a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing April 30, Democrats questioned whether Manion held such extreme right-wing views that he should not sit on the federal bench.

They cited Manion's sponsorship as an Indiana state senator of a bill to allow the Ten Commandments to be posted in the public schools two months after the Supreme Court ruled that such postings are unconstitutional, and 1971 statements urging that the Supreme Court be stripped of some its jurisdiction and declaring that antiwar demonstrators "should be penned up."

Democrats also questioned whether his legal background in a small South Bend law practice was adequate to qualify him to sit on a federal appeals court. Manion has been strongly defended, however, by Indiana's two senators, Dan Quayle (R) and Richard G. Lugar (R).

Reagan said he is trying to name "tough, responsible judges" because "the scales of justice have become seriously unbalanced" and it is "difficult to convict criminals."

Mr. President, how many minutes have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

IS ADMINISTRATION REALISTIC ABOUT SOVIET REACTION TO SALT RENUNCIATION?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in today's Washington Post I noted a newspaper article entitled "Soviet Ability To Accelerate Arms Debate. Reagan SALT Stance Shaped by Economics."

So what we have here is today's Washington Post reporting that the administration is basing its SALT noncompliance policy on the expectation that a troubled Soviet economy could not or will not respond with increased spending on strategic weapons.

Considering the constant refrain from the administration about the Soviets outspending the United states on weapons, this is a questionable and major shift in direction, it would seem.

I think it is wishful thinking on the part of the administration in respect to the public debate that has been going on anent the likely Soviet military reaction to a U.S. renunciation of the central numerical sublimits in the SALT II accords.

The article today notes that Soviet experts inside and outside the administration disagree about the wisdom and validity of this expectation.

This reported disagreement, as well as past Soviet behavior of supporting military capabilities at the expense of the domestic economy of the Soviet Union, challenges the wisdom of this expectation and any policy based on it.

This uncertain expectation was also disclosed in the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee hearing last week when the Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman, Adm. William J. Crowe, Jr., testified. Admiral Crowe gave his personal opinion that Soviet strategic weapons deployment "would not differ appreciably" in the future with or without SALT limits. However, he refused to state that there was no military impact if the Soviets did not live within these central sublimits.

So these two positions that he took seem to me to be contradictory.

I find that the admiral's expectation about the Soviet strategic deployment without SALT to be somewhat puzzling, since he indicated it was an assessment of Soviet intentions and not of Soviet weapons production capabilities.

Mr. President, we have been warned repeatedly by the military, not only under this administration but also in previous adminstrations, to judge the capabilities of the Soviet Union as we go about our budgetary debates and discussions and actions, and in the course of the military planning on the part of our top military people they have said consistently to judge the capabilities of the Soviet Union, not their intentions, when assessing a Soviet threat.

They have said that predicting intentions is much less certain than measuring military capabilities.

Of course, Admiral Crowe turned that advice on its head when he took the position that, in his judgment, suggestions that the Soviet Union would rapidly accelerate their production of launchers and warheads above the central numerical sublimits, would not be a likelihood.

So, in essence, he was saying trust the Soviets not to significantly exceed the SALT-permitted force levels absent treaty limits.

I am uncomfortable, Mr. President, in placing such faith in Soviet intentions since CIA experts on Soviet strategic programs have told Congress that the Soviets "clearly have the capability for significant future expansion" of their strategic warhead arsenal to at least 3,000 nuclear warheads more than they might deploy by 1990 if they continued to comply with SALT.

Mr. President, 3,000 more nuclear warheads targeted on the United States would be against our national security interests. Therefore, it is to our advantage for the President at least for now to live within the central numerical sublimits which restrain the Soviets from exploiting their greater strategic weapons production potential.

The abandonment by the United States of SALT central numerical sublimits gives the Soviets a justification for just such a weapons expansion, needlessly complicates the planning for a productive summit, and throws cold water on prospects for a successful Geneva arms negotiation talks.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I thank the Chair.

WILL THE SOVIETS ACCEPT A REAGAN ARMS CONTROL AGREEMENT?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on Thursday, June 19, President Reagan spoke on arms control at a high school graduation in Glassboro, NJ. He said, as he has said before, that he favors an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union to reduce nuclear arms on both sides. But this time, the President said something different. He said the Soviets had placed on the table at Geneva new proposals to reduce nuclear weapons. He described the Soviet initiative as a serious effort. He even said that this could be a turning point.

What do we make of this, Mr. President? Are we on the verge of a new arms control agreement? Maybe we are. Here is why: First, the President of the United States—as I have said many times—is the quintessential player in the achievement of an arms control agreement. This is especially true today. Now it appears the President is more firmly aboard the arms control express than ever.

Second, are the Soviets willing to negotiate an agreement? Our top expert on the Soviet Union, Marshall Shulman, has said that in his 40 years of studying the Soviet Union, there has never been a time when they have been more disposed to reach an arms control agreement with the United States than they are today.

Third, can the United States now negotiate from strength? Any objective analysis of the economic, technological and military strength of the United States and its NATO alliance compared to the Soviet Union and its Warsaw pact shows that today, we negotiate from a position of overwhelming strength.

So, are we on the brink of an historic and far-reaching nuclear arms agreement?

Unfortunately, Mr. President, the answer is probably not. And yet there is an interesting outside possibility.

First, what suggests the two superpowers will not reach an arms control agreement? After all, for anyone reading that Glassboro speech President Reagan seems to be reaching and reaching hard for an agreement. No question about it, President Reagan could have an historic arms control agreement if he wanted one. But the evidence is overwhelming that he does not want an arms control treaty. The President has opposed every arms control agreement this country has ever negotiated, whether negotiated by Republican or Democratic Presidents, whether ratified or not ratified by the Senate. He has an absolutely perfect, unblemished record of opposition.

How, then, do we account for the fact that at this very moment, an American negotiating team is in Geneva under express instructions from President Reagan trying to negotiate an arms control agreement? How do we explain that the President has kept his team on the spot patiently negotiating for a year and a half? The answer is that the President recognizes the overwhelming public support in this country for arms control. The President's pollsters tell him that the American people want to stop the arms race. They believe the buildup of nuclear arms by this country, matched by the huge Soviet buildup, is the most dangerous, life-threatening fact in the world. So the President speaks often and warmly in favor of arms control. He sends his team to Geneva to negotiate. At Glassboro he went farther.

In the past, Reagan administration officials have said the negotiations have produced nothing because the Russians "have not been serious." In this latest speech, the President said the Russians have made serious proposals. He made other pleasant and friendly statements about the Soviets. He also said that he hoped Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev would come to Washington this year for a second summit. The implication was that the two most powerful men on Earth would announce a nuclear arms control agreement that would meet the fondest hopes of the American people for an end to the arms race.

Would Ronald Reagan; this steadfast, unremitting foe of all past United States-Soviet nuclear arms control agreements, really expect to achieve this? Very likely not. But the President has a sure political winner here. All Americans will applaud his happy rhetorical support of arms control. The President is positioning himself as a champion of "reasonable" arms control. If no arms control agreement develops, it will be hard for any patriotic American to argue the fault lies with President Reagan. Did he not say he was for arms control? The problem will appear to be with the Soviets.

The President is making a simple and understandable proposition. Both countries should reduce their offensive nuclear weapons by 50 percent, with more reduction promised for later. If the Russians accept, the nightmare nuclear arms race will be over.

Does that not sound good? It sounds great. What is wrong with it?

Here is the problem: The Russians may change their view but so far, they have refused this proposition on very understandable grounds. The Soviets respond that they will promptly agree to the nuclear weapon reduction if the U.S. Government will make a firm commitment to comply with the antiballistic missile arms control treaty, the ABM Treaty, for 15 to 20 years.

Why does Gorbachev want a binding commitment that we will not break out of the ABM Treaty for so long? Because if we do break out of the treaty, it will mean that we begin the testing, the production and the deployment of a defensive system—the SDI or star wars—that could destroy the credibility of the Soviet deterrent. The Russians assume the worst-case scenario, as all nations do when confronted with a foreign military threat. Gorbachev assumes our SDI or star wars defense may actually work—especially if the Soviet offensive nuclear arsenal is reduced and not advanced or improved with more and more new penetrating weapons. If that happens, what becomes of the Soviet Union as a superpower? The answer is easy. It is finished. Gorbachev knows this. But so does President Reagan. President Reagan knows Secretary Gorbachev fully understands this, so President Reagan must feel confident that the Soviets will not, indeed cannot, accept his proposition for a 50-percent reduction of offensive nuclear weapons.

So much for the view that nothing, no arms control treaty, will come of this. How about the outside chance that the famous Reagan luck will hold, and an arms control agreement between the superpowers will develop? How could this happen? Here is how: Secretary Gorbachev may surprise everyone by agreeing to the mutual reduction of offensive nuclear weapons regardless of what we do with star wars. If he does, the reason will be clear. He will have become convinced, as many of America's foremost scientists are, that star wars is an idle, empty dream, that it can never work even if assisted by big reductions in the Soviet offensive nuclear arsenal. He may buy the view so widely shared in the American scientific community that star wars will waste our technology, impose a massive burden on our economy, and end up a total U.S. loser. If he agrees to the Reagan arms control proposal, it is a cinch that this is the way Mr. Gorbachev sees it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR MELCHER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

AMERICA'S BASIC INDUSTRIES

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, the bottom line for America's largest basic industries is the losses they have been sustaining. The 40 million people working on the land or living in scores of thousands of rural communities across the country in agriculture, agribusiness, forest products, mining, and energy are all wondering when the turnaround in the downward trend in commodity prices will come. They are looking for the bottoming out of commodity prices in hopes that it will be followed with recovery of the prices of the commodities which they produce. Today, the markets opened with cattle at $54 per 100 pounds, corn and wheat about $2.25 per bushel, lumber at $175 per 1,000 board feet, oil at $13-$14 per barrel, copper at 65 cents per pound, and silver at $5 per ounce.

Those prices make 40 million Americans losers. Their bottom line is near despair and they wish and they hope that national policies, with the attention of the White House and Congress, will be focused on their problems.

Our attention should be focused on these basic industries, and the glib statements of national political spokespersons that the economy is robust means that the country can get along with the basic industries going broke. Those are fighting words where I come from.

It is time that we fight here in Washington to remove the obstacles to rejuvenation of the Nation's basic industries. That means improvement in trade and attention to national policies that foster basic economic growth here in the United States. We can use that which we have the most of—commodities produced from the Earth—to serve both our national interests at home and our national interests abroad. When push comes to shove, it is, after all, the basic industries of the United States that have made and continued to make us the world power, with a great national defense that maintains for the free world the opportunities for mutually beneficial reciprocal trade and peaceful world commerce.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOLDWATER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

TAX REFORM

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I very much wanted to vote for the tax bill, which is before the Senate. It contains many elements which I have long supported: A tough minimum tax on individuals and corporations; closing tax loopholes; and removing people below the poverty line from the income tax rolls. It also makes you think more than the usual "twice" when the consensus in the Senate is so overwhelming and you are not part of it.

But, Mr. President, I cannot allow myself to be swept along by the wave of organizational support for this bill. I specifically say "organizational" support because I have serious doubts whether the support for this bill in America's heartland matches up with its apparent support in this Chamber.

It is not that this bill is imperfect. No bill is perfect. But the problem is that this bill takes unacceptably high casualties in its attempt to win the battle of tax reform. It will increase the taxes on many average income people at the same time that it gives extraordinarily large tax cuts to the some of the wealthiest among us. It not only fails to address the issue of the huge Federal deficit, but it will make it more difficult and painful to deal with the deficit when we soon turn our attention to that problem. Finally, for all its claims of reform and fairness, it is neither consistently fair nor consistently in accord with the general interest. For instance, it will hurt people with high medical bills and it will hurt charities. It also gives relief to a privileged few from new rules while applying those rules retroactively to millions of others.

First, if this were a tax reform bill in which the only people who were paying more in taxes under it were people who were sheltering all or almost all of their income from taxes, then it would be the kind of tax reform to achieve fairness most of the public has in mind. Unfortunately, the best available evidence indicates that this bill is not that kind of tax reform. The best evidence available is from the Joint Committee on Taxation and it shows that millions and millions of middle-income people will pay more in taxes—not less.

One out of four of the taxpayers making between $20,000 and $30,000 a year could receive tax increases under the committee bill. Their average tax increase could be about $340. Also, based on this same information, 1 out of 3 of the taxpayers making between $30,000 and $40,000 a year could get tax increases under this bill. Their average tax increase could be $525. That could come as a shock to perhaps 14 million middle-income taxpayers whose taxes might go up—who have been told that they are going to be better off. The shock may turn to anger when they learn that over half of the taxpayers making over $200,000 may get a tax cut averaging over $50,000 a year. We tried to correct this new injustice with the Mitchell amendment, but the Senate defeated the effort.

Now, as I indicated, the joint committee has said that this data cannot be verified even though it is the best they have. But if it cannot stand behind its own data, if the committee cannot confidently quantify losers, that means it cannot confidently quantify winners either. It means that no one can confidently assert that this bill will cut taxes for virtually everyone who is not a wealthy person sheltering a substantial portion of his or her income.

Second, as I indicated in the beginning of my remarks, I am concerned that this tax reform bill does not deal adequately with the deficit. People have asked me, "Isn't this bill better than nothing?" Well, with respect to deficit, I believe the answer is "no." Let me explain.

A few months ago, this tax reform bill looked like it would be just another tax bill, full of all the usual favors for this industry and special considerations for that group. No one was really excited about the substance of tax reform. As a result, we were able to step back from the specifics and take a macro view of how tax reform fit into our ongoing battle to reduce the deficit and increase our economic well-being. And when we took that long view, we made two decisions:

The first thing we did was that we adopted a sense-of-the-Senate resolution, by a vote of 72 to 24, saying that we should have an agreement on the budget and defense reduction before we considered tax reform. The second action we took was when the Senate passed a budget resolution in which we called for about $40 billion in added revenues over the next 3 years. Those were hard votes, and they were the right votes.

But now, the Senate is listening to the soothing tunes sung by those who tell us to ignore the deficit as part of the tax reform debate. So, instead of using most of the revenue from loophole closing and the minimum tax for deficit reduction, we are using it for tax cuts, very unevenly applied. Temporarily, at least, we have abandoned our commitment to address first the need to reduce the deficit.

So, when we turn our attention back to the deficit, this bill will make it harder and more painful to reduce it, because, again, this bill soaks up revenues from loophole closing and an effective minimum tax, and uses those revenues for some tax cuts instead of for deficit cuts. The practical effect of that decision is clear: Either we will not reduce the deficit or we will have to raise money through some other methods. Assuming that we do not want to break the Gramm-Rudman law and assuming that income taxes on individuals and businesses will not be raised very soon after this income tax reform/tax reduction effort, what does that leave us?

It leaves the likelihood of increases in Federal excise taxes. The small tax cuts of perhaps $100 which the working poor get from this bill when they are eliminated from the tax rolls could well be eroded by excise tax increases on phone bills, beer, wine, cigarettes, and other items which are likely to be major elements of any deficit reduction revenue package that may come before the Congress this summer. Will we be giving out small tax cuts in June only to take them back in July? I am afraid that this is the course we are on—shifting the burden from a progressive income tax to a regressive excise tax.

The only other alternative we are left with as result of our using loophole-closing revenues for tax cuts instead of for deficit cuts is the possibility that we will not raise the revenues necessary as part of an overall and responsible deficit reduction package. As Senator DOMENICI indicated in his excellent statement during the debate, if we try to reduce the deficit at the same time we put increased revenues off the table, then we are asking for devastating cuts in programs which are essential for maintaining our quality of life. Those devastating cuts will hit hardest at the middle- and low-income people who are supposed to benefit from this bill.

The better alternative to this bill is to obtain tax fairness by closing tax loopholes and imposing a minimum tax on profitable corporations and wealthy individuals, and, then using most of that revenue for deficit reduction. That way, we can have tax reform and tax fairness, without increasing the taxes on many middle-income people.

That is the course of action which the people support overwhelmingly. In a public opinion survey conducted earlier this year, the public, by a vote of 68 to 22 percent, said that revenues from loophole closing and a minimum tax should be used for deficit cuts rather than tax cuts.

We are doing exactly the opposite in this bill. In fact, when all is said and done, we will have lost a great opportunity to reduce the deficit. I echo Senator DOMENICI's words of last week: "What a pity, what a pity." I deeply fear that we are going to make the task of reasonable and responsible deficit reduction extraordinarily difficult when we revisit that priority, which we never should have left, in the near future.

Third, let me turn to some specific aspects of this legislation and ask whether they are consistent with fairness and the promotion of the general interest which are supposed to be the guiding principles of this legislation.

To begin with, this bill has significant and disturbing retroactive features. It has been said that one of the benefits of this bill is that the public will perceive it as fair, and it will, thereby, restore their trust in Government. But I ask, "How is that trust established when many people will look at this bill not as a sign of trust but of a breach of faith?"

It is wrong, it is unfair, for example, to tell people who have taken out consumer loans on the assumption that the interest would be fully deductible that such is no longer the case. It is similarly violative of the spirit of due process to tell people who have already invested in real estate transactions on the assumption that their passive losses would be deductible against ordinary income that the rules have changed governing those investments. It may well be true that some of these investors made their investments in order to shelter their income. But, Mr. President, those investments were not only legal—some were created to encourage investment in certain areas such as low-income housing. We should do away with abuses; but in the process, we want to preserve useful incentives. Unfortunately, in this bill, we have not distinguished between the two.

There is another disturbing aspect to retroactivity. Buried in the 1,212 pages of the bill sent to the Senate by the Finance Committee were almost 200 "transition rules." Now, a transition rule is nothing less than a tax break for a specific company; the rule prevents some specific provisions of the legislation from applying to it. Some of these tax breaks are justified; they soften the blow of the new law on businesses that undertook projects under the current tax law, only to be told the rules would be changed in the middle of the game. However, what concerns me is that many individuals and businesses are in the same sort of position and are subject to the same change in the rules, yet only a few of them were able to get a special exception in the law to take into account their particular case. Keep in mind that this special treatment is in the same bill that would increase the tax burden of millions of middle-income taxpayers. If we really had a commitment to fairness, we would extend the same consideration to everyone who has been similarly affected by this bill that we have extended to those covered by the transition rules.

Another unfair element of this bill concerns the repeal of the deduction for consumer interest. The bill eliminates the interest deduction on education loans, car loans, and other consumer loans. But it allows a person to get around the repeal of this deduction if, one owns a house and has adequate equity in it. If you rent, or have little or no equity in your home, you cannot deduct the interest you pay on your loan to help get your kid through college or to buy a car.

The proponents of this bill argue that one of its primary goals is to have people with equal incomes treated equally. This loophole, however, makes it impossible for us to achieve that goal. It is fundamentally unfair to have three families—perhaps living right next to each other—who have the same income but pay different taxes because one family has enough equity in a house to give a second or third or fourth mortgage to secure a consumer loan, while the others either rent or just do not have enough equity in their home. That is not fair, that is not equal treatment, that is not logical. There is no way to explain why some homeowners will be able to deduct interest on a car loan or an education loan while other homeowners and renters can not.

I also remain unconvinced that the battle for tax fairness requires the elimination, or substantial modification, of a number of important and socially useful provisions in the current tax law.

For example, the deduction for medical expenses has been severely restricted. Millions of people who currently use that deduction will no longer be able to utilize it. This is not a deduction for the few and the privileged, but a deduction for the average and the ill—a deduction for 17 million Americans with incomes between $10,000 and $50,000 a year.

Even today, the Joint Tax Committee is unable to tell us how many taxpayers will pay more in taxes due to the new restrictions on the medical deduction. The same lack of information exists when we look at the sales tax deduction, the consumer interest deduction and the two-earner marital deduction, among others.

□ 1300

Look at the charitable deduction on the short form. It will not longer be allowed. How is it fair to disallow this deduction for nonitemizers at the same time it is allowed for itemizers? How does it make sense in this age of contracting Government when the private sector must pick up the slack, for us to pass a tax bill which reduces the incentive for 61 million Americans to make charitable contributions? How is that a triumph of the general interest over the special interests?

Or consider individual retirement accounts. Proponents of this bill have suggested that they are bastions of the privileged. But how can that be when, based on material provided by the Joint Committee on Taxation, 70 percent of the taxpayers who use IRA's have incomes between $10,000 and $50,000? For people who are covered by, but have not vested in, a pension plan or for those who have a bare bones pension plan, denial of full deductibility for their IRA based on the assumption that they are already taken care of is neither fair nor reasonable. Does it not promote the general welfare to have a system of pension coverage where people do not so easily fall through the cracks?

Mr. President, just a few more words, and I will be done. I was struck in the debate by the continual cry, designed to create confidence, that we ought not worry about this problem or that flaw. "We'll address it in the conference," we were told. IRA's a problem? Don't worry, we'll take care of it in conference. Retroactivity a flaw? Don't worry, we'll take care of it in conference. Part of the middle class getting the short end of the stick? Ah, don't worry, that will be addressed in the conference. Capital gains taxed too heavily? Don't worry, we'll also take care of that in the conference. The revenue swings from year to year too great? Of course, don't worry, we'll take care of that, too, in conference. The cut in medical expense deductions keeping you awake at night? Just turn over, and leave it to the conference.

I can envision a situation in which these currently existing inequities are resolved in a way that will allow me to vote for the conference report. But there are so many elements which the conferees will be juggling that, despite the best efforts and the best intensions, some will fall. I want to withhold my endorsement for this bill until I see what ends up in people's hands and what ends up on the cutting room floor after the conference is completed.

The danger of sending this bill to conference in its current form is that by the time the conference completes its work, there could be the worst of both worlds—an unsatisfactory product propelled by an unstoppable momentum.

If we can avoid that, I may be able to vote for the conference report, when the smoke has cleared, and we have an unobstructed view of the final tax plan and of the deficit reduction situation. I may vote for it then—I hope I can—but I cannot bring myself to vote for it now.

We have spent years complaining about the obvious problems in the present Tax Code. We ought to spend a few months making sure that a new Tax Code rights those wrongs without creating a lot of new ones.

I believe we can do that. But I do not believe we have yet.

Instead, with this bill we substitute a new mythology for an existing unfair tax system. The new myth is that we are all better off with less progressive tax rates. We ignore the price we are paying for this so-called reform. We needed a broom and got a bulldozer. We wanted to get those who escape paying taxes and we did—but we may also have gotten 25 percent or more of middle-income Americans who already pay more than their fair share. We are hurting people with high medical bills. We are discriminating against many homeowners and renters on the interest deduction. We are handing out waivers of new rules and special privileges to a few hundred taxpayers while enforcing new rules retroactively for millions who are similarly situated. We are making it harder for charities to meet the needs of those in need and we are making it harder for us to meet our own needs by ending full deductability for IRA's. We are socking it to the economy by soaking up new revenues we need for deficit reduction, thereby making deficit reduction more difficult and regressive.

Mr. President, it is all so needless.

We should close loopholes and get a fair share in taxes from folks who have avoided paying their fair share. We should take most of that revenue though, and use it to reduce the deficit.

That is how we can combine deficit reduction and tax reform.

This bill gives us some reformal, but it also gives us some new tax unfairness and it actually makes deficit reduction much more difficult. We should do better. We can do better. And hopefully we will do better.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum setting forth good parts, bad parts and unknown parts of the bill.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM

SOME GOOD PARTS

Loophole closing; minimum tax; and 6 million working poor off tax rolls.

SOME UNKNOWN PARTS

How many million taxpayers will actually pay more in taxes than they pay now because of the cut in medical expense deduction? (22 million Americans now use that deduction.)

Elimination of the charitable deduction on the short form? (61 million Americans now use that deduction.)

Elimination, for most, of the sales tax deduction? (44 million Americans now use that deduction.)

Loss, for many, of the IRA deduction? (28 million Americans now use that deduction.)

Loss, for many, of the deduction for interest on education loans, car loans and other consumer loans? (39 million Americans now use that deduction.)

Loss of the deduction for protective clothing at work, professional and union, and other miscellanceous work related expenses now allowed? (No one knows how many million Americans now use that deduction.)

SOME BAD PARTS

Perhaps 25 percent or more of middle income taxpayers will get a tax increase.

Privileged few get waivers of new rules while same rules are retroactively enforced against millions.

Deficit reduction made more difficult.

Important, socially useful deductions eliminated or reduced, including medical expense deduction, charitable contribution deduction, state sales tax deduction, marriage penalty deduction, unreimbursed employee deductions (tools, protective clothing), consumer loan interest deduction for some home owners and renters.

Discriminatory provision on consumer loan interest deduction results in some home owners being able to deduct interest on education loans, car loans, etc., while other home owners cannot and renters cannot.

IRAs reduced.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi desire to speak?

Mr. STENNIS. If the Chair will indulge me just a minute, I do want to address the Chair and ask for some time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Mississippi.

INDUSTRIAL REVENUE BONDS

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate very long. I do have some remarks that I want to make here relating to—but not asking at this time for an amendment for the change—what we call the industrial bonds where we have had and will continue to have to a degree some exemption from taxation for the interest that they earn.

I am a great admirer really of the bill here that has been developed by our valued Finance Committee and by the additional Members of this body who worked with that Finance Committee. I think from the mass of trouble, contradictions, and defects that were found throughout our entire taxing system it is an amazing achievement for our membership of the Committee on Finance to be able to take the present law and make such additions thereto as they saw fit and mold that into what is largely a constructive, a meaningful, and what I think is a fair instrument. By this new bill we will control the finances of what is in many respects the most powerful nation in the world carrying on activity that is hardly equaled, much less excelled, by any other modern nation.

When I say it is truly a great achievement, I point to it with pride in their achievements and their accomplishments. They had a great deal of help. They had the help of the President of the United States and the other officials. They had the help of those in the congressional branch of our great Government, those who were requested and those who volunteered whether requested or not.

These was a spirit of need and serious realization that something must be done. This all led to what I believe is the finest spirit of cooperation, determination, and reason that brought forth this bill.

Here on the floor where every Member rightfully has a chance to offer amendments, criticism, and constructive contributions whenever possible, we have had this high-level discussion. We have had helpful debate. But we have not had a destructive approach so far as I can determine. The press has certainly been silent if there was anyone here who did not want to be constructive. I think it is the finest illustration of the operation of our system, by my close observation and slight participation, in meeting a problem head on and finding what I believe is a solution.

A big part of the surprise was that everyone that I observed who considered offering amendments was very careful in wanting to be constructive at every turn and wanting to strengthen rather than weaken. They were approaching the problem from every angle with pride but with great caution and restraint.

I find that is the great sentiment among the people.

□ 1310

Without trying to be an expert on judging public opinion, to a great degree anyway, I found the finest kind of response and spirit on behalf of most of those among the people that are being heavily taxed—and some of these changes made their taxes even heavier. But I am proud of the constructive response that seems to have been generated. People want things controlled in such a way as to generate this fairness and soundness and preserve and protect our country.

We realize that we are in trouble in a financial way, not in trouble that cannot be solved, of course, but there are pressures on our financial system that puts it under a strain that could lead to much worse consequences. There is a realization of the need for the people to cooperate, to bring about a solution, rather than a further aggravation of this problem.

I rejoice, with that spirit. And I want to emphasize, too, there was a lot of restraint here by the membership with reference to offering amendments. They did not want to undermine or tear down or destroy, but to strengthen our tax laws and solutions to the problem. And I think we have come to a new milestone. It was needed and will bring fruits of a fine kind.

Now, I am interested in seeing something further be done with reference to the way we dispose of the problem here that relates to our industrial revenue bonds. They are really small amounts by comparison. They are designed primarily, or were originally at least, for small issues of bonds by small government units, whereby the people could put a bond security on their own property and pledge the repayment with interest. The money would go to build or increase the size of a small factory or improvement of some kind in that community and afford jobs.

That is what the whole thing is about—affording jobs for the people that lived in that commuity. They already had a home, humble as it might be. They had their purposes. They had a place to live. They had a chance to improve their lot and, through these small bonds, great progress was made.

Now, it is something that I am rather familiar with because this type of bond originated in my home State. In 1935, a gentleman, a retired businessman by the name of Hugh White—and I bow to his memory, his constructive work today and thank him and praise him for the great work that he did—went out there and organized that thought that I briefly outlined—he was elected Governor and went on to serve that term and another term with outstanding success—in these small revenue bonds. They were exempt from Federal taxation. And that made it posssible, through the margin of difference there, for these people to carry on in a way that I briefly outlined.

It proved to be a very popular step forward. It helped many other States. Then it got to where it was abused and put to purposes that were not as constructive, that were not as necessary.

We have had many efforts here on the floor, and in the House, too, to remedy this situation that has fallen into misuse.

Unfortunately, this program is set to expire in 1988. The House, tax reform bill does deal with this problem. Instead of letting the time run out in which those bonds would be valid, the House allows the use of these bonds to continue.

Now I had planned to offer an amendment here along with others that are interested—and there are plenty of others that are interested—but we did not. We did not feel like it would be best to put the whole tax issue in jeopardy in bringing in amendments and thereby, at some point, you could have put the bill, or major parts of the bill, in jeopardy. It is a very delicate situation.

I feel confident that this thing can be worked out with more wisdom and with more effectiveness and with more constructive efforts by our highly competent conferees than it could be by the chance method of forcing on amendments.

Anyway, in keeping with much of the spirit of this debate, we decided to go the route that I have outlined, without asking for nor expecting any kind of promises or concessions from those that may be our conferees on this important measure that I feel confident will pass by a highly respectable vote tomorrow afternoon.

I am not trying to set off something, but merely asking for help from our conferees. As one Member of this body, I am asking them to take note of this problem and apply their experience and their wisdom and their willingness, each conferee of the Senate and of the House, to this problem in an effort to work out something that is sound and fair to the taxpayers; that is workable, constructive, and will bear fruit for the people that I have described. I hope something can be done through this larger bill that will meet the problem and help solve the pending problem. I get tired of using that word "problem," but that is the best word that fits the occasion, because there are problems of this kind in many hundreds of small communities and small areas in our 50 great States.

□ 1320

So I trust, Mr. President, that that spirit will prompt these conferees—and I believe it will—to find a base for a system of permitting these bonds to be issued with protection to every other phase of our economy.

Mr. President, the whole purpose of this program is the creation of jobs. This is a tool by which local communities are able to help finance the construction or expansion of factories. This is a program for the little people, for small towns and small companies. The big corporations are already generally excluded from using this program.

The plain fact is that this is the only major tool that many of our smaller communities have available for stimulating economic growth and creating jobs for their people.

I readily confess that there have been some abuses of this program in the past, and I do not seek to defend those. Indeed, over the past several years I have worked with others to see that some of these abuses are eliminated. We have already prohibited the use of these bonds for things like fast-food restaurants, gambling casinos, and liquor stores. We have also subjected these bonds to a per capita statewide ceiling, thereby effectively preventing any massive expansion of the program.

So, Mr. President, I am not opposed to putting careful limits on the use of the bonds. But the answer is not to just let the program die out.

The House bill recognizes the importance of this program and removes this 1988 termination. I hope that the conferees will examine carefully the merits of the Industrial Bond Program and will consider moving toward the house position.

Once again, Mr. President, I commend the members of the committee for the bill they have brought us, and I hope as they work with the House conferees in preparing a final version they will recognize the vital role that tax-exempt industrial revenue bonds play in helping creat jobs.

Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

I yield the floor.

TRIBUTE TO "SCOTTIE" SMITH

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was indeed saddened to learn that my close friend Mrs. Frances "Scottie" Smith, the daughter of F. Scott Fitzgerald and Zelda Sayres, died of cancer in Montgomery, AL, on this past Wednesday.

Mrs. Smith was, herself, a talented writer and contributed regularly to various newspapers and magazines. She also wrote two books, and coauthored a third which was about her parents.

Scottie possessed both an effervescent personality and a great wit which endeared her to everone she met. She was a wonderful, delightful lady. I know that she will be remembered and greatly missed by many both here in Washington, where she lived for many years, and in Montgomery, where her mother was raised and where she has lived for the last 13 years. She is survived by three children, Eleanor Lanahan Hazard of Burlington, VT, Samuel J. Lanahan of Eugene, OR, Cecilia Scott Ross of Avondale, PA, and five grandchildren.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the accompanying article, which appeared in the Washington Post, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

F. SCOTT SMITH, WRITER, AUTHOR'S DAUGHTER, DIES

(By J.Y. Smith)

Frances Scott Fitzgerald Lanahan Smith 64, the only child of author F. Scott Fitzgerald and herself a writer for newspapers and magazines, including The Washington Post and The New Yorker, died yesterday at her home in Montgomery, Ala. She had cancer.

Mrs. Smith, whose nickname was Scottie, lived in Washington for several years and was a figure in society here. For the past 13 years she had lived in Montgomery, the hometown of her mother, the former Zelda Sayre. She was born in St. Paul, in her father's home state of Minnesota.

She grew up in Paris when her father was one of the most popular American writers alive and both of her parents symbolized the carefree life style of the Jazz Age. But by the time the family returned to this country, Zelda Fitzgerald already was slipping into the mental instability from which she never recovered. In the mid-1930s, F. Scott Fitzgerald himself had a nervous breakdown.

Mrs. Smith attended the Ethel Walker School in Connecticut and graduated from Vassar College.

Her father, whose novels included "This Side of Paradise," "The Great Gatsby," "Tender is the Night" and "The Last Tycoon," died in Hollywood in 1940. Zelda Fitzgerald, a painter and writer who published a book, "Save Me The Waltz," died in a sanitarium fire in North Carolina in 1948.

In her own career, Mrs. Smith worked on the New Yorker's "Talk of the Town" column from 1944 to 1948. She moved to the Washington area in 1950 and was a writer for the Democratic Digest, a publication of the Democratic Party Central Committee. She was a reporter for the Northern Virginia Sun before joining The Post in the early 1960s.

At this newspaper she covered the Washington social scene and wrote a series of Peace Corps operations in Africa. In the mid-1060's, she did a twice-weekly column for The New York Times on Washington society. She was the author of two books and in 1974 was the co-author of "The Romantic Egoists," a journal of photographs of her parents and clippings about their lives.

Mrs. Smith said in a recent interview that being the daughter of a celebrated author opened many doors for her but that it also had its drawbacks. "I've always said jokingly that it was the best-paid part-time job in the world," she said. "It has been hard work sometimes because it encompassed the whole period when my father got extremely popular."

Despite the stories of her parent's seemingly endless partying, she said, "They were always very circumspect around me. I was very unaware of all this drinking that was going on . . . I was very well taken care of, and I was never neglected. I don't consider I had a very difficult childhood at all. In fact, I consider it a rather wonderful childhood."

Her marriages to Samuel J. Lanahan and C. Grove Smith ended in divorce.

Survivors include three children by her first marriage, Eleanor Lanahan Hazard of Burlington, Vt., Samuel Jackson Lanahan of Eugene Ore., and Cecelia Scott Ross of Avondale, Pa., and five grandchildren

WHERE HAVE ALL THE PATENTS GONE?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, they say that necessity is the mother of invention.

But if there ever was necessity for invention, it is created by our $148 billion trade deficit.

In this country, we need a rebirth of the ingenuity and invention that made this country the world's foremost economic power.

But in recent years, we seem to have lost the spirit that caused us to be the world's invention leader.

That point was made clear by an article that appeared in last Friday's New York Times entitled "Where Have All the Inventors Gone?"

That article notes that foreigners now own 44 percent of all patents filed with the Patent Office.

Between 1961–85, the share of U.S. patents granted to foreigners skyrocketed from 11 percent to 44 percent.

In other words, foreigners are beating us at our own game.

The article reminds us of famous inventions of the past—Thomas Edison's printing telegraph and Lucy Andrew's improved safety pin.

It even reminds us that Abraham Lincoln built an 1849 model of a device for lifting vessels over shoals.

Lincoln may have been a better statesman than an inventor—the device was never marketed—but it illustrates an important point; the inventive spirit touched all of America in those days.

We need that same spirit again.

We need to encourage research and development, which leads to commercial patents.

We need to ensure greater intellectual property protection abroad, so that American inventors have an incentive to create.

In short, we need to rekindle that American inventiveness that was the spark to America's economic power.

I ask unanimous consent that the article from the New York Times, "Where Have all the Inventors Gone?", be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHERE HAVE ALL THE INVENTORS GONE?

(By Barbara Gamarekian)

WASHINGTON, June 19—Is inventiveness on the wane in this country? Where is that old creative, enterprising American spirit?

Two exhibitions that open to the public Friday at the Smithsonian's Museum of American History could prompt such questions.

One, in celebration of the 150th anniversary of the 1836 Patent Act, is "Patent Pending: Model of Invention," made up of more than 100 miniature working models of 19th-century inventions that were submitted with patent applications. These range from Thomas Edison's printing telegraph and Lucy Andrews's improved safety pin to Hannah Suplee's sewing machine needle and Abraham Lincoln's 1849 model of a divice for lifting vessels over shoals. The safety pin, telegraph and sewing machine needle are still with us. But Abraham Lincoln, it seems, was a better statesman than inventor.

FOREIGNERS GET 44% OF PATENTS

A second exhibition, "Invention and Enterprise," traces the invention of 10 objects, ranging from a cotton gin to a walking robot, to illustrate, said Deborah Warner, its curator, "that there are many steps between the fire of genius and getting a product on the shelf."

The Patent Act was enacted at the threshold of a sustained period of American economic and industrial growth, but in recent years the United States patents granted to foreigners have quadrupled, from 11 percent in 1961 to 44 percent in 1985.

Commenting on this recently, Senator Charles McC. Mathias Jr. of Maryland said that at a time when solutions are being sought for our growing trade deficit, "we are losing our competitive edge to foreign nationals who are increasingly taking advantage of our patent system and beating us at our own game."

NECESSITY WAS THE MOTHER

In the 19th century, the inventing fever was such that the Patent Office had on hand more than 200,000 patent models, stored in cabinets, stacked on desks.

"In the beginning, people invented out of necessity," said J. Morgan Greene, the vice chairman of the United States Patent Model Foundation here. "They invented a gate latch so that the cows couldn't get out of the pasture, or a hook so that the coat wouldn't fall off the wall. They began with necessity and then they invented for profit, making things for money. We were a nation of tinkerers and our inventions dazzled the world."

The Patent Model Foundation is starting a search for original patent models thought to be scattered in attics, schools, offices and private collections around the country.

Fires at the Patent Office destroyed about 76,000 of the models, and most that survived were later packed in crates and stored, only to be sold at auction by the Government in 1925. Today the Smithsonian's collection numbers about 10,000. It is uncertain how many other models still exist, but the officials' estimate is 100,000.

$20 MILLION TO RECOVER MODELS

The Patent Model Foundation was founded two years ago with the express purpose of raising $20 million to recover these models and return them, along with a $10 million endowment for their care, to the Smithsonian.

In addition, the foundation announced today a "Rekindle the Spirit" fund-raising campaign for * * * interest in technology.

"Hopefully it will cause those juices to start flowing," said Mr. Greene, "We've become too complacent, too fat and sassy."

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM F. MATSON

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, it was with great sadness that I learned last week of the death of William F. Matson of Mechanicsburg, PA. Bill was serving Pennsylvania's rural communities as president of the Pennsylvania Rural Electric Association and also the Allegheny Electric Cooperative before his untimely death.

Bill and I worked closely on a broad range of issues. In all his endeavors, Bill's extensive experience and knowledge made him a valuable adviser to me and many others. He has served as a vice president of the Consumer Federation of America, chairman of the Pennsylvania League for Consumer Protection, and president of the Great Lakes Electric Consumers Association. I was particularly impressed by Bill's deep concern for the well being of the families the Pennsylvania REA serves. Hundreds of thosands of rural Pennsylvania enjoy a higher standard of living because of Bill's work.

Mr. President, I will miss Bill Matson very much. My sympathies are with Bonnie Matson and Bill's five children. I hope that Bill's dedication to public service, and the good he brought to so many families in Pennsylvania, will console them in the coming weeks and inspire those who knew this fine man.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the unfinished business.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3838) to reform the Internal Revenue laws of the United States.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Pending:

Grassley-Dole modified Amendment No. 2148, to provide an exception for trucks, tractor units, and trailers which a privately held truck leasing company headquartered in Des Moines, Iowa, contracted to purchase in September 1985.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, what is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is No. 2148, as modified.

Mr. DOLE. Is that the Grassley amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the Grassley amendment. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. As I understand, Senator GRASSLEY is here. Senator PACKWOOD is in the cloakroom. Senator METZENBAUM is here. I think Senator METZENBAUM wanted to be heard on the amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 2148

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I had asked this amendment be held up in order that we might satisfy ourselves that it was not some new cutout or some special provision that was not warranted.

As the amendment has now been described to me, it involves a company that bought a number of trucks in 1985, and actually will not put those trucks into service until after the tax bill's effective date.

I think it is one of those situations where the transition rule is appropriate. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment (No. 2148) was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I have addressed this body on sereral occasions in regard to the aspects of the bill—the tax bill, that is—as it deals with a major industry in the United States and in my State, that of agriculture.

I have received several letters regarding this act and its effect on agriculture. These letters were written to me prior to our consideration to that bill. These letters basically ask that the bill not be changed. These letters were written to me by the Pork Producers' Association and by the National Cattlemen's Association stating the extent to which they liked this bill. They hope—particularly those things that have dealt with the bill closing loopholes by which agriculture has really evolved into one of the major tax sheltering industries in the country by those outside of agriculture—that those aspects will not be changed so that those tax sheltering features of existing law are closed down.

Now, as we have reached a time agreement on this bill, I am happy to say with the amendments that can be offered yet, that it does not look to me like any amendments will be offered that are in any way going to weaken that bill. I think we can tell the farm organizations that are interested in this bill passing that it is going to pass pretty much as it came out to committee in this respect and to their liking.

But, Mr. President, I would take this opportunity to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Iowa Pork Producers, and also from the National Cattlemen's Association, so that their statement in support of this legislation will be part of the record.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IOWA PORK PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION,
June 3, 1986.

Hon. CHARLES E. GRASSLEY,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR GRASSLEY: We are writing in deep appreciation of the role you played on the Senate Finance Committee in closing Farm Tax Shelters. We are most concerned about the efforts on the floor of the Senate to weaken this proposal. Efforts to accelerate depreciation on single purpose agricultural structures as well as watering down or delaying implementations of the limitations on the reduction of passive losses, cause our organization great concern. If the latter is inevitable, we urge that the committee proposal be retained at least for agricultural segments of the proposal.

We also wish to request your help in reaching Senator Dole on these issues. Enclosed is a letter to Senator Dole. We ask you to read the letter and if appropriate, personally deliver it to Senator Dole with your endorsements.

Your efforts are most appreciated.

As always, we appreciate the opportunity to put forth our concerns. If I may be of any service, please feel free to contact me at anytime.

Sincerely,
RICHARD VANDE HAAR,
President.

NATIONAL CATTLEMEN'S ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, June 3, 1986.

Hon. CHARLES E. GRASSLEY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR GRASSLEY: On behalf of the National Cattlemen's Association, I would like to extend our support of the Senate Finance Committee Tax Bill. Tax reform that makes across-the-board changes treating all industries equally, is desirable and achievable.

The cattle industry is a capital intensive business and we commend you, the Committee and your staff for focusing on fundamental changes that will allow us to fairly compete with other industries for capital. Your special interest in the cattle industry is appreciated by our Tax Committee Chairman, Jimmy Powell and all cattlemen. A more level playing field will provide economic investors an opportunity to compete more equitably with tax motivated investors.

A capital gains rate for certain assets such as breeding livestock and land is a concern to the cattle industry. The loss of this preferential rate for livestock is acceptable so long as rates stay at 15% and 27% plus no other type of asset qualifies for capital gains. The issue of land sales, that occur by voluntary or involuntary liquidation, is something we would like to see addressed by the Conference Committee.

We want to work with you to ensure that report language is sufficient to cover the bases but doesn't take a shotgun approach to a rifle target. You have put together a tax reform package that is indeed reform. Keep up the good work, and the National Cattlemen's Association looks forward to a continued positive relationship as the Bill proceeds to final passage later this year. Your support and interest in the cattle industry is appreciated.

Very truly yours,
DON BUTLER,
President.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

15/27/33 COALITION MEMBERS WHO HAVE GIVEN UP ISSUES TO SUPPORT THE TAX BILL WITHOUT AMENDMENT

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, a broad based coalition of over 700 business organizations and interest groups support this bill without amendment. Perhaps a mistaken impression was left the other day that the reason some of these groups support the bill without amendment is because these groups were not adversely affected by the Senate bill and have won all their wishes in this bill. Quite to the contrary, the overwhelming majority of this coalition is comprised of groups and companies who have dropped requests for amendments to support the bill as a whole. They have done so on the understanding that others would also forgo such efforts to obtain special amendments.

Let me give you some specific examples—and these are just a few:

American Association of Retired Persons: Would have supported amendments increasing tax benefits for senior citizens.

Allied-Signal: Would have supported an amendment changing accounting rules on minimum taxes.

American Electronics Association: Would have supported a capital gains amendment, changes in depreciation, installment sales provision and R&D allocations.

American Farm Bureau, National Cattlemen's Association, The Grange: All would have preferred changes in depreciation, capital gains and indexing and would have worked for such amendments, but are not in the interest of the whole bill.

Association of General Contractors: Would have supported changes in the passive loss provisions.

CEO Tax Group: Would have supported amendments to increase 401(k) contributions, and a dividends paid deduction.

Chamber of Commerce of the United States: Would have supported an amendment on minimum taxes, capital gains, investment tax credits, IRA's, blended rates, and pension provisions.

Johnson and Johnson: Would have supported an amendment on foreign taxation issues.

J.C. Penneys, Chrysler, and hundreds of retailers supporting the bill: Would have supported changes in consumer interest rules.

National Association of Manufacturers [NAM]: Would have supported amendments on ITC's and military taxes.

National Machine Tool Builders' Association: Would have supported an amendment on minimum taxation.

Computer and Business Manufacturers Association: Would have supported amendments on depreciation, installment sales, and section 861 R&D allocations.

Amway: Would have supported amendments on deleting the limitation on inhome offices expense and foreign tax credits.

Edison Electric: Would have supported amendments on depreciation.

Bread for the World, Lutheran Council of America Church Women United, and dozens of our other charitable groups: Would have preferred full deductibility of all charitable deductibility of all charitable deductions for itemizers and nonitemizers alike.

American Bankers Association and the U.S. League of Savings Institutions: Would have supported amendments to restore IRA's, change consumer interest provisions, investment tax credits, corporate minimum taxes, and changes in foreign tax credits.

National American Wholesale Grocers Association: Would have supported an amendment that would have changed the provisions on capitalization of inventory.

National Taxpayers Union: Would have supported IRA restoration.

The Coalition on Women and Taxes, Representing 38 organizations who care about women, children, and families: Would have supported amendments expanding indexing of dependent care credit.

Center for Budget and Policy Priorities, Bread for the World, ACORN, and the League of Women Voters: Would have supported changes in the bill making the tax rates more progressive.

These are just a few examples of what would have happened if agreement among the various interested groups had not been reached in support of no major amendments. If you think this bill has taken too long to pass after 2 long weeks, we would be here far longer if all these groups had been in the Halls working their particular special interests.

If we begin to adopt amendments that insert special interests into this bill, we will be doing a vast disservice to this great coalition that has made significant sacrifices in support of genuine tax reform. And I can guarantee, if we go too far several of these coalition members will begin to say enough is enough. If the Senate begins to make concessions to one group then others will demand theirs as well—and the bill will start to fall apart.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include a list of the entire coalition that is supporting this bill in its entirety even without major amendments, even though if they had their wishes in the best of all possible worlds they are all amendments they would like.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1350

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, at this time I would like to express certain concerns I have on the pending legislation, as to how it will impact on middle America, on working men and working women in middle-income brackets. I have already discussed this issue with the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee and had told him of the specific concerns which I have and materials that I am going to refer to because, Mr. President, I believe it is very important that if and when enacted—I concur it would be very likely at this juncture this legislation will be enacted with some modifications in conference—we will have to monitor very closely what the impact will be of new tax legislation on middle America.

□ 1400

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article published in the Philadelphia Inquirer on Sunday, June 8, 1986, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The Philadelphia Inquirer, June 8, 1986]

BOTTOM LINE ON TAX PLAN: MILLIONS WOULD PAY MORE

(By Donald L. Barlett and James B. Steele)

Robley J. Johnston is a 65-year-old retired Presbyterian minister who lives in a Center City apartment and works part time as a sales clerk at Strawbridge & Clothier to supplement his retirement income.

Johnston's adjusted gross income last year amounted to $13,325. He paid $920 in federal income taxes. If the Tax Reform Act of 1986 currently being considered by the Senate becomes law, his tax bill would rise to $1,360—an increase of 48 percent.

Ronald W. Reagan is 75 years old. His adjusted gross income last year amounted to $394,492. He paid $122,703 in federal income taxes. If the Senate tax bill becomes law, his tax payment would fall at least $26,000—a minimum reduction of 21 percent.

Sen. Bob Packwood (R., Ore.), chief architect of the Senate Finance Committee's revolutionary tax proposal, has said the legislation, which provides just two rates—15 and 27 percent—will "reduce everybody's taxes."

And Sen. Bill Bradley (D., N.J.), one of the bill's guiding forces, preached fervently from the Senate floor last week:

"Tax reform is about hope: hope for low-income people striving to give their families the chance of a better life; hope for the elderly struggling to get by on fixed incomes, hope for young couples priced out of the American dream of homeownership, hope for the worker who has lost his job and whose future depends on a growing economy."

An Inquirer analysis of tax data shows that under the legislation the Senate will begin formal debate on tomorrow, taxes would go up rather than down for many Americans.

Millions of taxpayers who file itemized returns—including senior citizens, working-class families and individuals, professional couples and even some low-income wage earners—would see their taxes rise.

Overall, at least one in four, and perhaps as many as one in three, middle-income Americans who now shoulder the brunt of the tax burden would pay higher taxes.

The losers would also include many of the elderly, the blind, the disabled, the ill and the unemployed.

The potential winners include six million poor people who would be dropped from the tax rolls, millions who do not itemize returns, and the unsheltered wealthy, like President Reagan, whose numbers are counted in the tens of thousands.

Apart from tax cuts for the wealthy and tax increases for many in middle America, the tax bill would add inequities to a code already riddled with inequities.

Consider a sampling of losers and winners compiled in The Inquirer survey:

LOSERS

About 9.5 million individuals and families filed returns reporting more than $19 billion in unemployment-compensation income in 1983, the most recent year for which such Internal Revenue Service statistics are available. Of those returns, six million were filed by individuals with incomes below $20,000, and 3.4 million with incomes from $20,000 to $50,000.

Under present law, unemployed married couples do not have their unemployment benefits taxed unless the combination of benefits and income from other sources exceeds $18,000. For a single person the limit is $12,000.

The Senate Finance Committee bill ends this exemption and requires that all unemployment compensation payments be taxed. The committee explained its reasoning this way: "When wage-replacement payments are given more favorable tax treatment than wages, some individuals may be discouraged from returning to work."

The finance committee estimated that the change would produce an additional $3.2 billion in tax revenue over the next five years. Although the committee did not identify who would pay the higher taxes, more than 90 percent of it would come from people earning less than $50,000 a year.

WINNERS

Each year, corporations issue stock options to reward key executives. Under this arrangement, an executive receives an option to buy, say, 4,000 shares of a company's stock at $50 a share. Later, if that stock is selling on the open market for $100 a share, the executive may exercise the option, paying $200,000 for the stock, and immediately selling it for $400,000, earning a $200,000 profit.

Under present law, the executive would pay ordinary income taxes on the $200,000 profit. Since the typical executive is in the 50 percent tax bracket, that means the potential tax liability would be $100,000.

Because the Senate Finance Committee bill lowers the top tax rate from 50 to 27 percent, the tax liability on most corporate stock options would fall 23 percent. Thus, the executive's tax liability on the $200,000 profit would drop from the current level of $100,000 to $54,000.

(Profits from the exercise of some stock options may be treated as a capital gains at present, and thus qualify for a reduced 20 percent tax rate. But these are offered in a minority of stock-option plans. Furthermore, they carry with them other financial costs and risks).

LOSERS

The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 provided a new deduction for a family in which both the husband and wife worked. It was intended to reduce the "marriage penalty" that increased taxes when a couple with relatively equal incomes married and to provide a "marriage bonus" that reduced taxes when individuals with relatively unequal incomes married.

The Joint Committee on Taxation said at that time that "Congress believed that alleviation of the marriage penalty was necessary because large tax penalties on marriage undermined respect for the family by affected individuals and for the tax system itself."

The Senate Finance Committee bill would abolish the deduction, thereby generating an estimated $26.2 billion in additional revenue for the government over the next five years.

Although the committee says proposed changes in the standard deduction would "compensate for the repeal" of the two-earner deduction, IRS statistics suggest that this will not be the case for millions of families, especially when other proposed tax-law changes are factored in.

For 1983, 22.6 million families claimed the two-carner deduction. Of that number, 5.1 million had incomes under $20,000, and 14.7 million between $20,000 and $50,000. These two-income groups accounted for 87 percent of the families who benefited from the provision. The 2.8 million families with incomes over $50,000 who took the deduction accounted for the remaining 13 percent.

The total dollar value of the deduction that year amounted to $19.6 billion. Families with incomes under $20,000 claimed $1.8 billion, families with incomes between $20,000 and $50,000 deducted $13.7 billion, and families over $50,000 deducted $4.1 billion.

WINNERS

Tax-law writers speak a different language from most people, and the Senate Finance Committee staff is typical. For instance.

"Subsection (b) (2) shall be applied by substituting 'Jan. 1, 1992' for 'January 1, 1991' in the following cases . . .

(ii) in the case of approximately $900 million worth of Boeing 747-400s, with respect to which a taxpayer headquartered in St. Paul, Minn., had placed a firm order as of Jan. 1, 1986 . . ."

Translation: The Senate Finance Committee cut a deal for Northwest Airlines by exempting the company from provisions of the tax-revision act that would apply to other taxpayers.

The nearly 1,500-page Senate tax-overhaul bill is laced with dozens of similar provisions that are designed to help those with sufficient influence to carve out their own individual loopholes.

But lawmakers are reluctant to identify the beneficiaries of special treatment, so the provisions generally read like the following:

"Subsection (b)(2) shall be applied by substituting 'October 1, 1986' for 'January 1, 1989' and by treating special tools placed in service by an automobile manufacturer that was incorporated in Delaware on October 13, 1916, as property having a class life of 7 years.

"The amendments made by section 201 shall not apply to a laundry detergent manufacturing facility, the approximate cost of which is $13,200,000, with respect to which a project agreement was fully executed on March 17, 1986."

"The project is undertaken by a company incorporated on October 17, 1898, and involves modernization of a chemical pulp mill, groundwood pulp mills, and paper machines."

"A project is described in this clause if the estimated project cost is approximately $39,000,000 and at least $2,000,000 of construction cost for such project were incurred before September 26, 1985."

"Such project is part of a flat rolled product modenization plan which was initially presented to the Board of Directors of the taxpayer on July 8, 1983."

LOSERS

Elimination of the current deduction for state and local sales taxes, the Senate Finance Committee estimates, will generate an additional $17.5 billion in revenue over the next five years. This change, Sen. Packwood maintains, will take a greater toll on the wealthy than on low- and middle-income individuals and families.

"It is the sales tax that is claimed as an itemized deduction by far and away the highest income groups," says Packwood. "I don't know why the difference. Maybe upper-income people keep better records or receipts of what they do and lower income people don't. . . . That is the one that is most claimed by the upper-income people."

IRS statistics offer a contrasting perspective. A total of 28.6 million individuals and families with an adjusted gross income under $50,000 accounted for 75 percent of the $12.7 billion in sales tax deductions claimed in 1983.

More significant is the relationship between the sales tax and overall itemized deductions. For taxpayers with incomes of $20,000 to $25,000, for example, the sales tax amounted to 4.7 percent of total deductions. For those with an income of $500,000 to $1 million, the figure was 1.3 percent. And for those in the million-dollar plus class, the sales tax deduction amounted to eight-tenths of 1 percent of itemized deductions.

In other words, the sales tax deduction was, proportionally, more important to taxpayers with smaller incomes.

WINNERS

Of the 56,000 oil- and gas-drilling partnerships in operation during 1983, about 23,000 reported a combined net income of $5.9 billion, while 33,000 reported a combined net loss of $9.5 billion.

Many of these billions of dollars represented paper, rather than actual, losses, thereby enabling investors to reduce their taxable income from other sources, or to push their tax liabilities into the future, thus gaining interest-free loans from the government.

Other tax shelters, like limited partnerships that invest in movies and cattle, operate on similar principles. While the Senate Finance Committee bill curbed some shelters, especially in real estate and agriculture, it left the oil and gas ventures essentially intact.

This is especially good news for the nearly two million mostly upper-income individuals who invest in oil- and gas-drilling projects. And it is equally good news for people like Nelson Bunker Hunt, whose family name is synonomous with oil and wealth.

It was, in part, such oil and gas-related deductions as intangible drilling expenses, drywell costs, depreciation and foreign tax credits that enabled Hunt to reduce his federal income tax bills for 1975–77 to less than $10 for the three-year period. (IRS challenged some of the numbers, maintaining that Hunt should have paid about $129,000 in the same period.)

LOSERS

Elimination of deductions to Individual Retirement Accounts, according to Senate Finance Committee projections, will produce an additional $25.5 billion in revenue over the next five years. Sen. Packwood explained the reasoning for ending the IRA deduction for most people this way:

"Of those with gross incomes of $40,000 or below, 10 percent file for IRAs. Of those with gross incomes of $40,000 or above, 50 percent file for IRAs. And I'm not going to support any effort that taxes everybody so that those who make $40,000 or above can deduct their IRAs. That is not fair and not equitable."

A large proportion of upper-income taxpayers do use IRAs. But in total numbers many more with lower incomes take advantage of the retirement shelter.

Of the 13.6 million returns with IRA deductions filled for 1983, 10.5 million—or 77 percent—came from taxpayers with incomes below $50,000. Furthermore, those returns accounted for $23 billion of the $32.1 billion in contributions.

In other words, of the 13.6 million taxpayers who would lose the IRA deduction, 77 percent have incomes under $50,000—and more than half under $40,000—while 23 percent have incomes above $50,000.

The finance committee further justified its decision by saying that taxpayers not part of a company pension program can continue to deduct $2,000 annually for contributions to their IRA.

WINNERS

Many corporations offer executives and salaried employees a deferred compensation program popularly known as a 401 (k). While similar to an IRA. It is generally far more valuable. Under such plans, employees exclude from their taxable income a percentage of their salaries invested for retirement.

Unlike IRAs, many corporations match part of the employee's 401(k) contribution, so that if a middle level manager puts $6,000 a year into a 401(k), the company might add an additional $1,000. Like IRAs, interest on the combined $1,000 yearly contribution accumulates tax-free until the employee retires and begins withdrawals.

The finance committee retained the 401(k) provision, explaining in part that it believed "such deferred arrangements should be supplementary retirement savings arrangements" and "not be the primary employer-maintained retirement plan."

Ralston Purina Co., whose products range from Purina Dog Chow to Wheat Chex and Twinkies—adopted a 401(k) plan in 1983. The company has annual sales of about $6 billion and its work force numbers nearly 50,000.

But the Ralston Purina 401(k) covers only executives, sales, administrative and clerical employees and other salaried employees. It does not cover production workers.

Salaried personnel may put in up to 16 percent of their salaries with the company chipping in 50 cents on the dollar up to a maximum of 4 percent of the employee's salary. A Ralston Purina executive earning $100,000 a year could put $16,000 a year in, while the corporation would contribute $2,000.

The 401(k) program is in addition to a corporate pension plan, meaning that employees taking part would, upon retirement, be eligible for benefits that had accumulated tax-free under the retirement and savings plans.

Under existing tax law, Ralston Purina production workers also could supplement their pensions with an IRA. But under the Senate tax proposal they would not be eligible to exclude from their taxable income IRA investments to supplement their existing pensions.

Everyone covered by a private pension plan—executives and production workers alike—would be barred from deducting IRA contributions.

But corporate executives, midlevel managers and salaried workers—with some notable exceptions, a 401(k) is seldom offered to union members—would still be permitted to deduct 401(k) contributions, even though covered by a pension program.

The Senate Finance Committee would place a $7,000 limit on an employee's annual contribution. But even so, the 401(k) deduction would remain more than three times greater than the existing IRA writeoff.

Here is an explanation of this seeming inequity from Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole (R., Kan.):

"If you're in a what we call a 401(k) pension plan, which is pretty much the same as an IRA, you can't get another deductible IRA of $2,000. If you're not in a [pension] plan, you get a full deductible IRA. So, all we've said is that, you know, you shouldn't have a double dip."

A major claim of the bill's authors is that it virtually eliminates tax shelters. "Shelters are gone; very minor exceptions, but they're gone," says Sen. Packwook.

But that assertion appears to be contradicted by a single section of the Tax Reform Act of 1986. It is called the "minimum tax provision" which, in theory, requires taxpayers to pay some amount of income tax, regardless of how effectively they take advantage of loopholes to shelter their income.

The finance committee proposed tougher minimum-tax requirements that it estimates will produce an added $6.4 billion in revenue over five years, most of all that from wealthy taxpayers.

Here is how the senators explained the importance of the minimum tax:

"The committee believes that the minimum tax should serve one overriding objective: to ensure that no taxpayer with substantial economic income can avoid significant tax liability by using exclusions, deductions and credits. . . .

"The ability of high-income individuals . . . to pay little or no tax undermines respect for the entire tax system. . . . In addition, even aside from public perceptions, the committee believes that it is inherently unfair for high-income individuals . . . to pay little or no tax due to their ability to utilize various tax preferences."

The very existence of a minimum tax, as well as the need to toughen its provisions, is evidence in itself that loopholes will remain a fixture in the tax code. A tax system free of preferences and, indeed, shelters, would have no need for a minimum tax.

If this version of the minimum tax should prove effective, it would mark a congressional first. For nearly 20 years lawmakers have sought with little success to force sophisticated users of shelters to pay taxes.

In 1969, tax-reform fever gripped Congress much as it does today, touched off in a speech by Treasury Secretary Joseph W. Barr, who then told the Joint Economic Committee:

"We face now the possibility of a taxpayer revolt if we do not soon make major reforms in our income taxes. The revolt will come not from the poor but from the tens of millions of middle-class families and individuals . . . whose tax payments now generally are based on the full ordinary rates . . . .

"People are concerned and indeed angered about the high-income recipients who pay little or no federal income taxes. For example, the extreme cases are 155 tax returns in 1967 with adjusted gross incomes above $200,000 on which no federal income taxes were paid."

That disclosure, perhaps more than any other single event, served as a catalyst that brought about the Tax Reform Act of 1969, hailed—like the 1986 version—as the most massive overhaul in history.

The 1969 act included the minimum-tax provision, carefully crafted to guarantee that not one wealthy taxpayer—let alone 155—would escape IRS collectors through tax-avoidance schemes.

Nevertheless, a growing number of wealthy individuals have continued to avoid any tax.

A study by Treasury's Office of Tax Analysis shows that 321 Americans with incomes above $200,000 reported no tax liability for 1983. The ranks of the non-taxpaying rich have swelled 107 percent since 1969. The study says:

"Actual numbers of non-taxable, high-income returns for 1983 reached the highest levels in recent history. Their proportion continued, at an accelerated pace, the steady upward creep occurring since 1979."

Whatever the future holds for upper-income individuals seeking to avoid payment of all taxes, the Senate Finance Committee sees only tax cuts for everyone who is not playing the shelter game, especially middle-class America.

As Sen. Bradley puts it:

"This bill lowers middle-income families' tax rates. . . . It also cuts their taxes. And it says to these families: You keep more of the money you earn."

The predictions of benefits to the middle class made by Bradley and other members of the Senate Finance Committee are based, in part, on the fact that many millions of Americans do not itemize and thus most will not be hurt by the bill's elimination of selected deductions.

"About 60 to 65 percent of the people do not itemize. They could care less whether you have deductions or not. They don't take deductions. And most deductions are taken by people significantly above the average income level in this country," said Sen. Packwood. In short, anyone who itemizes is presumed to be well off.

While it is true that the affluent are more likely to itemize, middle-income groups account for the largest share of dollars deducted. Those with incomes between $50,000 and $100,000 itemized deductions totaling $60.8 billion. Taxpayers in the $20,000-to-$50,000 range reported deductions nearly three times that amount, or $167 billion.

Even those with incomes under $20,000 listed deductions of $45.5 billion, or more than twice the $20.2 billion taken by persons between $100,000 and $500,000.

Significantly, taxpayers who itemize carry the biggest share of the burden. In 1983, they accounted for 73 percent of individual income tax collected.

The pending tax legislation has targeted itemizers across all income brackets. As a result, millions of middle-income, and even low-income, families and individuals will pay higher taxes, while those upper-income Americans who do not rely extensively on shelters will pay lower taxes.

The reason:

Many low-income Americans already pay taxes at a lower rate—courtesy of the existing multiple-bracket system. For example, a couple with a taxable income of $12,000 currently is taxed at 9 percent. For them, a 15 percent tax rate translates into an immediate tax increase.

This is especially true when the deductions the committee intends to eliminate—such as those for sales taxes, credit-card interest, two-earner couples, IRAs, reduced medical-expense allowances, union dues and other miscellaneous deductions—are taken into account.

This means taxpayers who itemize and already are paying below the two proposed rates automatically will be confronted with a higher tax bill.

Witness Robley Johnston.

For nearly a quarter-century, beginning in 1955 Johnston served as general secretary of the Committee on Christian Education for the Orthodox Presbyterian Church.

Johnston cared for his aging parents in the later years and after their deaths, his father in 1972, his mother in 1977, he sold the family home in King of Prussia and moved to Center City.

About the same time, Johnston resigned from his church post and withdrew the $12,000 he had in the church retirement plan. That money, plus the $40,000 gain from the sale of the house, represented his entire retirement nest egg.

His income from investments based on that nest egg yielded $8,800 in interest, dividends and capital gains in 1985. His part-time job at Strawbridge & Clothier produced an extra $4,500 in income. In addition, he received about $4,800 in Social Security income, which is not taxable.

Johnston is one of the more than 40 million individuals who itemized their deductions. The deductions totaled less than $4,200, below average for someone in his income class.

But under the Senate tax-overhaul plan, Johnston would lose enough of his deductions so that he no longer could itemize. Furthermore, the Senate bill would end the double exemption for those age 65 and over. The result: an instant tax increase.

President Reagan, on the other hand, would enjoy a hefty tax decrease thanks to the lowering of the top tax rate from 50 to 27 percent—a shift that places the very rich in the same tax bracket with millions of middle-income Americans.

Because the President, like most upper-income individuals, has access to a variety of tax-planning options, his tax bill could fall even further than $26,000.

Tax authorities say the President could conceivably shift some of the itemized deductions he would lose under the Senate bill, such as $33,000 in legal fees for his blind trust, to another line on his return.

If the President's return were calculated in a manner most favorable to him, his tax bill could decline as much as 26 percent—from $122,703 to $91,000.

As for Robley Johnston, he is somewhat chagrined about the prospect of a tax increase.

"I'm not asking for a tax reduction," says the soft-spoken Johnston. "I just don't want an increase."

But the worst may be yet to come.

One of the great unspoken advantages of a two-rate tax system is the case with which tax increases may be imposed.

Richard Musgrave, professor emeritus of public finance at Harvard, and now adjunct professor at the University of California, Santa Cruz, describes the possible future:

"By having only two rates, it may well be that you have to end up by getting much more from the lower end than the higher end. You have limited yourself with the two rates."

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the caption on the article summarizes its contents and summarizes the concerns of this Senator. That caption is: "Bottom line on tax plan: Millions would pay more."

The initial conclusion of this article is as follows:

An inquirer analysis of tax data shows that under the legislation the Senate will begin formal debate on tomorrow, taxes would go up rather than down for many Americans.

The article, which is very extensive—and I do not intend to read the entire article—then specifies a number of individuals in the loser category. Under one line of losers, the following is set forth:

Millions of taxpayers who file itemized returns—including senior citizens, working-class families and individuals, professional couples and even some low-income wage earners—would see their taxes rise.

Overall, at least one in four, and perhaps as many as one in three, middle-income Americans who now shoulder the brunt of the tax burden would pay higher taxes.

Another point referred to by the Inquirer article is the losses occasioned from IRA's, individual retirement accounts, a matter that has been the subject of extensive consideration on this floor, a matter which will be costly to many middle-income Americans. It is this Senator's hope that before the bill is through conference, the IRA's will be restored; but in this stage of the record, the IRA's are eliminated, and it is a significant loss to middle America.

Another item specified in this article relates to the advantages under current law for married couples and points out—again under the column of losers—that the Economic Recovery Act of 1981 provided a new deduction for a family in which both husband and wife work. The article continues thereafter:

The Senate Finance Committee bill would abolish the deduction, thereby generating an estimated $26.2 billion in additional revenue for the government over the next five years.

Mr. President, there are a significant number of items which are eliminated under the current Senate version. For example, in addition to the IRA's, there is the interest on consumer and auto loans. There are medical expenses, which would have to exceed 10 percent of the adjusted gross income to be deducted, whereas the current limit is 5 percent. There is the tax deductibility for two-income families, deductibility on the first $200 of dividend income, the preference of 20 percent tax on long-term capital gains. This list is not meant to be dispositive.

Mr. President, a number of these issues were taken up by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] in correspondence which he had with the Joint Committee on Taxation. The Joint Committee on Taxation replied to Senator LEVIN's comments with a letter dated June 10, 1986, and at this time I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAXATION,
Washington, DC, June 10, 1986.

Hon. CARL LEVIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEVIN: This is in response to your letter of May 14, 1986 asking for various statistics related to the individual income tax provisions of the Finance Committee bill.

Table 1 shows the figures produced by our computer analysis on the number of taxpayers with tax increases and decreases under the bill, relative to present law. We believe that these figures suffer from flaws, described more fully below, that are sufficiently serious that we are unwilling to stand behind them as a statistically valid projection of the number of taxpayers with tax increases and decreases under the bill.

Table 2 shows the number of returns projected to claim the deductions for consumer interest, two-earner couples, State and local sales taxes, and medical expenses under present law in 1988. Also shown are the average deductions projected to be claimed on each return in the income class that itemizes and claims that particular deduction. It should be emphasized that the figures for the interest deduction are the result of an arbitrary division of nonbusiness, non-mortgage, interest between consumer interest and investment interest and may be misleading if used to judge the impact of the bill on particular taxpayers.

Table 3 contains distributional data on the deductions for IRAs claimed under present law. Because of data limitations, these figures are for 1984 rather than projected to 1988 like the other distributional data we have prepared and use adjusted gross income rather than economic income to classify tax returns.

Table 4 shows the percentage distribution by income class of the estimated tax reduction under the bill.

Although the figures in Table 1 are a by-product of the computer analysis used to produce our distributional data, we believe they contain serious flaws. Estimates of the number of returns with tax increases or decreases are very sensitive to small changes in tax calculations for individual taxpayers, so that items which lead to only small inaccuracies in average tax cuts could have a substantial effect on estimates of "winners and losers." The statistical problems include:

(1) A numbr of income, deduction, and credit items are imputed to the individual returns on our sample of tax returns. These imputations, while accurate on average, do not take account of possible relationships with many other tax items affected by the proposals. Thus, the number of winners and losers could be affected, for example, if those taxpayers who lose the two-earner deduction are more likely than average to use income averaging. Any such relationship is not reflected in the estimate of the two-earner deduction attached to particular returns in the sample, and, thus is not taken into account in producing the figures shown in Table 1.

(2) A number of pertinent items are omitted from our distributional data because we lack reliable sources. For example, omitted are such items as depreciation, and contributions to 401(k) plans and educational assistance plans. While the omission of these data has only a minor effect on the estimated average tax changes by income class, it could have a substantial effect on particular individuals and, thus, on estimates of the number of winners and losers.

(3) The relatively small size of our sample of tax returns for each income class may be a serious limitation on the accuracy of estimates of winners and losers.

In sum, our data base for estimating the income distribution effects of comprehensive tax proposals has certain limitations. While we believe that these have only a small effect on the accuracy of figures showing average effects by income class and other distribution data you have seen, they may seriously distort, in an unknown fashion, analyses of the number and type of taxpayers receiving tax cuts and tax increases.

Sincerely,

DAVID H. BROCKWAY.

Note.—Preliminary, including Levin computations.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this response from the Joint Committee on Taxation contains a number of tables which show significant losses for many Americans in the middle-income categories. But the letter says that there are so many imponderables and it is so difficult to make these projections that the joint committee concedes the impossibility of any really firm conclusions on this very important issue.

For example, on page 1, the Joint Committee on Taxation says the following:

We believe that these figures suffer from flaws, described more fully below, that are sufficiently serious that we are unwilling to stand behind them as a statistically valid projection of the number of taxpayers with tax increases and decreases under the bill.

Then, referring to certain specifics, the committee points out:

These imputations, while accurate on average, do not take account of possible relationships with many other tax items affected by the proposals.

On page 2, the Joint Committee on Taxation reports:

For example, omitted are such items as depreciation, and contributions to 401(k) plans and educational assistnace plans.

The thrust of the information by the joint committee is that it is realistically not possible to know with certainty what will happen to millions of Americans.

There is cause for concern that this bill will unfairly impact on those Americans.

One of the points which I seek to make at this time is the need to monitor very closely any bill passed by Congress and signed by the President, in terms of what the effect will be on middle Americans. There is great concern, and this Senator shares it, about what the rates should be. This body is about to pass a tax bill with a maximum rate of 27 percent. The President's proposal had a maximum tax rate of some 35 percent, and the House bill has a maximum tax rate of some 38 percent.

There is a real concern as to whether a maximum rate of 27 percent, in the context of the President's proposal for 35 percent, it is really fair on an across-the-board analysis.

Mr. President, I do commend the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee for the outstanding job he has done in shepherding this bill through committee and through the floor of the Senate, to this point, and I commend the members of the Finance Committee for the outstanding work they have done. This Senator does acknowledge the desirability of eliminating the tax loopholes, which we have done here, in order to have income and in order to have resources and capital projected to what is really productive in this country, as opposed to what is a tax saving and what is a tax shelter. There is obviously enormous benefit which would flow to this country from increasing incentives so that productive people will retain more of what they earn.

At the same time, while we acknowledge those laudable objectives in this important legislation, this Senator believes that we will have to keep a very close eye on what will happen to millions of Americans in the middle brackets, as to whether this tax bill will ultimately prove to be fair to those millions of middle-class Americans.

On the basis of the record that this Senator has seen, including extensive conversations with members of the Finance Committee and the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, there are many open questions. I am candid to say, Mr. President, that as of this moment, my strong inclination is to vote in favor of this bill.

And the predictions have been that it will have an overwhelming affirmative vote if not a unanimous vote.

The concerns which I express today are ones which I in previous conversations with the chairman of the Finance Committee invited his comments. But more fundamentally, the concerns I think will have to be very carefully analyzed if, as, and when such a tax bill is put into operation in terms of what will happen as we project out and as we see the impact of this tax bill, because there are so many factors that simply cannot be projected and cannot be anticipated.

The assertion that I will make as forcefully as I can is on the necessity to monitor very closely what the impact of any such legislation will be.

Mr. President, at this I yield the floor and in accordance with the previous conversations which I had with the distinguished Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the committee, invite his comments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thank the Chair and I thank my good friend from Pennsylvania for advising me ahead of time of the subject that he wanted to discuss. Frankly, it makes it easier for me to respond to questions when I have more than a 30-second notice as to what the questions are going to be.

As I said many times on the floor in discussing this bill, we are talking about averages. When you take roughly $105 billion in taxes that are now levied on individuals and you move them over to business, that is $105 billion you have taken off of individuals.

Second, we have closed loopholes mostly on individuals to the extent of about $50 billion and those are on, with almost unfailing exception, wealthy individuals.

So, roughly, we have taken $150 billion either off of low-income or middle-income taxpayers and put it on business and/or closed loopholes on high-income taxpayers. This $150 billion has been used to lower taxes on individuals.

Again, I emphasize on average, because if you were to ask everyone in a room how many people here are average, very few people will raise their hands. They do not think themselves as average or common.

So all I can say is that on average all middle-income taxpayers will get their taxes reduced. I think you can say almost without exception or very few exceptions that those who do not itemize will get their taxes reduced under current law. About 60 percent of the American taxpayers do not itemize. We estimate under this bill that the number of nonitemizers will increase to 80 percent.

So I say to my good friend, Would it be possible for someone who makes $8,000 or $9,000 a year to pay more in taxes? I think it is almost impossible. For someone $18,000 or $19,000 almost impossible. Is there some conceivable circumstance, absolutely on average atypical unusual? Yes.

Let me give you an example, and it took me a while to figure it out because tax lawyers in the Treasury Department and the Internal Revenue Service talk about taxable income. That is not the way the average person talks. When you talk to the average person, you say how much do you make; $15,000 a year, $20,000 a year. They mean gross income. They do not mean how much do they make after you take all your deductions to reach what tax lawyers call taxable income.

I discovered that 4 percent of the taxpayers had their taxes raised when they had zero to $10,000 of taxable income. I could not figure out how until I pursued it. The way they get their taxes raised is that these people have gross incomes of several hundred thousand dollars but because they have up front double declining balance depreciation in real estate and other paper losses, they are able to reduce their gross income to a very low amount of taxable income. These taxpayers who make several hundred thousand a year are able to have less than $10,000 in taxable income. So these people may have their taxes raised, but they are not people making zero to $10,000 in gross income. They are making several hundred thousand dollars, in gross income.

Could you conceivably have a boy or a girl, 18- or 19 years of age, living at home with their parents paying no rent, paying for no food, having almost no costs, buying a relatively expensive car for a small downpayment and having high interest rates to deduct because they bought an expensive car? Could their taxes go up under that circumstances? Possibly. But how many 18- or 19-year-old girls are in a position of buying a $25,000 to $30,000 car while at the same time living at home and paying no rent, paying for no food, having almost no other expenses?

So, is it possible? Yes. But for the great bulk of Americans, over 80 percent will have their taxes remain the same or go down, and most of those are in the middle or lower income class groups. On average, they are going to receive a tremendous benefit.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY. Let me say to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania that even if we assumed the very rare case where someone making $30,000 is paying more tax which would be, say, paying $100 more in tax or $150 more in tax, what that statement tells you is that if you run this bill through the last year in which tax returns are available in the IRS computer in that year that individual would have paid $100 or $150 more in tax. It does not tell you what happens in year 2, 3, 4, and 5.

A quick calculation would show that if those individuals simply earned maybe 10 percent more in the following year or two, they would be much better off under this bill because of the systematic reform than they would under current law, which leads one to conclude that indeed if you earn more you are going to keep more, and I think that the Senator's concern is understood.

I would also point out, though, that we have voted in this body by a vote of about 97 to 1 that the highest priority of the conference would be to increase the tax cuts for middle-income individuals.

So I think that we have a bill that I think is excellent for all income groups and a commitment to work to even make it better. I hope that the Senator would take that into consideration as he ponders what the writers will say about one aspect of the bill or another.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield for a question?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield.

Mr. SPECTER. The issue of reduction is only one of the aspects that this Senator addressed himself to. The other issue is fairness on a fair basis.

If you take table 1 from the letter of the Joint Committee to Senator LEVIN, it refers to the deduction for people in the category of $30,000 to $40,000. I again repeat the infirmities acknowledged by the Joint Committee. It projects a tax saving of $529. On those who earn in the category of $100,000 to $200,000, there is some projection of tax savings of $6,239. For those who earn in excess of $200,000, there is an average decrease projected of $52,535.

The distinguished Senator from New Jersey makes the comments that he does. I would be interested in his judgment as to the relative fairness given the tax history of the United States of progressive tax history with all that that implies. I do not have to amplify that background for the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. There are in the tax reform two standards of fairness and equity. One standard is if you earn more money you should pay a higher rate of tax. That standard is maintained in this bill. And the second is that equal incomes should pay about equal taxes. Under this bill equal incomes will pay about equal taxes. It will be so across the income categories.

I think that the Senator's concern will be alleviated if he would compare current law to this reform package where we have much more assimilated the standard of equal income paying equal tax.

□ 1420

When I am out in my constituencies and listening to my constituents, one of their concerns—I would say one of their prime concerns—is that some people get away without paying any tax and that similarly situated taxpayers pay widely disparate taxes. This bill attacks that inequity in a frontal assault and I think it produces a much fairer bill in terms of equal incomes paying equal tax.

Mr. SPECTER. When the Senator from New Jersey refers to equal incomes paying equal taxes, I do not disagree with that assertion at all. But the thrust of my question goes to the issue of progressive taxation, where, as the distinguished Senator from New Jersey comments, those in the higher bracket pay proportionately more taxes.

I quite agree with a statement made by President Reagan when he met with Senators—and the President met with Democrats as well as Republicans. One of his earlier comments referred to his own experience coming back after World War II at a time when the marginal rates were 92 percent. President Reagan made the comment that the entertainment movie industry that people did not want to work for a dime on the dollar, those in higher brackets. As a result of that, not only were the top stars unwilling to work, but their attitude caused that many of the sound crew and the extras and so forth did not get the job.

I think that, obviously, 92 percent was confiscatory. The President said if you get a dime on the dollar many people do not want to work. And I think there has been tremendous improvement. Six years ago, in 1981, 5½ years ago, the marginal tax was at 70 percent. Kemp-Roth brought that down to 50 percent. This bill is going to bring it down to 27 percent.

And when the distinguished Senator from New Jersey makes the comment that there are different rates, they are different, but they are not much different—15 percent for 80 percent of the taxpayers, 27 percent for 20 percent of the taxpayers. And many people will be paying 27 percent. Well, let us bring it right down. My aunt, who lives in Wichita, KS, said to me on the telephone yesterday: "ARLEN, why will I pay the same tax as multimillionaires?"

So that when the distinguished Senator from New Jersey talks about equal income paying equal taxes, that does not really direct itself to the issue of the progressive matter. And I think there are lots of questions in the minds of many Americans as to why people, who will still be in a rather modest bracket but will pay 27 percent, why should they pay the same rate as the multimillionaires?

Mr. BRADLEY. If I could respond to the Senator, the relative statistic is not what will be the nominal tax rate—70 percent, 50 percent, or 27 percent—but what is the effective tax rate; what do people actually pay in taxes? And the effective tax rate in the present system, which has a top rate of 50 percent, is about 22 percent. That is what people with sizable incomes as a class now pay—over $200,000—about 22 percent in taxes.

And this bill, although it drops the rate from 50 to 27, has an effective tax rate for that class of about 21.6—I forget the exact number, but it is just under 22 percent—consistent with the principle that all income classes should have a tax cut, a small tax cut, under this bill.

But the effective rate is the important rate to focus on. And the way you can maintain the similar effective rate in the reform package as under current law is because you have eliminated the bulk of those tax expenditures that have been used by those wealthy people to avoid paying taxes over the years.

And that is the bargain. The bargain is that you give up loopholes in order to get the rate down. The progressivity of this bill is as good as the progressivity of the current income tax system. So I think that the Senator should be assured on that point. There are other issues involved, but on that point of progressivity, it is the same as the current system.

Mr. SPECTER. When the Senator from New Jersey talks about progressivity—your word; I do not know that it is in the dictionary—in the current bill, that is because of the loopholes, but if it would take away the loopholes and the tax preferences, why should we end up without much in the progressive differential?

Mr. BRADLEY. If it is true, let me first say to the Senator, that the will of Congress is simply to eliminate loopholes, you would indeed have a much higher effective tax rate on all income classes, but particularly the wealthy.

Frankly, I have only been here 7 years and the only bill to close loopholes was in 1982. That was a highly contested bill. If you look at the history, since 1954, there has not been a bill to significantly close loopholes pass the Congress.

And the bargain of this bill is you give up loopholes and you get lower rates. And I think that that is the message and I think it is a message worth giving.

Mr. SPECTER. At what point, if the Senator from New Jersey knows, does the 27-percent rate become effective?

Mr. BRADLEY. The 27-percent rate becomes effective on a joint return at $29,300, I think, or $29,600 of taxable income. But, of course, the term right there is "taxable income." If you are a family of four, that means that you could earn up to about $43,000 before you are pushed into the 27-percent bracket. So it is on taxable income, $29,300, $29,600, and the economic income is $43,000. People out there think in terms not of taxable income but in terms of economic income.

Mr. SPECTER. Well, take the figure $43,000, that is the point at which the 27-percent tax is paid. The question is—and I think this body is about to answer in the affirmative, yes—but the question is, Should the 27-percent figure apply to a couple earning a total of $43,000 and be applied to a couple earning $1 million? I take it the Senator from New Jersey thinks the answer to that ought to be yes. Frankly, I have a question about it.

Mr. BRADLEY. Whether the Senator from New Jersey thinks that or not, he does believe that the lower rate is the proper carrot to give all taxpayers, and this body is willing to take a step that it has never taken before, which is to eliminate the bulk of the loopholes. So, to facilitate that end, it is important to have the carrot out there of 27 percent.

Mr. SPECTER. Could we get the job done with a smaller carrot?

Mr. BRADLEY. If I look at the Senate votes, the answer seems to be, "Not now."

Mr. SPECTER. Does the Senator from New Jersey think that it is correct, though, to have a 27-percent rate apply to a married couple with a $43,000 gross income and a couple with a $1 millon gross income?

Mr. BRADLEY. As I said to the Senator when he asked the question the first time——

Mr. SPECTER. I repeated it because I did not hear an answer.

Mr. BRADLEY. At this time, the Senate is prepared to accept that rate as a carrot to get at what is one of the—I think the major—disparities in the Code, and that is equal incomes do not pay equal taxes. The rate is the carrot to force people to give up loopholes and this body to vote to eliminate those loopholes, and then make the system much fairer from the standpoint of equal incomes paying equal taxes.

The debate has traditionally been framed, when it came to taxes, in the terms the Senator from Pennsylvania is framing it, and in those terms had been framed thusly in other aspects of this debate and on other days in which the bill was debated.

But the important point, I think, is that equal incomes will pay equal taxes. Not only is that the prime concern of people out there, but the circumstance of somebody who is in poverty paying more in dollars in taxes than a millionaire will no longer happen with this bill. Equal incomes will pay equal taxes.

The phenomenon of the same income paying a much lower tax, I think, eats away at the core of the system. It eats away at people's trust in Government. It leads people to say, you know, "Politicians are all catering to the special interests."

I think what this bill will do will be to cleanse the political climate and to allow us to look at a tax system that has been reformed in a way that addresses the prime concern of people out there.

Mr. SPECTER. I totally agree with the distinguished Senator from New Jersey about people who have equal incomes and paying equal taxes. But I have a question in my own mind about the prospect of having the same tax rate apply to a couple which earns $43,000 as opposed to the American couple earning $1 million or $2 million or $10 million. I asked the question twice. I do not think there was an answer. I will not ask it a third time.

But, Mr. President, what I sought to do here is to express concern as to what the impact will be on working men and working women in middle America. All too often the results of what happens does not take their interest into account. I know what this Senator thinks it will do, and I know the Internal Revenue Service and the Finance Committee will take a very close look, and monitor what the impact of this tax bill will be on middle America. Perhaps there will be another day for evaluating how big a carrot we really need.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that further proceedings under the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COHEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

□ 1500

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I know some of our colleagues on both sides have been to the floor and talked with the chairman about working out a way to dispose of their amendments, either through acceptance, not offer them, or whatever. As we look at the list, there are probably 35 or 40 amendments that have not yet been offered. I am not certain how many of those will be offered, but again I urge my colleagues, the managers of the bill are willing to stay here today to dispose of as many amendments as possible. Again, I would point up, as the distinguished minority leader, Senator BYRD, did the other day, if we do not start disposing of amendments, it is going to be 3 o'clock tomorrow, we will have a lot of amendments piled up, and we will not be able to go to final passage at 4 o'clock. So I urge my colleagues, if at all possible, to come to the floor this afternoon. We are prepared to come in early tomorrow to accommodate our colleagues, but there again there must be some willingness to come to the floor and take up the amendments.

So without naming those who have amendments pending, I think it is safe to say that two or three Senators have more than one amendment, in fact I think three Senators have 20 of the 40 remaining. I know they are working with the chairman, but hopefully we can be in good shape tomorrow and then we do hope, if we pass the tax reform bill, we will go on to the supplemental appropriation sometime tomorrow evening and dispose of that.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the majority leader yield just for a question. I was listening in my office. Did I hear the majority leader indicate he expects to work beyond the normal closing hour of Monday night at 6 o'clock? Is that his intention this evening?

Mr. DOLE. If no one shows up, it will not be my purpose, but I indicated there is a willingness on the part of the managers to do that, no votes but at least stay here until beyond 6. It is only 3 now. I would think those who had amendments could dispose of them before 6.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I think that is perfectly reasonable. The Senator from Ohio is prepared to remain on the floor and does have an interest in those that might be offered, but I hope we would not be called upon to stay when others have had a chance all day to call up their amendments.

Mr. DOLE. I agree with the Senator from Ohio. The only point I was making, if they do not do it today, tomorrow may be very short. There are a number of Members who would like to make statements on the bill itself—no amendments, just make statements—and that will take some time. What we are hoping to avoid is a little pile of amendments at 4 o'clock that have to be voted on before we go to final passage. I know there is one rather important Member to this whole proceeding who has to leave here about 6:30.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the leader. Do I understand he expects to get started early in the morning on the bill?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Is it anticipated we will be taking up amendments at that time? We have committee hearings scheduled.

Mr. DOLE. It is hoped we will be taking up amendments.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Those of us who have committee hearings tomorrow morning would like to be protected so we can get back when this matter is considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader having suggested the absence of a quorum, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

□ 1600

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I am going to be speaking briefly on the tax reform bill and why I shall be voting for the tax proposal tomorrow at 4 o'clock when that vote comes.

I think it is clear that the American people need and want meaningful tax reform. The Senate tax bill is not perfect, but I think it is a big step in the right direction. I think the Senate-House conference on the tax bill will make further improvements in it, but the bill I think, as it stands now, brings more fairness to our Tax Code. It closes many tax loopholes and provides tax relief for the American people. I believe that in the conference, we will win the fight to save the IRA's and I plan to vote for the bill when the note on passage comes.

In addition, I have talked with the Governor of my State, Gov. Jim Blanchard, who has informed me that the Senate tax bill, if enacted, would enable the State of Michigan to reduce the State income tax rate from 4.6 to 4.4 percent. The Governor indicated that if the Federal tax reform bill passes in substantially the same form as we see here, in the Senate, he will officially move to lower the State tax rate in Michigan by that amount. That would give us the lowest tax rate in our State since 1975.

The Governor has sent me a letter to that effect, which I received at noon today.

I think there are two areas of the tax bill that really do need improvement in the Senate-House conference, and I have spoken to the Senator from Louisiana and others about this. The first is to restore the IRA tax deduction, the front-end tax deduction. The second is related to that, and that is to put in a greater measure of tax relief for middle-income people.

We have passed two sense-of-the-Senate resolutions in each of these areas that I think are very important to guide the conference for the Senate. Both of those resolutions give top priority—and those are the words used, "top priority"—by Senate conferees to seeking restoration of the IRA deductions on the one hand and on the other, to improving tax relief to the middle class.

I offered the middle-class, sense-of-the-Senate resolution. I shall repeat now the text of that, because it was only one sentence long:

It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate conferees on the Tax Reform Act of 1986 give the highest priority to increasing the tax cut for middle-income Americans.

When that sense-of-the-Senate resolution was put to a vote on the Senate floor, I am proud to say the vote was 94 to 1. I think that binds the Senate, if you will, behind that proposition. I think it binds the conferees to go and fight for that position in the conference.

I might further say that in my discussions with the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, I was told that it was very important that a sense-of-the-Senate resolution be put to a vote here. So there was some clear expression of the thinking in the Senate on the whole issue of how middle-income taxpayers are to be treated in the bill that is forthcoming.

I want to repeat one thing about the IRA's, the individual retirement accounts. What past history shows is that 72 percent of all the money contributed to IRA's comes from taxpayers in the country earning less than $50,000 a year. To me that is significant because it shows the lion's share of money coming to the IRA's is contributed by people below that level and the bulk is contributed by people in the broad middle class and, for that matter, people struggling to get into the middle class.

About $175 billion has already been contributed to IRA's since they came into existence. I think that is a remarkable performance by the people of the country, putting money away for their future retirement and creating a large savings pool. This is a stable kind of savings pool from which, in turn, we can make some of the needed investments in the country—product improvement, productivity improvement, innovation, capitalization. All these things are needed if we are going to deal with our trade deficit and our international trade position. They are helped by virtue of the fact that people contribute to IRA's and we have that kind of savings pool for national investment.

I might further say that people need the IRA investment money for their retirement years. We are finding, happily, in this country that people are living longer; that with better medicine and other knowledge that we have about health, the lifespan of people is getting longer and longer. As a result people have more years after retirement in which to live, hopefully enjoyably, and they need more income as a result of the fact that they are living longer. And so this is another great virtue of the IRA. It is a supplement to Social Security income and to private pensions, if people are fortunate enough to have those—many do not.

As we have seen in the past, because so many people do not invest in the IRA until just before tax time when they know they have to, as an incentive to make that IRA saving, the front-end tax credit against their income tax for that year is one of the things which causes so many people to go ahead and make that saving in the form of an IRA investment.

It is not easy for many people to do it because you have to set the money aside, you have to take it out of your current living standard, if you will, and put that money away for a long period of years, but it is important that people do that. It is important they do it for themselves. It is important for the country. That is one of the reasons why I think it is very important we restore the tax credit on the IRA's in the Senate conference.

I want to repeat that 28 million Americans have now taken out IRA's and as knowledge of them broadens throughout the country I think we will see even more people taking them in the future, which is all to the good. It is good for them and it is good for the country as a whole.

I want to make an additional point. Last year, feeling strongly that tax reform was something the country should address and should try to accomplish, after the President had proposed his legislation I went out to the State of Michigan and over a period of several months conducted 19 public tax forums across the State. Those meetings lasted anywhere from 3 to 5 hours and I would say that we had as many as 300 to 800 people at these different sessions. We stayed until everybody who had a comment to make or wanted to raise a question or try to get an answer had a chance to do so. I estimate that in the course of those 19 meetings I probably had the chance to talk face to face with 4,000 to 5,000 citizens of Michigan on tax reform. As a result of those discussions, I have also received an enormous volume of mail since that time because people's interest and awareness of tax reform has been higher.

I can say, based on all of that citizen input, that the things people said they most wanted, were; namely, preservation of the mortgage interest deduction on a personal home, the elimination or the avoidance of taxation on fringe benefits, and the ability to continue to deduct State and local property taxes. All of those items have been preserved in this tax bill.

In addition, they said they wanted a stiff and meaningful minimum tax on high-income people and high-income corporations that at the present time have been paying no tax and dumping off their tax burden on everybody else, and therefore driving up everybody else's tax rates and tax burden.

What this bill does, by bringing to bear and into creation a significant minimum tax on high-income individuals and companies, is raise enough additional revenue that we can really afford to provide significant, across-the-board tax relief for everybody else.

By getting people to pay their fair share, as it should be, those who have been carrying an extra burden get a chance to put down that double burden because they will have lower marginal tax rates and also certain other improvements in terms of the personal exemption and the personal deductions.

I might say—it has been repeated before; it bears mention here—that some 80 percent of the taxpayers will be at the 15-percent tax rate on the margin.

I will finish at this point by saying I think this tax bill, while it is not perfect, is a big step in the right direction. I think it is going to make the economy work better.

I think we are going to see more growth. I think we are going to see a substantial improvement in fairness in the Tax Code. It may well be that later on down the line, when the conference committee has had a chance to make its changes and improvements—and I have mentioned the ones I think need to be made and I think will be made—as this revolutionary set of tax changes has the chance to work, we will have to come back and make further adjustments to it. I fully expect that will be the case. But we will have broadened the tax base, we will have put people on a much fairer footing with respect to one another, and I think we will have restored for the American people a large measure of confidence in the tax system.

Now, do I like the retroactivity feature? No; I do not. I do not think it ought to be in here. There are other elements of the tax bill which I would rather not see here. But like any enormously complex piece of legislation, it cannot reflect just the views of one Senator or even 100 Senators. It has to reflect, finally, the views of everyone in this branch, the 435 House Members, and those in the administration. And so we are bound to get something that is a composite. The final test has to be, is that composite, on balance, a positive one? Does it take us forward? On balance, is it a major improvement over the existing situation?

I think it is. If we were to vote against it, in effect, we vote for the status quo. If we vote down this bill, it has the effect of saying we want to keep the tax laws as they are today, riddled with loopholes and riddled with unfairness.

I do not think we want to say that. I think we want to say, on the contrary, we want to clean away as much of that as we can. This bill is a major improvement in those respects. As I said, there are one or two other things we hope to accomplish in the conference, and I hope and expect we will.

I conclude with a word to the members of the committee who have worked on this bill. I think enormous credit goes to them and to staff which worked so hard. We have come this far because of a lot of good work.

The journey is not over yet. There is more to be done. But I think we can take a sense of pride in the effort we are making. I believe the country will be better off for this tax reform package, and the people of the country will realize that, as these tax changes are enacted and have a chance to work.

I yield the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from Michigan to say that he has a letter from the Governor of Michigan encouraging a vote for this bill?

Mr. RIEGLE. If the Senator will yield, I received a letter from Governor Blanchard about noon today which reads as follows. It is very short. I think the chairman of the committee will find it interesting. Governor Blanchard and I, I might say by way of background, had been discussing this issue previously. So he wrote to me and said as follows:

> In light of our previous discussions on the federal tax reform now pending before the U.S. Senate, we appreciate all of your efforts in trying to fashion a bill which provides meaningful and fair tax reform.
> And as I mentioned to you over the phone, should Congress pass tax reform in substantially the form that is before the Senate now, I will lower the income tax rate in Michigan from its current 4.6% level to 4.4%. Therefore, let me again lend my support to the federal tax reform since it would provide a cut in Michigan's tax rate to its lowest level since 1975.
> Sincerely,
>
> JAMES J. BLANCHARD, > Governor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Let me say to Governor Blanchard that I appreciate the letter very much. This is exactly what every State that has piggybacked on the Federal system can look forward to. They can either say, "There is going to be a windfall in State revenue, we are going to take the money, collect it and spend it," or they have the opportunity to lower the rates and eliminate some of the loopholes as we have done.

I think the Governor of Michigan has taken a wise position in what he intends to do, and I hope that other States faced with the same situation simply would not sit back and say, "Here comes a windfall if we don't change the laws at all because the Federal Government has closed the loopholes in the tax structure."

Again, I thank the Senator from Michigan and I thank the Governor.

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank the chairman.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I want to express my support for the tax reform bill that is now being considered by the Senate. I congratulate the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Senator PACKWOOD, and the other members of the committee for producing a bill that will dramatically revise—and substantially improve—our tax system.

For too long, our Federal income tax system has been too complex and filled with esoteric provisions benefiting special interests. Over and over I have heard my constituents say that the tax system is unfair, that the wealthy are not paying taxes, that middle-income persons pay higher effective tax rates than America's largest corporations, and that the tax laws are riddled with loopholes. My constituents, like Americans all over the Nation, are frustrated by the current tax laws.

I believe that the complexity and special interest provisions of our Tax Code have cost us a great price: they have made the American public lose respect for our tax laws. Honest, hard-working taxpayers have been made to feel like fools. While they dutifully pay their fair share of taxes, others use exotic write-offs, creative tax shelters, and investment schemes, the vase majority of which are legal, to reduce their tax liabilities.

Plato once said:

> When there is an income tax, the just man will pay more and the unjust man will pay less on the same amount of income.

Mr. President, by making the average taxpayer feel that everyone else except himself or herself is getting a break, we are tempting the just man to become the unjust man. We are making them ask "Why should I pay my taxes? Everyone else who is better off than I am is paying less in taxes. The name of the game is to beat the system." The spiraling trend of more and more tax benefits, more and more tax loopholes, has caused the American public to lose faith in the tax system. When taxpayers perceive the system to be unfair, they, too, want to stop paying taxes, even if it means not reporting their income accurately. This widespread perception of our tax system can jeopardize voluntary compliance, which has been essential to our tax system since its inception.

Mr. President, I believe that the bill we are considering today will go far in restoring faith in our tax system.

This bill will make our Tax Code fairer, more efficient, and less complicated. It accomplishes these goals in several ways:

It eliminates many tax shelters, and reduces tax rates, so that decisions in such areas as sales, purchases, and investments will be based more on economic considerations and less on how they will affect one's tax bill;

It adds a tough minimum tax on corporations and wealthy individuals who now pay too little Federal taxes—or even no taxes at all. I was an early supporter of a stronger minimum tax and am pleased that such a proposal is included in this bill, as well as the House of Representatives' tax reform bill;

It shifts approximately $100 billion of the Federal income tax burden from individuals to corporations;

It would create a vastly simplified tax structure, with 80 percent of all taxpayers paying a tax no higher than 15 percent, and the remainder of taxpayers paying rates no higher than 27 percent; and

It would lift 6 million low-income households—many of them below the poverty levels—off the Federal income tax rolls and would provide a more equitable distribution of the tax burden.

The bill before us does all of these things while preserving many tax provisions that are widely used by average taxpayers, such as the mortgage interest deduction, the deduction for State and local income and property taxes, and the charitable contribution deduction for itemizers.

Mr. President, you can't rewrite our tax system without making some hard choices. Like any comprehensive tax reform bill, the one before us today will not please everyone. Some individual and corporations—especially those who have been big winners under the current tax system, may find that some of their tax benefits are no longer available. This, however, may be the inevitable price of revamping our tax system. The long, impressive list of corporations and organizations supporting this bill—many of whom lose tax benefits they enjoy under the current tax laws—illustrates that many are willing to give up something to achieve an overall fairer tax system.

While I enthusiastically support this tax bill, I do not believe it is perfect. I am particularly concerned, for example, that the bill, as reported by the Finance Committee, will be devastating to low-income housing projects upon which thousands of very poor families, both in my State of Maine and nationwide, depend heavily for basic housing needs. Although the bill moves in the right direction by adopting a tax credit for low-income housing investments, the credit in the committee bill is unworkable by denying the credit to projects that receive other forms of Federal subsidies. Making projects that receive funding from the Farmers Home Administration's rental rural housing program, HUD, and other housing programs ineligible for the credits would virtually eliminate all tax incentives for low-income housing. Other changes in the bill would further discourage investment in low-income housing, causing investors to seek more attractive investments. An amendment I will offer with several of my colleagues will correct some of these flaws in the committee's bill and I will hope that several more improvements will be made in conference.

I am also concerned by the bill's effects on existing investments, especially in real estate. While the passive loss provisions of the bill address legitimate concerns, the bill goes too far by applying these rules to people who made investments, in good faith, on the basis of what the law was at the time of the investment. Changing the rules in the middle of the game is unfair to many investors who are now locked into their commitments and will cause taxpayers to wonder whether they can ever rely on existing laws in making investments.

Finally, I believe that comprehensive tax reform legislation should retain more tax incentives for retirement savings. Individual retirement accounts have generated over $250 billion in savings since 1981 and have encouraged taxpayers to plan ahead for retirement. Thus, I am pleased that the Senate has adopted a sense of the Senate resolution urging the Senate conferees on the tax bill to give high priority to the restoration of tax incentives for IRA contributions.

Mr. President, while not a total panacea for all our tax ills, this legislation turns us in the right direction of fundamental, comprenhensive tax reform, and I look forward to its passage.

AMENDMENT NO. 2153

"(3) PRESENT VALUE OF FINANCING.—If the rate of interest on any financing described in paragraph (2)(A) (determined by taking into account government subsidies) is less than the rate which is 1 percent below the applicable Federal rate as of the time such financing is incurred, then the qualifying basis of property to which such financing relates shall be the present value of the amount of such financing, using as the discount rate such applicable Federal rate.

"(4) Failure to fully repay.—To the extent that the requirements of paragraph (2)(D) are not met, then the amount of tax of the taxpayer for the taxable year in which such failure occurs shall be increased by an amount equal to the applicable portion of the credit under this section with respect to such property, increased by an amount of interest for the period—

"(B) PRE-1987 INTEREST.—The term 'pre-1987 interest' means any interest in a passive activity held by a taxpayer on the date of the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, and at all times thereafter."

On page 1557, line 25, insert after the period the following new sentence: "For purposes of this subparagraph, the deferral of income to partners for a period of 3 months or less shall not be treated as a business purpose."

On page 1559, between lines 6 and 7, insert:

(2) BUSINESS PURPOSE.—Section 1378(b) (defining permitted year) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new flush sentence:

"For purposes of paragraph (2), the deferral of income to shareholders for a period of 3 months or less shall not be treated as a business purpose."

On page 1559, line 7, strike "(2)" and insert "(3)".

On page 1559, line 20, insert after the period the following new sentence: "For purposes of this paragraph, the deferral of income to shareholders for a period of 3 months or less shall not be treated as a business purpose."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the provision order, the amendment of the Senator from Maine will be considered for 1 hour, to be equally divided.

Who yields time?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield myself such time as is necessary.

Mr. President, this is an amendment to the portion of the committee bill which provides a new tax credit for investment in the development and preservation of affordable housing for low-income American families.

I thank the chairman of the Finance Committee for his help in developing this amendment. I am pleased that we were able to reach agreement on the amendment's provisions and that I can offer the amendment today with Senator PACKWOOD's support.

The housing crisis facing low-income Americans has reached a level unmatched since the Great Depression. Over half of the 8.4-million renter households with incomes below $7,000 per year are paying more than one-half their income for rent. Homelessness, overcrowding, and high-rent burdens are all manifestations of the same crisis—too little affordable housing for the very families most in need of it.

The Tax Code has for many years contained incentives to assist in the development and preservations of housing. Tax incentives for homeowners are traditional and massive, favoring upper- and middle-income taxpayers. Tax deductions for mortgage interest, property tax deductions and other provisions favoring homeownership produce revenue losses of $40 billion to $50 billion annually. Tax incentives for low-income rental housing produce revenue losses of between $1 billion and $2 billion annually.

Congress and successive administrations have long recognized the necessity of using tax incentives to attract private capital to low-income housing development and rehabilitation. These provisions recognize that absent some incentives, investment in low-income housing is a fundamentally uneconomic activity.

The committee bill recognized the need for such investment. It would replace current law tax incentives with a new and innovative tax credit for investment in affordable low-income housing.

The tax credit is highly targeted. The full credit is available only for units which actually serve very low-income families—those with incomes below 50 percent of the area median, adjusted for family size. A lesser credit is available for a limited number of units in any one project which serve families with incomes between 50 and 70 percent of area median income, also adjusted for family size.

The tax credit ensures that rents for low-income renters will be affordable, a protection lacking in current law.

The tax credit insures that units produced or rehabilitated will be available over time for poor renters. Owners are subject to recapture of the credit with penalties if the units are converted to some other use within the first 15 years of the investment. This is a substantial improvement over current law recapture provisions.

Finally, the credit arrangement encourages sponsors to provide the maximum number of units possible for very low-income families. The greater number of very low-income families served, the greater the tax credit available to investors.

I am encouraged by the low-income housing tax credit in the committee bill. I congratulate the chairman for developing and proposing it.

However, the credit needs to be refined to make it workable. My amendment involves three technical changes which will go a long way to ensuring that the credit is actually usable by sponsors of low-income housing.

The first part of my amendment would permit the low-income housing tax credit to be taken with respect to units which are also benefiting from a limited number of other Federal housing and community development programs. These are Community Development Block Grants [CDBG], Urban Development Action Grants [UDAG], Rental Rehabilitation Grants, Housing Development Grants [HoDAG's], and, under limited circumstances, section 8 certificates. All of these programs are administered by HUD. With the exception of section 8 certificates, all of these programs provide funds which are administered by State and local governments to encourage and assist in low-income housing and community development activities.

My amendment would also permit a limited use of the credits in conjuction with direct low interest loans under the section 515 rural rental housing loan program of the Farmers Home Administration [FmHA]. This program is the principal means by which new rental housing is constructed in rural areas. It is an extremely successful and important program in many States, including my own, where rural incomes are low and construction costs are high. Under my amendment, the low-income housing tax credit could only be used in conjunction with units in such projects which serve those below 50 percent of the area median income. No units in these projects could benefit from the lesser credit.

I emphasize that my amendment does not require that these subsidies be made available together with the credit. It merely allows such subsidies to be used to reduce as much as necessary the cost of producing affordable housing for very low-income families. The committee bill does not offer this flexibility.

The combination of these subsidies with the credits may not always be necessary. But I know in my own State and in many others these other subsidies will be absolutely essential to make realistic real estate investments work as affordable housing for very low-income Americans.

The second part of my amendment is designed to help preserve many hundreds of thousands of housing units which have already received Federal assistance in the past, and which now provide some of the limited affordable housing for poor families in the country. This housing was subsidized by HUD under the sections 236 and 221(d)(3) BMIR programs, and by Farmers Home under the section 515 program. In the next 5 years, many of these units will reach their 20th anniversaries. They need new infusions of capital to carry out routine repairs and maintenance.

Without a continuing tax-based incentive for new investors to put up capital, many of these units will be sold for conversion to some other use—for higher income rentals, or for conversion to nonrental housing. Many other units will simply be allowed to deteriorate, and eventually they will have to be taken over by HUD or FmHA, resulting in tremendous losses to Federal insurance and loan funds.

This will result because the limited rents which can be charged under the HUD and Farmers Home programs will not support additional debt or provide a sufficient return to new investors. Therefore, such investments will not be made, and the properties will be lost as low-income housing.

HUD Secretary Samuel R. Pierce, Jr., has characterized these units as "an important Government investment," in a May 22, 1984, letter to the distinguished ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Housing and Urban Affairs. His letter states that:

> The tax benefits available from resyndication * * * have provided a means of obtaining cash contributions from new owners necessary to cure delinquencies, fund reserves and deferred maintenance, and even fund repairs and replacements * * * boilers, roofs, etc. * * * It is clear to me that the interests of the Department have benefited from many of the resyndications of subsidized limited dividend projects * * *

The committee bill as presently drafted would eliminate these resyndications which Secretary Pierce has praised. My amendment would rectify this problem by permitting the use of the credit in conjunction with the sale or transfer of these properties under very limited circumstances. At least half the units in these properties would have to actually be serving families below 50 percent of the area median income, very demanding test, and one which greatly exceeds that applied to new construction or substantial rehabilitation. Moreover, these properties would only qualify for the less generous of the two credits offered under the bill. In order to qualify at all, the properties would have to continue serving the same low-income tenancy for the full compliance period of the credit, creating an important new lease on life for these valuable low-income housing resources. They would also have to have been held by their current owners at least 12 years before they could qualify for the credit—an important safeguard against unnecessary turnovers.

Finally, my amendment would provide a very narrow exemption to the at-risk rules governing real estate investment to enable bona fide nonprofit organizations to use seller and related party financing to preserve or develop low-income housing. This exception requires that any such debt be repaid in full, with interest, and includes other stringent requirements.

This exemption is absolutely essential if the committee amendment is to provide the necessary tools with which national nonprofit organizations such as the Enterprise Foundation begun by James W. Rouse, or the Local Initiatives Support Corporation [LISC] sponsored by the Ford Foundation, can continue their important work. Both of these organizations provide financial and technical assistance to community based nonprofit development groups which are working directly with residents of low-income communities to create and preserve affordable housing opportunities. We should be doing everything we can to foster the kinds of public-private partnerships which these and similar organizations make possible. My amendment will do this.

Mr. President, I point out that my amendment does not address a number of other important issues which I hope can be resolved in conference. There are unresolved questions concerning the amount of tax credit a taxpayer may claim; who may take the credit; and how the use of the credit affects the ability of taxpayers to take full advantage of other provisions regarding passive losses. These are important matters which directly bear on the feasibility of the credit and I hope that I will have an opportunity to work with the distinguished chairman to make further progress on these issues during conference deliberations.

□ 1630

I also want to point out that we have another major outstanding issue, not having to do with the tax credit, which has not been resolved with respect to low-income housing.

We have not yet provided any transition rule for the treatment of passive losses from existing investments in low-income housing. I am concerned about this matter.

As I believe Senator PACKWOOD is aware, low-income housing is different from other real estate. Low-income housing does not provide cash-flow from rents, or the promise of appreciation on sale. Investors are attracted instead by the return they can receive by offsetting their tax liabilities from other income. This was the understanding they had when they undertook, the investment. Many thousands of investors throughout the country are now in the position of having entered into commitments to provide equity payments in limited partnerships for low income housing on which they will not be able to take their anticipated losses under the committee amendment.

These payments are typically due over a 5 or 6 year period and the investors involved in such partnerships expect to receive tax loss benefits during these years when pay-ins are due in order to offset the contributions they make.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; I am happy to yield to the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I want to make sure that I understand the point which the Senator from Maine is making. The committee amendment would restrict all investors' abilities to take passive losses against earned income from existing investments. We have established this as a principal tenet of the committee bill in its entirety in all areas of investment. I know that the Senator from Maine has supported this overall thrust throughout our considerations, both in committee and here on the floor. Is that correct?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct. However, Congress has for years followed a conscious policy of providing special tax benefits for investors in low-income housing activities. It has done so with a very clear recognition of the fact that without such incentives, low-income housing does not offer a realistic economic return to investors.

In fact, the Internal Revenue Service has ruled that investments in low-income housing, which are demonstrably uneconomic, are exempt from the normal test of economic intent under the tax laws. Thus, the IRS has recognized congressional intent to encourage investment in low-income housing through the generation of tax losses. These are the investments for which the strongest and best defense can be made to provide some adequate transition treatment from the passive loss restrictions contained in the committee amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am pleased to yield further.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, would the manager of the bill be good enough to give us who are not familiar with some of the terminology——

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator yield so we can complete this colloquy and then I will be glad to entertain any questions?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator. I am pleased to yield to the chairman.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I appreciate the point that the Senator from Maine has made today with regard to the need for special transition treatment for existing investment in low-income housing. I must say that I agree with the distinguished Senator that low-income housing investments are indeed different than other investments affected by our committee amendment and that they deserve special treatment. I want to assure both Senators that when we take up this matter of transition rules in the Conference Committee I will do my utmost to ensure that these investments receive special consideration. Although I continue to believe that the changes in the committee amendments which lower rates and broaden our tax base more than offset the passive losses which our amendment would restrict in the future, I agree that investments in low-income housing are different from other investments in real estate and they deserve the most favorable treatment which can be provided.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the distinguished chairman for his assurances and the cooperation he and his staff have extended on this important issue.

I also want to express appreciation to the fine work Senator KENNEDY and his staff have provided on this amendment. Their assistance throughout this process has been invaluable.

Mr. President, my amendment also includes further provisions that would raise the necessary offsetting revenue.

The first offsetting revenue amendment would amend the passive loss transition rules to provide that relief from the passive loss limitation is available only to transactions entered into prior to date of enactment of the tax reform bill.

The bill as approved by the Finance Committee would provide transition relief to all investments including those entered into after date of enactment. Such a broad inclusion makes no policy sense and is inconsistent with the intent of the legislation. If relief from the new restrictions on passive losses are provided, such relief should only go to projects which have had no notice of the change in law.

This provision would raise approximately $500 million over the budget period.

The second revenue provision has to do with an accounting provision relating to partnerships and simply modifies a change to present law already proposed by the committee bill. Under present law, as is pointed out in the committee report, partners in a partnership can defer income when the taxable years of the partner and the partnership differ. Under the bill, the taxable year of the partnership must conform to the taxable year of the partners owning a majority interest in the partnership profits and capital, unless a business purpose for a different taxable year can be demonstrated to the Secretary of the Treasury. Where different taxable years exist among the partners, the bill establishes the calendar year as the taxable year for the partnership. The bill also establishes a safe harbor test which would result in up to 3 months of deferral of income, meaning a taxable year ending on September 30 could be utilized.

My amendment simply deletes the 3-month deferral of income provision of the bill and requires that the taxable year of the partnership must be the calendar year, thus assuring that there can be no deferral of income. As under present law, however, a partnership could establish a different taxable year if it can demonstrate a business purpose therefor to the satisfaction of the Secretary. This portion of the amendment raises the necessary additional revenue.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD material with regard to the housing rehabilitation programs and a letter, dated June 11, 1986, from the Banking Committee to the Finance Committee.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHY OTHER FORMS OF ASSISTANCE MAY BE NEEDED IN CONJUNCTION WITH THE CREDIT USING THE CREDIT IN LOW COST/VERY LOW INCOME COMMUNITIES

The Enterprise Foundation is working closely with the Cleveland Housing Network ("CHN") on lowest cost housing rehabilitation using a lease-purchase self-help program with tenants. CHN is a coalition of nine non-profit neighborhood groups working in the poorest neighborhoods of Cleveland. Their programs reach out to the working poor, individuals making under $10,000 per year (full-time at minimum wage is under $8,000 per year). CHN has a Board of Directors drawn from and representative of the neighborhoods it serves, uses extensive volunteer and pro bono services from the community, and raises operating funds from charitable private sector sources.

Until recently, its housing rehabilitation programs have been entirely funded by CDBG funds from the city, but these funds are being cut back and the need of the neighborhoods have grown. Enterprise has worked to keep housing rehabilitation costs low and to use private sector resources in conjunction with CDBG funds to expand production from 30 houses a year to 100 houses a year.

This example is indicative of the lowest cost rehabilitation scenario Enterprise finds in its 26 city, 63 group network across the country.

Income Level Served: $8,000-10,000 per year; 30 percent of Income in rent: $200-$250 per month.

Operating Costs including utilities (Maintenance, heat, light, water & sewer, taxes, insurance, management): $175-$200 per month.

Available for Principal & Interest: $25-$50 per month

Average Rehabilitation Cost: $24,300 per unit. Net Syndication Proceeds (30% of total cost, assures full use of tax credit net of legal, accounting, marketing expenses): $7,290 per unit.

Net Amount to be Financed: $17,010 per unit

Maximum monthly P&I Payment: $50/month per unit. Mortgage Supported (20 years, 11 percent): $4,844 per unit. Gap Financing Needed: $12,166 per unit.

In Cleveland, to meet the needs of the poorest neighborhoods, $12,166 per unit on average is needed from CDBG funds from the city and private charitable sources, to allow one of the lowest cost rehabilitation programs in the country to proceed. Using the Credit in Higher Cost/Higher Income Communities

Our experience in numerous substantial rehabilitation projects in these types of cities shows an average unit cost including acquisition and rehab exceed $40,000 per unit, a more typical example for moderate cost larger cities. New construction is substantially higher. For example, we have designed with a national modular homebuilder, a lowest cost 3 bedroom townhouse at a cost of $48,000 per unit for 170 infill townhouse units proposed in Baltimore. Even though The Enterprise Foundation serves families in the $10,000 income level, let use look at the maximum rent levels permitted under the tax credit proposal.

Income Level Served: $15,000 (Maximum level permitted in Baltimore, Denver or Philadelphia) Maximum Rent: $375 per month.

Lowest Operating Costs: $225 per month.

Available for Principle and Interest: $150 per month.

Average Rehabilitation Cost: $40,000 per unit.

Net Syndication proceeds: $12,000 per unit.

Net Amount to be financed: $28,000 per unit.

Maximum available for P&I: $150 per month. Mortgage Supported (20 years, 11 percent) $14,532. Gap Financing Needed: $13,468.

At the maximum income level and rent, $13,468 per unit must be found from CDBG and private charitable funds to make the projects viable under the tax credit proposals. For new construction and higher cost cities, the gap financing needed merely gets progressively higher. Furthermore, to reach the income levels of minimum wage earners, substantially more gap financing is needed.

Quite simply, wtithout CDBG or other federal funds, few if any new houses will be produced under the tax credit proposal for low-income families.

U.S. SENATE, COMMITEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS,

June 11, 1986.

Hon. BOB PACKWOOD,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Finance, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR BOB: We are writing to express our concern about a provision of the Finance Committee tax bill designed to provide a low-income housing tax credit. As members of the Housing Subcommittee, we have analyzed this provision and found as currently written, it could have disastrous results in the current and future supply of low-income units by not providing adequate incentives for investors to remain in the low-income housing market.

Low-income housing incentives serve prudent public policy by providing a return on investment which is competitive with conventional investment opportunities. Due to the limitations on rents as provided in certain housing laws, the credit currently provided in the Finance Committee bill is insufficient for the development and maintenance of low-income housing stock in America. Without modifications to this section of the bill, over 900,000 existing units would be jeopardized and future development would be difficult at best. This provision could significantly raise the financial exposure of the federal government through increased insurance claims and greater direct subsidies.

The Finance Committee has acknowledged the need for a low-income housing credit as evidenced by the inclusion of this provision in the Committee reported bill. As members of the Housing and Urban Affairs Subcommittee, we would like to work with you and your staff in developing an alternative solution. We feel that it is necessary to establish a more effective credit mechanism with an equitable transitional period, provide a more appropriate application of the passive loss provisions, and remedy concerns we have about the treatment of existing projects which serve low-income tenants.

We appreciate your taking the time to consider our concerns and look forward to working with you towards an equitable resolution.

Sincerely,

Chic Hecht, Chairman, Subcommittee on Housing and Urban Affairs; Jake Garn, Chairman, Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs; Alfonse M. D'Amato, Donald W. Riegle, Jr., Alan J. Dixon, Paul S. Sarbanes, James R. Sasser, Alan Cranston, Christopher J. Dodd, Slade Gorton, Mack Mattingly, John Heinz.

Mr. MITCHELL. I now yield 3 minutes to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I support the amendment of the Senator from Maine and the other cosponsors.

We have stood firm against passive losses, and by that we simply mean people investing in real estate or oil and gas or other areas and offsetting losses, sometimes artificial losses, against other income. This is how millionaires escape taxation, and it results in many, many buildings being built that we do not need, many investments being made that do not need to be made. In the instance of low-income housing, it indeed does not appreciate in value and indeed the rents are fixed. And if we are going to have low-income housing in this Nation for the very poor or those close to very poor, we might as well realize the marketplace itself cannot afford to provide it.

Therefore, if we do not have some incentive, whether it is a Government appropriation program or a Government tax incentive, there will be no low-income housing, and that is why I am delighted to support the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield.

Mr. HEINZ. I associate myself with his comments. I am a cosponsor of the amendment of the Senator from Maine. I think it is a very important amendment as the Senator from Maine and I expressed to the chairman many times in committee.

I want to express my appreciation, Mr. President, to the Senator from Oregon for his in-depth understanding of the problem that faces the production of low-income housing. I think he has stated the special problems and the special needs of low-income housing production and of low-income people.

So I commend him and thank him for this statement. I look forward with him and other members of the conference to having an appropriate further step forward in this area.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thank my good friend, and I hope in conference we can work out a satisfactory solution where we can guarantee there will be low-income housing for the poor and still there is a way to do it to make sure that somehow millionaires did not escape taxation.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I now yield 4 minutes to my distinguished colleague from Maine.

Mr. COHEN. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. President, I will try to be brief and not be duplicative of the statements made by the chairman of the Finance Committee Senator PACKWOOD, and my friend and colleague, the junior Senator from Maine, Senator MITCHELL.

I had the opportunity last year to travel with Senator DOLE to the Far East and as part of that trip we visited with Prime Minister Nakasoni of Japan. I tried to do in Rome what the Romans do. During the course of my stay in Japan, I opened one of the drawers in the hotel room and found the teachings of Buddha, much as we might find the Gideon Bible in any hotel in this country. Fortunately it was bilingual in its translation. I was leafing through it and I came across the quote that said that, "The strength of a nation is derived from the integrity of its homes." I used that particular quote, again in English, the following day with the Prime Minister, suggesting to him that as a result of Japanese trading practices we are losing the integrity of our homes: farmers are losing their farms, men and women are losing their jobs, and people throughout this country are losing their homes. We in this country place a very high priority on owning a home not only for the wealthy and the middle class, but for the poor as well.

I believe it was the author Brett Harte Gary that said that "No one shoulders a rifle in defense of a boarding house because we place a very high priority on home ownership and what that represents."

Mr. President, I think this value should carryover to our tax policies. as well.

My friend Senator MITCHELL, from Maine, indicated that we have tried to abolish tax shelters in this particular bill. But we have preserved some tax shelters. We have preserved some tax shelters for the rich. We have preserved the tax shelter for middle-income people by retaining the deduction for mortgage interest payments. The only people we have not preserved a shelter for are the poor people, the people in the country.

Unless we maintain some sort of balance in our programs, then we are going to find poor people of this country without any hope of any opportunity of ever engaging in the joy and pride of owning their own homes.

A lot of the Members of the Senate have taken to making up charts. If we look to the rear of the room, we will see a chart for an amendment that is undoubtedly going to follow. I suspect my colleague from Pennsylvania who sits in front of me, is about to erect a music stand, not to play the fiddle as housing burns, but to make a point later in the debate. In the interest of Gramm-Rudman, I am not going to offer any charts, but if I did, I could use this chart back here and point to the high mark with that red arrow going down to show what is happening to housing programs in this country. They are going straight downhill.

They are going straight downhill, not only as a result of tax policies but as budgetary cuts as well.

Last year the rural housing program took a 40-percent reduction in budget cuts, more than any other program. As a result of those budgetary cuts and, indeed, the tax proposals currently before the Senate, we can expect the housing in this country to plummet just like that chart shows.

Mr. President, while the tax reform bill before us today is one that I strongly support and one that contains many necessary reforms to make our tax laws fairer and simpler, the bill would have disastrous consequences for existing and future low-income housing projects, on which thousands of very poor families depend for decent housing. The amendment I am cosponsoring with the junior Senator from Maine will go far in ensuring that reasonable incentives to invest in these important low-income housing projects will continue to exist in our tax laws.

The Senate Finance Committee bill repeals the existing tax provisions that encourage the construction of low-income housing such as accelerated depreciation and the ability to deduct interest and taxes during the construction period. The bill would replace these provisions with a tax credit that is highly targeted to low-income housing projects.

As now written in the bill, the tax credit would be available for investors in newly constructed or substantially rehabilitated properties in which at least 20 percent of the units are occupied by households with incomes below 50 percent of the area medium income, adjusted for family size. All units which meet this income qualification would be eligible for an annual tax credit of 8 percent against the depreciable basis of the qualifying units for 10 years. In addition, up to 30 percent of the units that are occupied by families with higher income levels would qualify for a 4-percent tax credit. The committee bill specifies that rent that is charged for any unit qualifying for the tax credit cannot exceed 30 percent of the household's income.

By adopting a tax credit approach for low-income housing, I believe that the Finance Committee is moving in the right direction. Tax credits can be a more efficient and progressive way to attract equity investment to low-income housing than current tax incentives because tax credits can be better targeted and more finely turned to ensure that only truly low-income housing projects reap the tax benefits.

While the intent of the committee is laudable, there is an essential flaw in the bill: the tax credits are unworkable because low-income housing projects receiving assistance from any Federal subsidy program are ineligible for the credit. The bill would deny the credit to any low-income housing project that receives section 515 loans from the Farmers Home Administration for rural housing development, section 8 subsidies, or funds from Federal mortgage insurance programs, or even tax-exempt multifamily housing bonds. It would also mean that if a city decides to use some of its Federal CDBG funds or UDAG grants to fund a low-income housing project, that project would not qualify for the new tax credits.

In addition, the bill severely limits the amount of credit that an investor can take, and denies the credit to investors above certain income limitations. Finally, the bill would phaseout the ability of all real estate investors to deduct passive losses against other types of income over the next 4 years. Although this rule causes many problems for real estate investors in general, the consequences are devastating for existing and future investment in low-income housing.

While the prohibition against "double-dipping" and these other restrictions may sound attractive, they ignore the reality of investing in low-income housing. In practice, there is virtually no production of low-income housing without the use of one, or several, of these Federal programs. I do not believe that this is simply because investors are greedy and want to take advantage of the Government. Rather, it is because there are few market incentives to make investment in low-income housing attractive.

Consider, for a moment, trying to convince someone to invest in a low-income housing project without offering Federal subsidies or tax incentives: you first tell him or her that there may not be enough cash flow to cover actual costs of debt and operations, let alone to provide a return on investment. Add to that the fact that rents are often limited by Government regulation. Third, you must remember to tell the investor that the property is unlikely to appreciate, so that he or she can just about forget about making a profit when selling the development. Given this picture, I think many investors would say that, "Thank you very much, but I think I will invest my money elsewhere."

It is precisely because the economics of low-income housing are so unattractive that the Congress has, since 1949, encouraged the goal of low-income housing for poor people through direct spending programs and tax incentives.

Recently, however, low-income housing, and rural housing in particular, has suffered greatly on the spending side of the budget. Last year, the Farmers Home section 515 rural housing program suffered the deepest cuts of any domestic spending program. If the amendment we are now offering is not accepted, we will have effectively killed the incentives for these projects from a tax side as well.

I am particularly concerned about the effects of these provisions of the tax bill on the Farmers Home rental rural housing program, which is widely depended upon by families in my State of Maine and other States with large rural populations. The demand for rural housing is demonstrated time and time again across the Nation. The 1980 census data shows that there are more than 2.1 million rural families still living in substandard housing. Almost half of these families are below the poverty level. Over 2.6 million rural households with incomes under $10,000 annually pay more than 35 percent of their incomes for shelter. These are the families—the ones who live in areas with no other affordable housing available—who will be hurt by these tax changes.

Ironically, the low-income housing provisions of the bill will hurt the very people we are trying to help, with tax reform; namely, poor Americans. A major objective of the Finance Committee's tax bill is to give tax relief to the very poor. By removing approximately 6 million low-income persons from the tax rolls and by ensuring that people below the poverty line do not have to pay Federal income taxes, this bill goes far in bringing tax relief to the very poor. In our zeal to go after abusive tax shelters, however, we are hurting these very same poor Americans who depend on low-income housing for their basic housing needs.

Mr. President, tax incentives for low-income housing investments do more than just give tax shelters to the rich. they provide necessary, physical shelters for our Nation's poor. If these incentives are removed, investors may find other methods of shielding their income from taxes, but the poor beneficiaries of these projects have nowhere else to go.

If the tax bill is not amended, there will be no incentive for investors to put their money in future, low-income housing projects. This comes at a time when there are more families in poverty, less housing available for them to occupy, and less support from the Federal Government to assist them.

If unchanged, the tax bill will endanger even existing low-income housing projects. Investors may default on the existing capital contributions that are still owed. Some developers of section 515 rural housing units, for example, have told me that they expect a 40-percent default rate on outstanding commitments. Such defaults could trigger foreclosures and claims against the Federal Housing Administration and the Farmers Home Administration insurance funds. Thus, not only would the tenants of these housing projects suffer, but the Federal Government would also by having to pick up the tab for these defaults.

The amendment I am cosponsoring with my fellow Senator from Maine, Mr. MITCHELL, would make the tax credit more workable by allowing new construction and substantially rehabilitated housing projects to be eligible for the new tax credit regardless of whether they receive Federal assistance. The amendment would also allow a credit to be available for transfers of existing properties which are partially or wholly financed or operated by the section 515 Farmers Home Administration rural housing program, and other Federal low-income housing programs. The amendment continues to target the benefits of these credits to only low-income housing projects.

While this amendment will fix some of the most egregious problems facing low-income housing in the bill, much more needs to be done to assure housing for our poorest citizens. The bill's unrealistic limits on the amount of tax credits that can be claimed and the income limitations on investors who can claim the credit in the bill continue to discourage low-income housing investments. Further, the passive loss changes in the bill will continue to jeopardize existing projects and be unfair to investors who responded to the low-income housing incentives provided by the Congress.

I do, however, recognize the limits of what can be changed in this bill on the Senate floor. Over the past few weeks, Senator MITCHELL, Senator KENNEDY, and I—and other strong supporters of low-income housing—have advocated changes to the low-income housing provisions of the bill, but no agreement could be reached on many of these issues. I shall continue to press for these changes during the conference on the bill and urge the Senator conferees to seek further modifications of the low-income housing provisions in their negotiations with the House on this bill.

Mr. President, the Government and the private sector must work together to achieve the goal of decent, affordable housing for families with very low incomes. Adoption of these changes is crucial to ensure that the private sector will participate in this partnership and that we do not unfairly change the rules in the middle of the game for those persons who have already responded to the incentives that the Congress has provided in the past for investments in low-income housing.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank my colleague for his kind words and for the tremendous effort he has made in connection with this amendment.

I now yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I commend the able Senator from Maine for his very skillful work with respect to this amendment involving low-income housing. I am hopeful that certain aspects of it that have not been fully resolved can be addressed in conference. I know of no other issue that is more important.

When we contrast how our economic system works with how the economic systems of other countries work, particularly behind the iron curtain, we always want to point to how successful we have been in housing our people. The context of these programs is perhaps the only way we can successfully address the low-income housing situation and provide decent and affordable housing for the poorest in our society.

I think the Senator from Maine has been aware of that. The chairman of the committee has reflected his sensitivity to it. I am hopeful that this amendment will be adopted and that the conference will be able to address other aspects of this problem in such a way as to ensure that, in a reasonable way, consistent with the tax revision that is before us, we will be able to provide low-income housing for our people and meet a very pressing need.

The other Senator from Maine was abolutely right in saying that the strength of our society rests upon our homes and that this effort to provide low-income housing is a reflection of that.

I commend the Senator from Maine for his work in framing and offering this amendment. I very strongly support it.

I yield back what remaining time I may have to the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Maryland for the effort he has made in behalf of this amendment and in providing affordable low-income housing for all Americans.

I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the quorum call being requested by the Senator from Maine not be charged against either side in order that there may be sufficient time left to debate this issue, because I am afraid the quorum call is going to run out the time.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the Senator from Pennsylvania wonders if, rather than putting in a quorum call, we might transact some other business. Therefore, the Senator from Pennsylvania would ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from Maine be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, and I do not know that I will, but I might ask my friend from Pennsylvania, did he have an amendment he wanted to now offer?

Mr. HEINZ. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator from New Mexico is in the same position, and I have been waiting for about an hour. If we are going to do that, I would have asked that we proceed with an amendment that I was going to offer.

Is there some way, perhaps, that you and I could work that out?

Mr. HEINZ. I am certain we can find a way to work that out.

Does the Senator anticipate his amendment will take a considerable amount of time?

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not think that it should. It may. I have been working on it with many Senators. It is the amendment that would equalize, not as a matter of substantive law, but as a matter of budget considerations, some of the revenue fluctuations that may evolve when this bill finally comes out of conference. That is basically what the amendment would be that this Senator would be offering on behalf of himself and Senator GRAMM.

I have discussed my amendment with the majority leader, with the chairman of the committee, and with various Members who are interested in the issue.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, maybe we could have an informal understanding that, since obviously we all have a lot of things that we want to do and we would like to achieve some order to it, if we could reach the informal understanding that the Senator from New Mexico would proceed and then I would have the opportunity, although nothing is guaranteed on the floor, to proceed after him.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, is all this discussion occurring on my time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, it is not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Thank you.

I believe that it may take just a few moments to resolve the issue that is holding us up dealing finally with the amendment which I have offered. I do not want to impede the business of the Senate, but I would be reluctant to agree to have this amendment set aside indefinitely without any understanding as to when it may come back.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Might I suggest to the Senator from Maine, in the absence of setting it aside indefinitely, that it be set aside until such time as the amendment is disposed of?

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there any way of estimating or knowing how long that would be?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, maybe I could be helpful here.

I ask unanimous consent that the time on the Domenici amendment be 30 minutes, equally divided.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have no objection. I really do not know anybody that is opposing it, but I assume we ought to assign that to someone.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MELCHER. Would it be possible to get in on this lineup, too?

Mr. DOLE. I was just trying to get some time agreement.

Mr. MELCHER. I already have a time agreement of 30 minutes, equally divided, on my amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would like to notify the minority leader, Mr. BYRD, that we are considering a unanimous-consent agreement. I believe he might want to be here and participate in discussion about the time limitations. I suggest that he be notified.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I say to the distinguished majority leader, frankly, it is satisfactory to the Senator from New Mexico if you just arrange that the Domenici amendment go next. You do not have to set the other amendment aside. Perhaps you would want to accommodate the other two Senators. We do not need a time agreement, unless you do, Mr. Leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am wondering, while we are still on the Mitchell amendment, if I might get 5 or 3 minutes from the Senator from Oregon, the chairman.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I would be happy to do that. The time limit we have at the moment is the time limit of the Senator from Maine. We need, without charging the time, a little bit of time to just confer and I think we could solve it.

So, I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay the amendment aside so that the majority leader could have 5 minutes, without the time being charged against the Senator from Maine, and when he is finished we could go back to his amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Fine.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I ask that unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objections? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, first let me indicate that I am going to support the Mitchell amendment, but I do believe it raises the emphasis in the wrong place. It spends additional revenue to make a new tax credit not yet even in the Tax Code more generous, rather than being concerned about the passive loss transition rules which may put developers out of business before they have a chance to use these new credits.

I have talked with a number of developers of low-income housing. I have received a number of letters from developers. They are uniformly more concerned about transition rules being insufficient than they are about whether or not the new housing credit is generous enough.

That stands to reason. If investors decide not to make additional promised payments over the next few years, these developers may go bankrupt. If they lose their ability to survive in the short run, it will not matter how generous a credit we may have enacted.

It is no answer to say that the investors are obligated to make the additional payments and this obligation can be enforced in court. We all know that the legal process takes time. We may find that the developers, especially in low-income housing just don't have that much time under our transition rules.

I also have some problems with the substance of the amendment. For example, the committee bill provides that section 8 housing does not qualify for the new credit. The amendment will allow the credit to be used in certain circumstances along with the HUD subsidy.

This may result in HUD reducing its subsidy for each project, the difference being made up by the tax credit. All this means is that a portion of low-income financing subsidies effectively is placed "off budget".

The amendment also allows the tax credit to be used in conjunction with certain programs which subsidize interest rates. With an artificially low interest rate, investors may pay more for projects than they otherwise would. However, the amendment would not reduce the credit to reflect this increase in value due to direct Federal subsidies.

Mr. President, I support low income housing and I recognize that Federal participation in this type of housing is appropriate, as well as inevitable. However, although the Mitchell amendment may be well-intentioned I believe that he may have suggested too generous a tax benefit for people who will no longer be in business to use it. We should, in my view, pay more attention to transition and allow more time to examine the specific benefit of the credit to determine whether it needs to be made more generous.

As I indicated at the outset, I think this is a view shared by a number of Senators who were concerned about some new tax credit coming up in the code not even in there now, and we are trying to cut back in every other area.

I must say, after having met with—I do not know how many—developers in this particular field, they are going to be out of business if we do not do something on transition rules. They are much more concerned about transition rules than some new kind of a credit and how generous the credit is going to be. But I would guess if there will be an effort to do anything in the conference, we need to make this step.

So I am certainly supporting the amendment of the Senators from Maine, Senators MITCHELL and COHEN. I hope in conference we can refocus on this problem and put our attention to where I believe it belongs, on the transition rules, transition periods, and less on some new generous tax credit that we do not have in the code now.

I suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask unanimous consent that it not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MITCHELL AMENDMENT ON LOW-INCOME HOUSING

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment introduced by the distinguished Senator from Maine, Mr. MITCHELL. The low-income housing tax credit proposed by the Senate Finance Committee is an important improvement change in the Tax Code's treatment of low-income housing investment. I support this credit, and congratulate the chairman and members for constructing such a progressive device to stimulate private investment in housing for low- and very low-income people.

However, Mr. President, the proposal as presented to the Senate is an unworkable one. It will not result in more housing stock for low-income Americans. It will increase the cost of producing low-income housing to the point where the rents needed to retire the development costs will exceed the means of low-income families and individuals to pay those rents. The proposal will jeopardize the work of nonprofit, community based development groups in hundreds of cities throughout the country which are currently producing low-income housing.

In the last 5 years, the Federal Government has withdrawn from providing direct funding for the rehabilitation and new construction development of housing affordable to low- and very low-income persons. HUD and Farmers Home Programs which once produced thousands of units per year through the efforts of large, private sector developers have not been funded in more than 2 years. The safety net for these Americans has been abandoned. Yet the housing crisis for low-income people has not abated. Indeed, it has become worse.

Faced with this shutdown of housing programs, local and State governments have been forced to take up the burden. They have entered into exciting and unique partnerships with nonprofit, community-based organizations to rehabilitate existing housing in neighborhoods; to construct in-fill housing on vacant lots; and to create new housing resources for low- and very low-income tenants in joint ventures with private, for-profit organizations.

These projects use a wide variety of subsidy programs, drawing from local and State funds, private philanthropic contributions, and corporate social investment funds. But underlying nearly every one of these projects has been one source of funding: Community development block grants [CDBG].

These grants, provided to the State or local government by HUD under the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, are put to good use in a wide variety of ways. Sometimes they are used to acquire a site which is then donated to a nonprofit organization to develop as housing. Sometimes they are used to install water, sewer, or electricity lines, curbs, gutters, and streets to make a site suitable for housing use. Sometimes they are used as low-interest, long-term loans to finance rehabilitation work which permit rents to be set at levels that very low-income tenants can afford.

Our current Tax Code encourages the development of these projects by offering tax incentives to attract private investment into such ventures. In addition, Congress has recognized in the past the need to match such tax incentives with other Federal programs, like CDBG, which help lower the ultimate cost of the housing to the tenant.

But the Finance Committee bill would sever this important link. It prohibits the use of tax credits for properties which also receive any other form of Federal assistance, including CDBG or other direct subsidy programs.

Mr. President, this prohibition will make the continued production of low-income housing by nonprofit developers financially infeasible. Without a link between an equity investment incentive and development subsidies, rental housing for very low-income households cannot be developed or rehabilitated.

The changes proposed by Senator MITCHELL would remedy this flaw in the committee's otherwise admirable tax credit proposal. The removal of this prohibition against the use of tax incentives in conjunction with development subsidies is an important step in making the credit workable. I urge my colleagues to support these changes, and to support the low-income housing tax credit contained in the Finance Committee bill.●

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Maine, Senator MITCHELL. This amendment revises and expands upon an important provision of the tax reform proposal before us today, the low-income housing tax credit.

It should come as no surprise to anyone here that we are in the midst of a national housing crisis. The lack of decent, affordable housing is being felt not only by low-income families, who are increasingly shut out of Federal programs each year, but by the handicapped, the elderly, and middle-income families as well.

The crisis we feel today has been brought about in part as a result of the Reagan administration's rejection of the Federal Government's historic role in stimulating the production of multifamily housing directly through Federal spending programs. Since 1981, budget authority for housing has declined by 60 percent.

Mr. President, few areas of Federal policy touch the lives of the less privileged among us as directly as does housing. A decent home at an affordable price is central to the American dream and to our family values. Most of us are lucky enough to take such conditions for granted. But there are millions throughout this country, I am afraid, for whom such hopes are dim indeed.

Ironically, the crisis in housing availability strikes prosperous regions of our country just as surely as areas that are economically depressed. In my home State of Massachusetts, for example, the median price for a new home is $149,000.

At these prices, growing numbers of middle-class families cannot afford to buy. These families displace lower-income families from the available rental housing stock, and push rents up beyond what the working poor can afford to pay. Statistics on number of families who rent, average incomes, average rents, compared to 40 years ago. Also States on the demand versus supply of housing.

Our Tax Code has long recognized the central role that quality housing for all Americans occupies in our social value system. The most obvious testimony to the special place for housing in the Tax Code is that the anchor of American housing policy—the home mortgage deduction—has emerged unscathed from the tax reform debates of the past year.

The incentives available to low- and moderate-income housing contained in the current code are more complex, but the goal of these provisions—increased construction and rehabilitation of affordable rental housing—is as basic as that of the home mortgage deduction.

The tax reform measure reported approved by the House last December, and the Finance Committee substitute now before the Senate both contained provisions which took account of the special role and special needs of low- and moderate-income rental housing. In this regard, Mr. President, I commend the efforts of the chairman of the Finance Committee.

The Committee's proposal replaces existing tax benefits like accelerated depreciation and tax exempt financing with a new tax credit to stimulate the production of low-income housing.

In analyzing the proposal, however, we have found that as is presently designed provisions do not go far enough to ensure the continued production of low-income housing, particularly in areas of the country with high real estate and construction costs.

At the same time, the sudden elimination of passive costs available to individuals who invested in low-income housing projects before the committee's reform were announced poses grave threats to existing housing developments. In Massachusetts, thousands of low-income families could find themselves evicted from developments foreclosed and sold at market-rates if these changes are applied retroactively. Thousands of additional units "in the pipeline" will never even be built.

Indeed, a report prepared for Secretary Pierce of the Department of Housing and Urban Development concluded that—

> Present housing proposals for tax reform can be expected to make housing less available and less affordable especially in tighter housing markets. Investment and new construction in rental housing would fall, and the supply would decline over time because of reduced maintenance of the existing stock and the conversion of some rental housing to ownership status.

One of the most important benefits of the Mitchell amendment will be the preservation of existing multifamily housing stock, and in particular, those multifamily properties financed under the HUD 221(d)(3) below market interest rate [BMIR] program. The 221(d)(3) program provides for insured mortgages to help finance the construction or substantial rehabilitation of low- and moderate-income multifamily rental units. As the initial 20-year mortgages on these properties are retired, absent any incentives to maintain these properties as low- and moderate-income rentals, the properties will more than likely be sold for the best price and converted into market rate rentals, condominiums or luxury rentals. The effect of this action will be the displacement of thousands of current tenants who will no longer be able to afford to live in these properties.

This problem is significant. Massachusetts, for example, has approximately 30,000 units of 221(d)(3) housing stock. As a result of the Mitchell amendment, however, investors will at least have some incentive, in the form of a tax credit, to maintain these properties as low-income rental housing. Through the tax benefits provided by the Mitchell amendment, investors will have some motivation for continued investment in the 221(d)(3) properties.

I support this amendment enthusiastically, and hope that in addition, the conference committee will be able to soften the impact of the passive loss rules imposed retroactively on affordable rental housing projects.●

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I support Senator MITCHELL's amendment. It significantly improves this bill by providing incentives we need to maintain and preserve the privately owned housing that has been built with assistance from HUD and Farmers Home.

In 1949 Congress established the national goal of a decent home and suitable living environment for every American family. Since then, the basic approach of Congress has been to meet that goal as much as possible with privately developed, privately owned and privately managed rental housing.

Since the 1960's, the private sector has produced about 1.8 million units of housing for people whose incomes were too high for public housing but too low to afford market rents. Private investors built that housing as a direct result of Federal incentives, many of them provided in the Tax Code.

There should be no dispute over the need to preserve this country's enormous investment in affordable housing that we have already built.

This is no small issue. It involves hundreds of thousands of apartments located in communities across the country. It affects the housing of about 4 million Americans.

At the current average development costs of roughly $40,000 per rental housing unit, it would cost over $66 billion to replace the existing stock of privately owned, government assisted rental housing. That housing will never be replaced if it is lost. Its loss would be a tragic mistake. It would be fiscal folly that we would regret for decades to come.

This amendment puts incentives in the tax bill for investors to preserve and maintain the existing stock of assisted rental housing.

It improves on the current Tax Code by targeting benefits even more directly on units actually occupied by low-income people. It provides an annual credit of 4 percent, taken over 10 years, on the depreciable basis of low-income housing that is assisted by HUD or Farmers Home.

To qualify, a project has to meet two criteria. It must have over half of its units leased to very low-income tenants—that's a very tight income eligibility threshold. And it must have been last placed in service 15 years before the tax credit is taken—that concentrates the benefits on projects that are in need of renovation.

Without these incentives, one of two unfortunate results will occur. The first, would affect low-income housing that is located in strong markets. Owners will get out of their contracts with HUD or Farmers Home at their first opportunity and convert their projects to market rate rentals or condominiums. If they do, thousands of low- and moderate-income people will be displaced.

The second would affect housing that is physically or financially unstable or is located in economically depressed areas. Owners of such housing are likely to default on their mortgages, causing the mortgages to be assigned to HUD and foreclosed at a tremendous cost to the Federal Government.

Great harm will be done to residents as owners stop repairs, cut back on maintenance, eliminate other services, discontinue paying their utility bills and otherwise disinvest in housing.

This amendment, instead, retains incentives for new investors to buy troubled projects and bring in fresh equity capital for rehabilitation and modernization to keep that housing in service.

Mr. President, other Senators have expressed the view that pre-existing investments in low-income housing should not be penalized by the so-called passive loss and alternative minimum tax provisions of the committee bill. I agree.

Those who have invested in this housing did so largely because of the tax incentives that Congress purposely included in the Tax Code. Those tax incentives were provided because low-income housing simply cannot provide a fair return on investment through the usual sources, such as cash flow or capital appreciation, that are available to other forms of investment.

This bill, as it stands, deprives these investors of that fair return after the fact—after they have made the investments we encouraged them to make.

If investors in low-income housing are treated unfairly now, future investors can be expected to demand a very high risk premium. That will drive up costs and make any future incentive much less effective.

Therefore, I urge the Senate conferees to find a way to provide fair transitional treatment of past investment.

Mr. President, I commend Senator MITCHELL for offering this amendment. Coupled with fair transitional relief, it will do much to provide and preserve the low-income housing that the country needs.●

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment by my distinguished colleague from Maine, [Mr. MITCHELL], and command his efforts to address the problem of low-income housing.

The amendment, by removing certain restrictions, should make it feasible for the future low-income housing projects to use a new tax credit intended to cover 80 percent of their costs. The bill reported by the Finance Committee would have denied this credit to projects which also benefit from other Federal assistance.

Far from representing an excessive subsidy, the Federal aid is an absolutely essential component of these projects. Particularly in rural areas—where the need for additional low-income housing is desperate, assistance from HUD, or the ARC, or the Farmers Home Administration is used to clear land, build roads, put in water or sewer lines. Because hard-pressed local areas are unable to cover these costs, the bill's prohibition on the use of Federal aid would have greatly undercut the value of the new credit for potential developers of low-income housing.

The amendment also includes some modifications which will benefit existing low-income housing projects—without undoing the bill's major reforms on real estate tax shelters. Unfortunately, because the Reagan administration managed to decimate the Federal Government's subsidized housing programs, tax shelters are now the chief source of financing for low-income housing. Investors get involved in low-income housing investiments because of the tax writeoffs—not because they expect the projects to produce income. The consequences would obviously be grim if financing comes to a halt and pushes a large number of low-income housing projects into bankruptcy.

The dilemma, however, is that granting exceptions to the bill's tax shelter provisions sets a bad precedent. In my judgment, the Finance Committee wisely chose to restrict tax breaks which now encourage investors to go into deals solely to take advantage of tax losses. Real estate tax shelters have mushroomed in recent years, encouraged by the 1981 tax law which made real estate depreciation much more generous. Losses claimed for tax purposes under these deals have grown so enormously that phasing out their special treatment would bring in close to $50 billion over 5 years.

Real estate tax shelters have become one of the principal means wealthy people have of reducing their taxes—or escaping taxes altogether. Moderate-income people simply don't have the money to put into—and tie up—in these deals. But high-income taxpayers can use the large tax losses generated in the early years of an investment, and then turn around and sell their shares of a limited partnership once it starts to produce income. The buyers of these shares will be other high-income taxpayers, who can start claiming the tax losses all over again.

So awhile I'm sympathetic to the problems which the tax bill poses for low-income housing projects, I don't want to see the tax shelter provisions weakened. The existing tax breaks, besides their obvious unfariness, have encouraged substantial overinvestment in commercial real estate in many parts of the country. In some cities, vacancy rates in office buildings are 20 percent or more. The tax law encourages developers to keep putting up office buildings or shopping malls regardless of whether they're needed, because the tax breaks will turn these deals into economic investments.

At a time when we're terribly concerned about the competitiveness of our industries, we should want to see investment going into the most productive activities—going where it can generate the highest returns and add the most to our national wealth. I hope the conference committee will follow the approach of this amendment, and make every effort to meet our needs for low-income housing without undermining the fundamental reforms provided by the bill.●

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise to support the amendment before the Senate.

The low-income housing tax credit proposed as part of the committee bill is a sound and important innovation. It would, for the first time, target tax incentives for production and rehabilitation of housing to units which actually serve low and very low income families. It would impose restrictions on the rents in such units, assuring that the benefits of the tax incentive will translate to affordable housing for very low income families. These are important changes to current law, changes which I fully support. I congratulate the chairman and his committee for crafting such an innovative incentive.

However, I am concerned that the bill as drafted contains certain flaws which will prevent the credit from being fully utilized in conjunction with other programs and incentives which the Congress has enacted in recent years to encourage the development and preservation of low income rental housing.

In 1983, I proposed and the Congress adopted another innovative housing program, housing development grants, known as Hodag's. This program was designed to overcome the flaws which led to our rejection of the section 8 new construction program in 1981. Instead of offering developers carte blanche to construct luxurious apartments that the Federal Government would fully subsidize for very poor people, I proposed that we offer an incentive for private investors to produce mixed-income housing that would offer some units affordable to low income families, and others for the moderate income rental market. The Hodag program which is patterned after the successful urban development action grant [UDAG] program, may only be used to close the "financing gap" between the actual costs of development and the income which could be generated given a required minimum number of units set aside for low income families.

Since 1983, the Hodag program has stimulated the construction or rehabilitation of rental housing with more than 30 percent of the units serving low income families. The Hodag program embodies many of the virtues which President Reagan has extrolled since coming to office: Public-private partnerships, a high degree of leverage using a few public dollars to stimulate a higher level of private investment, and reliance on State and local governments to administer these funds in projects which they, not the Federal Government, felt were priority projects.

Investors in projects using Hodag's have always been able to take advantage of whatever tax incentives applied to the work they were doing. If the Hodag was financing a substantial rehabilitation, owners were able to take advantage of the section 167(k) 5-year write off of rehabilitation expenses for units which actually served low income households. Overall, the Hodag property was eligible for the favorable tax treatment all residential rental real estate now enjoys—19-year, 175 percent depreciation. Moreover, these projects could be financed using State or local tax exempt multifamily housing bonds. In many cases, the Hodag's embodied a broad mix of all these incentives, and many times included substantial contributions from State or local governments from CDBG or other funds to further reduce development costs.

But under the proposed bill, Hodag properties could not qualify for the low income housing tax credit. This is a senseless prohibition. Applicants for Hodag's must compete to receive funds. A principal criterion for award is the degree to which the amount of Federal Hodag grant is reduced as far as possible in relation to total costs. This emphasis on leverage and competition is critical to understanding why the Finance Committee's exclusion is a mistake. Unlike current code benefits, which are spread throughout an entire property, tax credits are available only for qualifying units. The value of a credit is easily computed, unlike depreciation or other deductible expenses. In reviewing applications, local, State, and Federal program administrators will be able to compute how many units will receive credits, and how much these credits will be worth to investors. This will facilitate the process of ensuring that the Hodag is the absolute minimal amount necessary to make a project work and still serve the targeted population. I fully expect that HUD will find it can drive even harder bargains than it has to date with the enactment of the tax credit, because it will be able to more finely tune the mix of incentives necessary. Tax credits for units which are truly serving low and very low income families will help increase the targeting and leveraging ratios of Hodag awards.

I congratulate the chairman for his good sense in proposing these tax credits as a sensible alternative to the current system. I applaud his willingness to accept the changes offered which would make it more workable. There are provisions remaining in the Senate bill which would impede the use of tax credits for low-income housing investment, but I am confident that the chairman will work with the other body during the conference committee to solve these problems in a satisfactory way. Mr. MITCHELL and the other members who worked to create this compromise deserve the Senate's thanks for coming up with an alternative which will enhance the credit's appeal. It will make the tax credits proposed by the Senate Finance Committee truly workable. It will enable us to integrate the incentives provided through the Tax Code with those provided through direct spending to ensure that the Federal Govenment is getting all the value possible from its limited resources.●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to support this amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Maine. Along with many of my colleagues on the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, I am concerned that the low-income housing credit contained in the original Finance Committee bill has flaws which made it unworkable. I want to commend Senator PACKWOOD for working with those of us who have been concerned about these flaws to eliminate the most serious ones.

The credit, as it would be altered by this amendment, will provide needed tax incentives for construction and preservation of low-income housing. I remain concerned that certain limitations on an investor's ability to use the credit, however, are not addressed by this amendment. I hope they will be addressed in the conference.

In particular, the limitation of the credit to no more than $6,750 per year will make the credit much less attractive to investors. Moreover, investors with incomes over $150,000 a year will be unable to use the credit at all because of the "passive loss" limitations contained in the Finance Committee bill. This is a serious problem because it is precisely these investors who are most likely to invest in low-income housing, which offers none of the cash-flow or appreciation of other investments. I urge the conferees to revise these limitations on the credit in order to ensure that the credit will be effective in achieving its purposes.

I also share Senator PACKWOOD's view and the view of the other Senators who have spoken that the conferees should allow some transition relief to previous investors in low-income housing. These investors supplied urgently needed capital for low-income housing as a result of the specific encouragement of our tax policy. The tax benefits that were given to them by prior law were meant to substitute for the lack of cash-flow and lack of immediate appreciation inherent in low-income housing.

Both the House and the Senate have continued the tax preferences given to low-income housing, very wisely, in my judgment. It would thus be extremely unfair to penalize these investors by disallowing their expected tax benefits for investments that they made several years ago. I support Senator PACKWOOD's view that the conferees should allow some substantial transition relief for these investors.●

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by Senator MITCHELL.

Mr. Chairman, we have labored long and hard over this tax reform bill. I have opposed many other amendments offered here. I have done so because I believe that the bill presented by the committee is a strong one.

The present amendment, however, deserves the support of every Member of this body. The changes proposed by Senator MITCHELL to the low-income housing tax credit in the committee bill are absolutely essential if we want this credit to work.

I applaud the chairman's initiative in creating the credit. It provides a very limited incentive which will benefit low and very low-income families. It restricts benefits to those most in need of housing assistance. It provides greater benefits to those who produce a greater number of affordable units for very low income renters. It ensures that the benefits to the investor are passed along to the tenant in the form of affordable rents. All these features mark a vast and long-overdue improvement over the provisions of current law.

Although this amendment makes critical improvements, I want to note that I share Senator MITCHELL's belief that further work is necessary. When this measure is considered in a conference committee, additional changes must be made to overcome concerns about how the credit is calculated, who may use it, and to what extent it will really attract private investment to low-income housing.

The Senate has taken an important step toward ensuring that the Nation continues to build and maintain low income housing. The tax amendment authored by Senator MITCHELL and myself strengthens the innovative approach adopted in the Finance Committee bill by making it clear that the new tax credit for low-income housing can be used in conjunction with other Federal, State, or local housing assistance programs. Without this amendment, new low-income housing would not be built.

Unfortunately, the bill still retains other provisions that deny future tax deductions for existing low-income housing projects. If this legislation is enacted in its present form, it will almost certainly result in crippling defaults on many worthwhile current projects. Senator MITCHELL and I intend to work with the Senate-House conferees to provide the protection these projects deserve.

These issues have been discussed in detail by the chairman and the sponsors of this amendment. We look forward to making even more progress in the future.

I support the amendment, and urge all my colleagues to do so as well. I do plan to work with the chairman and the other members of the committee as this bill moves to the conference committee to make sure that we have produced an incentive for private investment which will achieve our goal: Private sector participation in the preservation and development of housing which is affordable to low and very low-income families.

In closing I want to take 1 minute to express my admiration for the Senator from Maine. Without Senator MITCHELL's dedication and hard work we would not be here today. I also want to thank Senator PACKWOOD for his help.●

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I think we have answered to everyone's satisfaction the questions that were raised during the quorum call. As far as I am concerned, this does not need a rollcall vote. I am ready to vote on it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? Is all time yielded back?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am prepared to yield back my time and proceed to a vote now.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield back whatever time we have.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Before we yield back the time, Mr. President, we have been discussing this amendment. To the best of my calculation I think there were 18 staff members and Senators who gave me the privilege of trying to explain to me what the amendment is about. It has to do with my concern as to whether or not there are new tax shelters that will be created by reason of this amendment. I think everybody in this body agrees that there is a concern for low-income housing. So the issue has never been a question of whether or not there should or should not be low-income housing. The question arose as to whether or not those who invest in this low-income housing and are obtaining their funds from nonprofit organizations will be able to shelter their other income.

I have been assured that passive investors will not be able to shelter their other income. I have been assured that there will not be a new tax loophole created by reason of this amendment. The chairman of the committee, as well as Senator MITCHELL who is one of the very active members on the committee, Senator BRADLEY, who has been very active in the entire discussion, assures me that there is not a way of opening a new loophole so that investors may begin to earn dollars, substantial dollars, and be kept from being obligated to pay their fair share of the taxes.

I think on the basis of those assurances, I have no reason to stand in the way of this amendment being adopted. But having said that, I must confess that I still have some bit of concern, and I am not totally satisfied that those new shelters will not come into being. But I do not wish to stand in the way of the passage of the amendment on the basis of the assurances I have heretofore received. I will not vote against it.

□ 1700

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I assure my friend from Ohio it is not my intention to open up any new passive tax shelter. We have tried to craft this in such a way that it is proper. I think I can guarantee it does not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2153) was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2154

[Purpose: To provide for the budgetary treatment of any revenue fluctuations produced by the Tax Reform Act of 1986]

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk in behalf of myself, Senator GRAMM, Senator HOLLINGS, and Senator RUDMAN, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], (for himself, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. RUDMAN, proposes an Amendment No. 2154.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the amendment, insert the following new section:

SEC. . EQUALIZING THE REVENUE EFFECTS OF TAX REFORM

(a) FISCAL YEARS 1986 AND 1987.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no tax reform revenue windfall for fiscal year 1986 or 1987 shall be taken into account in determining the total revenues for such fiscal year for purposes of—

(1) setting forth appropriate levels of total Federal revenues for such fiscal year in a concurrent resolution on the budget under section 301 or 304 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(2) calculating the deficit for such fiscal year under sections 301(i), 304(b), and 311(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 in order to determine whether the maximum deficit amount for such fiscal year has been exceeded,

(3) calculating the excess deficit for such fiscal year under sections 251 and 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, or

(4) formulating the budget submitted by the President under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, for such fiscal year and any supplemental estimates and changes submitted under section 1106 of such title for such fiscal year.

(b) FISCAL YEARS 1988 AND 1989.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a tax reform revenue shortfall for fiscal year 1988 or 1989 shall be taken into account in determining the total revenues for such fiscal year for the purposes described in paragraphs (1) through (4) of subsection (a) only to the extent that such shortfall is not offset by tax reform revenue windfalls for fiscal years 1986 and 1987. Tax reform revenue windfalls for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 shall offset a tax reform revenue shortfall for fiscal year 1989 only to the extent that the total amount of such windfalls exceeds (and is not used to offset) any tax reform revenue shortfall for fiscal year 1988.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "tax reform revenue windfall" means, with respect to a fiscal year, any revenues (as estimated in accordance with subsection (d)) accruing to the Treasury of the United States during the fiscal year under the revenue laws of the United States, as amended by the Tax Reform Act of 1986, that are in excess of the revenues (as so estimated) that would have accrued to the Treasury of the United States during the fiscal year under the revenue laws of the United States as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of such Act; and

(2) the term "tax reform revenue shortfall" means, with respect to a fiscal year, the amount by which the revenues (as estimated in accordance with subsection (d)) accruing to the Treasury of the United States during the fiscal year under the revenue laws of the United States, as amended by the Tax Reform Act of 1986, are less than the revenues (as so estimated) that would have accrued to the Treasury of the United States during the fiscal year under the revenue laws of the United States as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of such Act.

(d) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNTS.—The amount of any tax reform revenue windfall or tax reform revenue shortfall for a fiscal year shall be determined as of the date of the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986—

(1) by the Congressional Budget Office (using revenue estimates made by the Joint Committee on Taxation in accordance with section 273 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985), for the purposes specified in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a), and for purposes of carrying out the duties of the legislative branch under the provisions specified in paragraph (3) of such subsection, and

(2) by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purposes specified in paragraph (4) of subsection (a), and for purposes of carrying out the duties of the executive branch under the provisions specified in paragraph (3) of such subsection.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, at the beginning of the debate on this bill, I indicated that Members I had spoken to and members of the Budget Committee were concerned about the impact of this bill on the deficit targets that we were mandated to achieve under the 5-year Emergency Deficit Reduction Act.

First, I want to make it clear that this amendment does not in any way change the substance of this tax bill that is before us, nor does it attempt to change the way the revenues come into the U.S. Treasury. But what concerns me and many other Members of the Senate and of the Budget Committee is that the bill may indeed run counter to the maximum deficit amounts in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Emergency Deficit Reduction Act.

As I indicated earlier, when this bill came to the floor, it lowered the budget deficit by $7.4 billion in fiscal year 1986 and by $22.6 billion in fiscal year 1987. But it raised the budget deficit in fiscal year 1988 by $21 billion and in fiscal year 1989 by $21.4 billion.

The Senate has adopted some amendments, but none of them change very much the uneven impact of this bill on the budget.

Obviously, the intention of the writers of this bill, they have told the Senate over and over, is that over a number of years the revenues are expected to be neutral as compared with current law. But we do not have the luxury under the Gramm-Rudman-Holiings Emergency Deficit Reduction Act of looking at revenues over a number of years. We have to look at the budget each year, 1 year at a time in terms of the revenues and the expenditures.

What I have just told the Senate is in fiscal year 1987, if the bill comes out of conference this way, it will yield additional revenues as compared to current law; in fiscal year 1988, however, it will yield less revenues. We would therefore get a windfall in the first year, that is, the targets under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings would be very easily achieved because the extra revenue would be counted unless this amendment passes.

This means that if this bill is enacted and nothing else were to change, Congress would have to come back here and cut another $21 billion out of the fiscal year 1988 budget, even if we succeeded in implementing the 1987 budget and even if all of the economic projections and all the implementation of the budget for 1987 was carried out.

More to the point, there would be substantial pressure to raise the low tax rates that we will have just enacted in this bill for 1 of the particular years or maybe 2 of the years, even though over a number of years it would come out neutral.

Therefore, as I told the Senate when we took up the Budget Act waiver, the Budget Committee members unanimously asked and instructed Senator CHILES and myself to attempt to resolve this problem in a way that was acceptable to the managers of the bill.

I intend to join Senator CHILES in a sense-of-the-Senate resolution which would, in essence, ask the conferees to even out the swings in revenue that now exist in this bill. But, obviously, that is a substantive matter clearly within their jurisdiction.

In my judgment, we also have to insulate the maximum deficit amounts from the revenue swings that may result from this bill. This amendment would effectively neutralize the revenue swings over the next 3 years solely for the four following purposes:

First, in developing future congressional budget resolutions;

Second, scoring Budget Act points of order;

Third, calculating the revenue baseline for sequestration purposes; that is, determining if more cuts are needed to meet the minimum deficit amounts;

And, fourth, for the formulation of the President's budget.

Specifically, the amendment provides that any windfall revenue gain will be excluded from the calculation of the total revenue levels in 1987 for the purpose of the congressional budget resolution and for calculating the revenue base in August to determine whether a sequester order and an across-the-board cut is required.

This means that under the current revenue estimates for the bill, the $7.4 billion revenue pickup in fiscal year 1986 would not be counted, nor would the $23.3 billion increase in fiscal year 1987.

In addition, any revenue shortfalls in fiscal years 1988 and 1989 would be excluded from the revenue baseline in the budget resolution and in the calculation of the sequester base deficit to the extent they are offset by windfall gains in fiscal year 1986 and fiscal year 1987.

This amendment designates the revenue estimates of the bill upon enactment as the estimates to be used in determining these gains and losses.

When we come along again and CBO and OMB do their estimates of the fiscal year 1987 deficit, they will estimate what revenues will be on the basis of new economics, but they will specifically exclude any revenue increase that may come from this bill if it is enacted by that time.

If revenues are down for economic reasons, they will be down. The lower revenues due to a weaker economy will not be offset by higher revenues expected from this bill. However, next year, when we begin the process, if there is a loss in the 1988 revenues, the budget year we will be working on, due to this bill, we will exclude this loss from the revenue baseline in the budget resolution—I want to emphasize the following—to the extent that it is offset by revenues we pick up in fiscal year 1986 and fiscal year 1987 under this bill.

This will also be the case when CBO and OMB calculate the 1988 deficit for the purpose of determining whether a sequester is needed.

Let me emphasize, we are only insulating the process with respect to revenue losses to the extent we pick up revenue in the early years. It is my wish that the revenue impact of this bill would be exactly zero in each year, but I realize that this is probably impossible, not because the writers of the bill would not want to; it is just that the job of reforming the Tax Code is so dramatic, so major, that it is almost impossible for them to go out and have the kind of reform that we all want and yet come back with the same revenue levels expected under current law in each of the years.

This bill has been determined to be revenue neutral if it neither raises or lowers revenues on balance over 5 years. However, all the discussion of what is revenue neutral arises quite apart from the budget. I see powerful incentives in conference to reduce the revenue increase in 1987 by accelerating the tax cuts and making other compromises without reducing the revenue losses we face in 1988 and 1989 and to make up the difference in fiscal year 1990 and 1991.

This would be disastrous for the ability of the Senate and the Congress to meet the Gramm-Rudman targets or even to develop a plan for achieving those goals. The conferees should be aware that to the extent that the conference result reduces the overall flow of revenue to the Federal Treasury over the next 5 years they will undercut the credibility of the low tax rates contained in the new tax bill. I honestly believe they understand that.

The amendment that I offer today, with my cosponsors as I have indicated, as I have explained it, attempts to go a long way toward insulating our processes and the President's budget from this rather historic and sweeping tax reform measure which is before us.

□ 1710

It was not in the minds of the U.S. Congress or those who supported or sponsored Gramm-Rudman-Hollings that a bill such as this would come along so soon and have such a potentially dramatic effect on revenue levels.

This amendment does not go all the way. If in conference the agreement spends the potential revenue gain in the first year and continues to have large losses in 1988 and 1989, we shall be back here next year facing all of the same deficit problems that we had even before the U.S. Senate passed the budget resolution which, if implemented, would have dramatically changed them.

I hope the Senate will adopt this amendment, but I also hope the conferees will take the matter therein seriously. Frankly, we all want this tax reform measure. We all would like the bill to be literally revenue neutral, not over 5 years but consistent with today's revenue expectations.

We cannot insist on that but we clearly hope that the conferees understand to the extent they are unable to do that and if they push the gains out into the fourth and fifth years, they will leave the Congress of the United States in a very, very difficult position for the fiscal years 1988 and 1989.

Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman [Mr. PACKWOOD] for his consideration and thank his staff for the work they have done, the joint committee staff for all the work they have done, and the others who have helped with it, and I hope the Senate will adopt this measure soon after we have presented it here this evening.

I yield the floor.

(Mr. GORTON assumed the chair.)

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, very briefly, I support this amendment. I support it because, from the very outset when we introduced this bill and when we brought it to the floor, I indicated that we do not want to attempt some phony deficit reduction with phony figures. The fact that this bill raises some money in the early years, drops in the middle years, and comes back in the end years may encourage Congress to use it in an attempt to meet our deficit projections of last year and in essence say we shall worry about 1988 in 1988; we shall worry about 1989 in 1989; let us take the money now and worry about the devil next year.

I very much support this amendment. This is a tax reform bill. Whether or not in 1, 2 or 3 months the Senate or Congress wants to consider whether they are going to raise revenues or not raise revenues is a decision for the Senate or for Congress to make. Congress has not made the decision yet and this bill should not be used as an artificial vehicle to attempt to get us over a hurdle next year.

Mr. GRAMM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GRAMM. I yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say to the chairman, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], he has put his finger right on it. This bill, if we were to pass it overwhelmingly tomorrow and it came back from conference with exactly these estimates, in the fiscal year 1987, not only would you not have to cut anything, you could fund an increase in almost every domestic program, defense, and everything else, and you probably would not have a sequester. Because indeed, in addition to the normal growth in revenue under current law, this adds $23.3 billion in fiscal year 1987.

What the chairman is saying is in fiscal year 1987, that would really be a phony, because what would we do the next year? There is no question that they do not want that to happen. We think we have provided a realistic way to prevent it. We do not think it has any negative economic impact, but we do think it is realistic.

We added one thing to the bill in the course of the discussion. We said the President should send his budget to us using the same basic implementing tools and assumptions. He will have to tell us what his budget looks like based upon the fiscal year 1987 windfall being moved into the next year as we described it. We think that provides some continuity and we hope the conferees will retain this amendment to the substantive budget law of the land as they move through the conference on taxes.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee [Mr. DOMENICI] and the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. PACKWOOD] have explained this so well that I do not think an indepth explanation from me is going to be needed. I thank them for working on this problem. I have enjoyed working with them, with the Treasury Department, and with all those who have been involved in trying to assure that in this tax reform bill, we reform taxes, that we are not producing windfall revenues that give us an incentive to escape our responsibilities today only to be clobbered in 1988 and 1989 with deficits that we cannot deal with through fiscal responsibility alone.

Let me just refer to the chart I have with me.

Our problem is that on the front end, under the current bill, we have in the first year 7.13 billion dollars' worth of windfall revenues. In fiscal 1987, that goes up to $23.3 billion. Then we fall substantially in fiscal year 1988 and fiscal year 1989 to roughly a $20 billion shortfall each of those 2 years before we come back on the line.

My concern, Mr. President, is that it is a lot easier to spend money today than it is to make hard decisions. My fear has been that if we had a $30 billion front-end windfall in an election year, Congress would rush out and spend that money, not make hard decisions this year, not set us on a path that meets the requirements of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and then, when the fiscal years 1988 and 1989 came, we would have an insurmountable problem. I think with this amendment, we deal with the problem. By taking the windfall revenue at the front end, not counting it toward budget points of order in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill but instead bringing it onbudget to count as those points of order in fiscal years 1988 and 1989, we keep Congress trying to do the job it needs to do this year so it can do the job in fiscal years 1988 and 1989, as well.

I commend this amendment to the Members of the Senate and I commend my colleagues for bringing this issue to the floor.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, will my friend from New Mexico yield me 3 minutes?

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not think we are on controlled time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania wish to speak to this amendment?

Mr. HEINZ. Yes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, between the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Texas, I think we have all seen a very erudite and excellent explanation of what will happen if we do not pass the Domenici amendment. I rise to strongly support it.

The important fact of this revenue-neutral tax bill is that it is also revenue erratic. The Domenici amendment would smooth out the bill so that we do not tempt Congress with some large tax surpluses in the first 2 fiscal years, to the tune of as much, in the latter year, as $22 billion or $23 billion.

I think we all know full well the danger of applying those kinds of large surpluses to spending or, although it is a very important subject and we should do more of it, to deficit reduction.

The problem is this: we are going to dig ourselves a much deeper hole in 1989 and 1990 as the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Texas have pointed out. The result of digging deep holes for ourselves in those 2 years would almost certainly bring about the ordering of a truly massive sequester under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

□ 1720

Now we have our work cut out for us as it is. We need to get down to $144 billion in deficit spending for the coming fiscal year, and that is a tough task by itself. We need to get down to $108 billion in fiscal 1988, and that will again be a tough job. We have to get down to $72 billion in deficit in fiscal year 1989. If we do not address this issue as the Senator from New Mexico has proposed, it will be all but impossible for Congress to achieve those goals without some kind of new massive tax increase or some kind of spending reductions that would do real violence to any semblance of managing our affairs in a sensible, reasonable, predictable way; a way which we should strive for as a goal in governing. We do not want to see massive tax increases and we do not want to see education or housing or research or the national defense suddenly devastated. So I commend Senator DOMENICI and Senator GRAMM. I strongly support what they are doing and I hope all our colleagues do, too. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. DOMENICI. I have nothing further to say. I hope the Senate adopts the amendment at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2154) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2155

(Purpose: To allow a 30-percent capital gains exclusion for the sale of property by an individual actively engaged in the trade or business of farming or woodlot operations; and to limit net operating loss carrybacks)

Mr. MELCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I wonder if I could have the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, we have a 30-minute time limit on this amendment. There are two of us, Senator HEFLIN and myself, who would like to speak to the amendment. I ask the distinguished chairman if he could yield us 5 minutes so we could each have 10 minutes.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Could the Senator make that request again? I could not quite hear the Senator.

Mr. MELCHER. We have a 30-minute time agreement on this amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Right.

Mr. MELCHER. There are two of us who would like to speak to the amendment, Senator HEFLIN and myself. I would like to request if the distinguished chairman could yield us 5 minutes of his time so we could each have 10 minutes.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am a little confused. In other words, we have 30 minutes total, 15 minutes equally divided?

Mr. MELCHER. That is right, 15 minutes on a side.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am a little reluctant to yield my time because I am going to be in opposition to the amendment. So I think for the moment, I would have to object.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, we are on such a big roll I thought maybe we could continue with agreeable amendments.

Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senator HEFLIN and Senator ZORINSKY, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER], for himself and others, proposes an amendment numbered 2155.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1582, beginning with line 3, strike out all through page 1585, line 3, and insert:

SEC. 401. REPEAL OF EXCLUSION FOR LONG-TERM CAPITAL GAINS OF INDIVIDUALS OTHER THAN CERTAIN GAINS OF FARMERS.

(1) Section 170(e)(1) (relating to certain contributions of ordinary income and capital gain property) is amended—

(A) by striking out "40 percent (28/46 in the case of a corporation)" and inserting in lieu thereof "100 percent (28/33 in the case of a corporation)", and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In the case of any qualified farmer with respect to whom a deduction is allowable under section 1202, this paragraph shall be applied by substituting '70 percent' for '100 percent' with respect to any qualified farm net capital gain."

(2) Subsection (b) of section 1211 (relating to limitation on capital losses) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) OTHER TAXPAYERS.—In the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation, losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets shall be allowed only to the extent of the gains from such sales or exchanges, plus (if such losses exceed such gains) the lower of—

"(1) $3,000 ($1,500 in the case of a married individual filing a separate return), or

"(2) the excess of such losses over such gains."

(3) Subsection (b) of section 1212 (relating to capital loss carrybacks and carryovers) is amended by striking out "section 1211(b)(1)(A), (B), or (C)" both places it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "section 1211(b)".

(4) The table of sections for part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 1202 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 1202. Deduction for capital gains from sale of certain farm property."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986.

On page 1978, after line 24, insert the following:

"(6) CAPITAL GAINS.—

"(A) QUALIFIED FARMERS.—In the case of a qualified farmer (within the meaning of section 1202(b)(1)), an amount equal to the net capital gain deduction for the taxable year determined under section 1202.

"(B) PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), gain from the sale or exchange of a principal residence (within the meaning of section 1034) shall not be taken into account.

"(C) SPECIAL RULE FOR CERTAIN INSOLVENT TAXPAYERS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the tax preference under subparagraph (A) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the excess (if any) of—

"(I) the applicable percentage of gain from any farm insolvency transaction, over

"(II) the applicable percentage of any loss from any farm insolvency transaction which offsets such gain.

"(ii) FARM INSOLVENCY TRANSACTION.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'farm insolvency transaction' means—

"(I) the transfer by a farmer of farmland to a creditor in cancellation of indebtedness, or

"(II) the sale or exchange by the farmer of property described in subclause (I) under the threat of foreclosure, but only if the farmer is insolvent immediately before such transaction.

"(iv) INSOLVENT.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'insolvent' means the excess of liabilities over the fair market value of assets.

"(v) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'applicable percentage' means that percentage of net capital gain with respect to which a deduction is allowed under section 1202(a).

"(vi) FARMLAND.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'farmland' means any land used or held for use in the trade or business of farming (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(5)).

"(vii) FARMER.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'farmer' means any taxpayer if 50 percent or more of the average annual gross income of the taxpayer for the 3 preceding taxable years is attributable to the trade or business of farming (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(5))."

On page 2271, line 19, insert "(reduced by the amount of any deduction under section 1202(a) allocable to such gain)" after "income".

SEC. 559 in the bill as previously amended is further amended by striking out "$200 million" and inserting in lieu thereof "$800 million".

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, first of all, the revenue offset in this amendment is not a new subject to the Senate floor; the amendment does not in any way change the rates or get into the proposition of a so-called tax loophole dealing with passive versus active income earners. But in effect what the amendment does is close a part of a loophole, corrects part of a glitch or slip or windfall that now exists in the Senate Finance Committee bill as reported to the floor.

Senator BUMPERS, in presenting the offset to his amnesty amendment last Friday, discussed this glitch—or slip—in some detail, identifying the amount of the windfall at $1.6 billion, as determined by the Joint Tax Committee. His amendment, which was adopted last Friday, utilized one-eighth that amount, or $200 million, to offset the revenue loss when the Senate adopted his amendment.

The adoption of my amendment requires an offset of $600 million, and so we have drafted the amendment to utilize $600 million of the $1.4 billion remaining windfall amount.

This unintended windfall for corporations occurs on the 3-year carryback provision of tax losses in a bad year to be used going back the 3 preceding years, which may have been profitable years. The windfall occurs as under the bill the corporate tax rate will be 39 percent in 1987, and 33 percent in 1988 and the years beyond, as compared to 46 percent, which is the present corporate tax rate. Simply put, in 1988 a corporate loss for that year could be applied against 1985, when the tax rates were 46 percent rather than 33 percent—an advantage of 13 percent.

Losses incurred in years with a 33 percent corporate tax rate can, therefore, be used to offset income taxes paid in a year when the maximum corporate rate was 46 percent. I believe that this potential windfall was unintended by the Senate Finance Committee and is not supported by the Senate.

Under current law, a corporation with a loss can offset any taxes paid in the 3 preceding years. That means that Corporation ABC, with a loss in 1988 of $1 million, could apply that against taxes paid in 1985, 1986, and 1987, and receive from the Treasury a check for up to $460,000.

That's right—the bill before us would allow that to continue, and I do not believe that the Senate wants to make the transition from the 46 percent corporate tax rate to the lower rate of 33 percent and still have the $1 million loss applied against taxes that were paid at 46 percent.

My amendment directs the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust how much of the offset could be obtained in this carryback provision.

To the extent that this would close this glitch, the Senate can adopt my amendment to make the capital gains tax for agricultural producers and wood lot operators with incomes of $100,000 or less per year still subject to the current capital gains provisions.

Example: If in 1988 a corporation makes $100,000 profit, the corporation will pay $33,000 in taxes at the 33 percent rate. Now, in 1985, if the corporation makes $100,000, it would have paid $46,000 in income taxes.

But if in 1988, after this bill is in force, when the top rate is 33 percent, the corporation loses $100,000, it can carry that loss back for the preceding 3 years and that would take it back first to 1985. If it had $100,000 in income in 1985, it paid $46,000. This means that the $100,000 loss in 1988 could offset $46,000 in 1985 rather than $33,000 giving the corporation $13,000 more in a tax refund that will be available in 1991.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator HOLLINGS be shown as an original cosponsor of the Domenici amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Montana will withhold, the Senator is informed that the amendment which he has sent to the desk amends the bill at a place which has already been amended and it is therefore not in order.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. That deals with the revenue gain—the revenue offset.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It deals with amending the Bumpers amendment which has already been adopted. The Senator could ask unanimous consent that his amendment be considered to be in order.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I do ask such unanimous consent. I might point out that the assistance in drafting the amendment showed it to be the proper way to go at it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PACKWOOD. For the moment, reserving the right to object, I just want to find out for the moment why it is not in order. I may not object to his changing it but if I could just have a few moments to check on it I would suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this time for a quorum call not be charged against me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana amends the Bumpers amendment on tax amnesty which was adopted by this body on Friday. It is out of order for that reason.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1730

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I object, temporarily, I say to the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The clerk will continue the call of the roll.

The legislative clerk continued to call the roll.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2156

(Purpose: To allow a 30-percent capital gains exclusion for the sale of property by an individual actively engaged in the trade or business of farming or woodlot operations; and to limit net operating loss carrybacks)

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I send a modification of my amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is informed that the pending business is his unanimous-consent request with respect to his amendment.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a modification of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER], for himself, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. ZORINSKY, proposes an amendment numbered 2156.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

On page 2271, line 19, insert "(reduced by the amount of and deduction under section 1202(a) allocable to such gain)" after "income".

Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, the figure in Sec. 559 in the bill as previously amended as "$200 million" is deemed to be "$800 million".

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, not only is there a glitch in the bill as it is before the Senate now, but there is also a glitch in the amendment I sent to the desk.

The correction has to deal with the fact that notwithstanding the action taken by the Senate last Friday, we utilize a portion of the $1.6 billion of unintended windfall on the carryback provision of the corporations that have losses. If losses occur presently, they are offset by a check coming from the Treasury and carrying back 3 years prior on profits that were made previously.

I do not believe that the Senate intends that the carryback provision for corporations, to get these checks from the Treasury, will be offset with 46 percent tax, as is the corporate rate right now, versus a 33-percent corporate rate, which is in the bill before the Senate.

So the amendment uses that for revenue offset. The cost of the amendment is $600 million, and the amendment does this: The amendment does not refer to anybody in the passive versus active question, because it refers only to active farmers, ranchers, and woodlot operators on the capital gains provision, for those people who make up to $100,000 in income in any year, letting them have the current law as it applies to capital gains.

The committee bill, the bill now before the Senate, uses a broadax approach on capital gains. It knocks it out completely for everybody. It is completely dead—completely "daid."

I believe in capital gains. I think it is a good tax policy. But regardless of what anybody else thinks about it in the Senate or throughout the country, I think we can all agree that the broadax approach is much too broad. It was too broad an ax that was used by the Senate Finance Committee in drafting the bill.

Therefore, this amendment would retain capital gains for farmers and ranchers whose income does not exceed $100,000 in any year, retain it for them. It would retain it for woodlot operators whose income does not exceed $100,000 in any year. I think that is only just. Farmers and ranchers are losing money. They should be protected by this tax policy, which is several decades old in our Tax Code. Woodlot operators who sell their trees believe they should have this protection, and I agree.

The American Society of Foresters agree, and they have sent all of us a letter explaining why this is the No. 1 priority of woodlot operators throughout the country, to retain the capital gains as it affects them—retain it as in current law. I think it is only fair and justifiable and equitable that they be allowed to retain this capital gains feature of the present law.

Mr. President, I yield such time as he may consume to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I support this amendment.

Some have asked why we are interested in the farmer and why we are trying, amendment by amendment, to preserve certain aspects of present law pertaining to the farmer. I think the Nation as a whole knows that the farmer is in a dreadful crisis, and I think we should not put the farmer in a worse condition than he already is in today.

We have made efforts to pass bills to relieve the farm credit crisis. This was vetoed. We passed a farm bill. Many of us felt that the farm bill was nothing more than a continuation of the status quo, with less benefits to the farmer.

We have been able to retain some benefits to the farmer with amendments to this bill but, to me, capital gains is one of the key amendments for the farmer. Capital gains deductions are certainly needed in risky industries and businesses that involve the natural biological cycles and reproductive processes. Farmers that raise cattle, for instance, cannot expect immediate income from the purchase of brood cows. Income that results from the sale of such livestock is the product of several years. This situation applies to those involved in the production of other animals, such as hogs and poultry or, a new industry that shows great promise in the South, the production of catfish, which is now referred to as aquaculture.

□ 1740

Sometimes we realize all the elements that the farmers fight.

A few years ago we knew of the Okies who had a terrible time and had to leave their home because of the dust bowl. We have heard of the grasshopper hordes, the hurricanes, and the droughts. We are currently experiencing a terrible drought in my home State.

We have had fire ants and the problems they bring about.

There are all sorts of various things.

One of the worst things is an east wind in August.

I have mentioned some of the natural calamities and disasters that farmers face. But there are calamities that farmers will tell you about that are unexplainable. These calamities they say are usually preceded by a sign that appears to give the farmer a warning of the approaching calamities.

One of these is blackbirds in December. Many farmers believe that when blackbirds are seen in the fields in the South in December it means the beginning of a bad winter which is going to be terribly rough on the winter wheat. Farmers will tell you that this has historically been true.

The cotton farmer will warn you of the moon dogs. People probably do not know much about moon dogs. But Webster even defines "moon dogs." A farmer who looks at the Moon in late August and in the early part of September can spot moon dogs by the appearance of the Moon. The Moon will have a circle around it. That circle around the Moon then has bright spots in it. Those bright spots are called moon dogs. Moon dogs are cursed and dreadful sights to the cotton farmer.

Now, a farmer that looks up there and sees it knows that moon dogs are the beginning of calamity. It means that the bolls that may be on the cotton will turn brown. They say that sometimes as a result of moon dogs farmers will see the cotton bolls turn as brown as the eyes of a long-haired bird dog.

You can hear the oldtimers tell you about the various calamities. They say do not confuse this with the sun dogs. The sun dogs are a welcomed sight during the hot dusty afternoons in the season of "dog days." Any old codger can quote you a rhyme about sun dogs that says, "Watch the sky when the weather is dry; if the sun dogs appear the rains are near."

There are all sorts of weather problems that are confronting the farmers. These calamities we cannot help. But we in Congress can help prevent some calamities such as repealing capital gains deductions. I think this amendment will be a step in the right direction. We ought to retain capital gains deduction for our farmers.

I wish that capital gains was the "end-all" for the cotton farmer, but it is not. Cotton farmers are at the mercy of the infamous "boll weevil." Many people think that boll weevils are Southern conservative Congressmen, but really the boll weevil is a long-snooted bug that worked its way from old Mexico through the cotton fields of Texas up into the Cotton Belt of the South. The boll weevil is such an efficient, destructive machine that in some areas it has resulted in complete devastation to the farmer.

There is one town in my State—Enterprise, AL—that erected a monument to the boll weevil. That monument was erected because it brought to the attention of the farmer that he could not make a living growing cotton because of the boll weevil so he had to turn to other crops and, basically, in that area he turned to peanuts.

The people erected this monument and that monument is there today which reminds people of the devastation that pests can play upon the cotton fields and the devastation that can take place to the farmer as a result of weather and of various types of calamities such as pests.

So with this in mind I think that this is an effort to try to protect the farmer, and to me it is needed and we ought to do what we can to preserve capital gains for the farmer and for the timber land owner as well.

A major industry in Alabama is timber. Timber is a long-term capital asset—it takes 20 to 50 years to grow to maturity. In my State there are more than 386,000 owners of private forestlands—more than 19.7 million acres. The majority of these owners are small landowners, less than 100 acres. Removing the tax differential capital gains as provided would be a real hardship for these timber growers. It could mean the difference between replanting after harvest and not replanting trees—which was the case in our country before capital gains treatment of timber was enacted in 1944.

Over the past four decades forestry in the United States has come a long way, largely as a result of the incentive provided timber owners by the capital gains tax differential. I am fearful that we could return to an era of harvesting without replanting that was so prevalent before 1944.

Timber growing is a classic example of a risky, long-term, illiquid investment. Timber growers face the threat of fire, wind damage, insects and disease—and in the South the pine bark beetle is now taking a heavy toll. The investment is both long-term and illiquid since trees cannot be harvested and sold until they are mature 20 to 50 years. What incentive is there to plant trees, care for them for decades, and then face dramatically higher taxes on the income received, which may be forthcoming once in a lifetime?

Alabama's timber resource is the basis for a flourishing forest products industry. The manufacture of wood products and pulp and paper provides employment for 50,000 people and payrolls of more than $1 billion annually. Shipments of Alabama forest products are in excess of $3 billion annually. In our rural communities timber is the economic backbone. So there is reason for concern about the impact of eliminating the capital gains differential for individuals as it affects timber growing and other long-term investments.

Timber growers are questioning the fairness of changing the rules in the middle of the game. Without capital gains, they say, they will not be able to afford to replant trees when they are cut. Many say it will cripple forestry on private nonindustrial ownerships.

The top capital gains tax rate under present law is 20 percent. Eliminating the capital gains differential would raise the rate to 27 percent, the same as the top rate on ordinary income. But with surcharges the rate can go as high as 32 percent. Let me give you an example of how a couple filing a joint return would be affected who have a precapital taxable income of $20,000.

In that tax bracket their present capital gains tax rate would be 7.2 percent. Under the proposal we are considering their new rate on long-term investment income would be 15 percent—that's an increase of 108 percent in taxes. If their tax bracket is lower, their percentage increase in taxes would be even higher—up to 168 percent. Timber owners can honestly say they cannot afford to grow trees.

Capital gains have been part of the Tax Code since 1921. It has a proven track record in stimulating new enterprises and in encouraging people to take risks in the interest of moving our economy forward.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join with me in support of this amendment. This provision will insure that the more than 7.5 million owners of timberland in this Nation will be given consideration that growing long-term forest crops is the kind of risk investment that is in the public interest. Let's make sure we don't destroy private forestry and other long-term enterprises that contribute so heavily to our economy and to our quality of life.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, what is the time limit remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has 15 minutes remaining; the Senator from Montana has 4 minutes and 47 seconds.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to this amendment, not out of any lack of sympathy for those in agriculture. Every one of us in the States, whether Montana, New Jersey, Ohio, or Oregon, is familiar with the plight of the farmers. But I rise in opposition because of the method of financing this.

We have already in this bill given investment tax credit carrybacks to farmers that we have not given elsewhere. We have also given income averaging and now it is the intention of the Senator from Montana to change what we call the net operating loss provisions, which were very carefully crafted, calculated, balanced, and limited in the Finance Committee bill, in order to make this further benefit that will apply only to farmers and woodlot owners up to $100,000 a year.

Mr. President, I do not know about your State, but in my State $100,000 is still a lot of money. That is hardly a middle-income taxpayer. That is not even an upper-middle income taxpayer. Someone who has $100,000 is someone of reasonable wealth. A $100,000 limit will benefit someone in the upper 5 percent of the income group in this country.

I just have misgivings of having this kind of an amendment financed out of someone else's hide after the committee has attempted to evenly and fairly craft how the net operating losses will work.

So tomorrow when we vote on this I will move to table and it will be my hope that the Senate will not agree to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee has said we have done a lot for farmers. Mr. President, we are doing a lot to farmers. That is what hurts.

What this bill does for farmers is to take away their opportunity to have recovery—and, boy, do they ever need a recovery period. They need to make some money, but what this bill will do is if they start to make some money, it is going to tax them more. Why do they need to make money? It is because they have huge debts. That is for farmers and for ranchers. They need to have some profits to pay off the principal of those debts.

Capital gains is a long-standing feature in our Tax Code and it should not be abolished completely. This amendment would retain partially some protection for them and for the woodlot operators.

I must repeat what the American Society of Foresters, the professional foresters, has said. This is a No. 1 priority for them to be able to have some capital gains protection so that woodlot operators in utilizing and harvesting their trees have the protection of capital gains. That is the way it has been. It should not be hampered by the new tax policy laid down in this bill.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes and 25 seconds remaining.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Alabama 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wish to reply to say we are dealing with highly capital intensive types of products such as timber. Timber can easily amount to a gross sales of $100,000. But this does not mean much profit to the farmer. It takes 20 to 50 years to grow trees. You can deal with cattle, and cattle gross sales can add up to $100,000. But it does not mean that that is anywhere close to being the profit for a farmer. It takes years of investment in time and money before any sales are made. Capital gains is one provision that is truly needed by those involved in risky business of depending on mother nature, and the biological and reproductive process.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

□ 1750

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, might I inquire of the distinguished chairman if he intends to utilize more of his time?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Inquire as to what?

Mr. MELCHER. If the distinguished chairman intends to utilize more of his time.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes, I may use a little more time. I am waiting for some answers to inquiries of the Chair.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I believe I only have 1 minute and 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes and eighteen seconds.

Mr. MELCHER. I ask unanimous consent that I be able to reserve that 2 minutes and 18 seconds and that any time that transpires until the time the chairman begins to utilize his time not be charged against my 2 minutes and 18 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, could I ask what that unanimous consent was?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asked that he be able to reserve his remaining 2 minutes and 18 seconds until the Senator from Oregon, the chairman, uses his time.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absense of a quorum—will that be charged equally against both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be charged against the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I withdraw the request.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no quorum call in progress at the present time.

Mr. HEFLIN. There is no quorum call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the present time, the Senate is in open session, with the time being charged to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed 30 seconds to speak as if in morning business while we are waiting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. HEFLIN will appear later in the RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1800

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for regular order.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum call is in progress.

Mr. HEINZ addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the quorum be rescinded, and I further ask unanimous consent that the current practice involving the quorum call that has been in effect wherein charged time is not being charged against the time of the Senator from Oregon, Mr. PACKWOOD, be respected if another quorum call subsequent to my successful rescinding of this quorum call be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises that during a quorum call normal requests are entertained to rescind the quorum call.

Mr. HEINZ. I believe there was an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEINZ addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for not to exceed 10 mintues as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object. But if the Senator from Pennsylvania intends to address himself to his amendment in morning business, if that is the case, I think the floor ought to be open for free debate.

Mr. HEINZ. If the Senator will permit, it is my intention at the earliest possible moment to get the floor to do that. But I do not want to prejudice the right of the Senator from Montana, whose amendment is now the pending business of the Senate. So in order to proceed with greatest expeditiousness I have asked for this time to discuss my amendment. It is not my intention to preclude discussion. Indeed I welcome and want full discussion of the amendment.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Under those circumstances I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I will not object. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEINZ. I am pleased to yield to the Democratic leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in the event the distinguished Senator completes his statement as in morning business and then suggests the absence of a quorum, against whom would the time on the quorum call be charged?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time would not be charged to either side.

Mr. BYRD. Why is that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. While the Senate is conducting business as in morning business, the Senate is not on the amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Then the only way to prevent such a quorum call from running without its being charged is to object to the Senator's asking that he be allowed to proceed as in morning business. Let me say for the RECORD I disagree with the Chair's response, the Chair having been so advised by the Parliamentarian. The Senate is not in morning business. The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania is proceeding with a statement "as in morning business." He did not ask consent that, upon the completion of his statement, he might be permitted to suggest the absence of a quorum "as in morning business."

I just want the RECORD to show that I disagree with the response to my parliamentary inquiry.

I ask unanimous consent that the time I have taken not be charged against the distinguished Senator's 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

□ 1810

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I suppose after everybody has observed this discussion, they will understand just how hard it is for a Member to seek the floor under certain circumstances. But I thank all my colleagues for accommodating this Senator. It is my hope to further the debate of the Senate while some of the conflicts and details can be worked out on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER].

Obviously, I plan at the appropriate point to send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. I am not going to do that at this time. Indeed, even if we were debating in ordinary session the amendment, I would not send it to the desk at this time because I would want to control the floor and debate on the amendment. I could lose my right to the floor if I send the amendment to the desk at this time. I do not want to do that.

I do want to state very clearly what my amendment is about, and I want the text of the amendment to be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

Let me explain the situation.

Mr. President, the Finance Committee tax reform bill includes a very significant, large, and new tax preference for depreciation to be counted in the calculation of the minimum tax.

For the purposes of the minimum tax, taxpayers would determine their depreciation, and this applies principally to corporations but not exclusively, using the straight-line method over a period of time known as the midpoint of the asset depreciation range.

That period is unduly long in most cases, the Congress has recognized that on many occasions by compressing by legislation the so-called ADR life to what we have regarded as a more reasonable depreciation life, taking into account all the other factors such as competitive pressures, and the like.

The problem we have is that the depreciation calculation for the purpose of the minimum tax is so powerful and is so strong that in this Senator's judgment, at any rate, it will wrongfully force many capital-intensive companies and businessmen, particularly those who are marginally profitable, those who are having the toughest time surviving, into the minimum tax unless they are able to achieve and maintain frankly very high levels of profitability in proportion to their annual investments in machinery and equipment.

I ask unanimous consent that a table be printed in the RECORD at this point. This table clearly shows that marginally profitable companies will suffer the most from the proposed minimum tax. I ask my colleagues to study it closely.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[2] Indicate amount of tax actually payable under current law, the committee bill or the Heinz/Boren amendment.

Mr. HEINZ. I know this is a somewhat technical subject and I will endeavor to try and give it as full an explanation as is required.

Let me just say to simplify it, that, as this bill is written right now, the result is that the more companies spend on capital investment, doing what we say they ought to do, which is to modernize and do a good job, putting in the latest kind of equipment, to improve quality, to speed manufacture, to use every bit of the most sophisticated technology so they can be competitive—the more they do that, the more minimum tax they pay. To me, that just does not make the right kind of sense. It makes nonsense.

Companies that are thrown into the minimum tax to this great extent are going to be denied, as a practical matter, one of the keystones of the bill; namely, the 200 percent declining balance of the accelerated cost recovery system [ACRS] depreciation.

What would happen is that any kind of an economic setback—it might be a mild depression, it could be just increased foreign competition, or something else—would greatly accentuate the effect I have just described unless companies engage in what I consider a self-defeating process; namely, that of cutting back on their productive capital investments.

Mr. President, surely this is not what the committee really intended. What is happening is that on the minimum tax—and we have a strong minimum tax and we will have a strong minimum tax with the adoption of the amendment I will be proposing, however, what we have in the bill takes away with one hand what we have given with the other.

Capital intensive companies to which depreciation is most important will have a less favorable depreciation system than noncapital intensive kinds of industries to which depreciation is less important. In fact, some companies, may be paying minimum taxes that exceed their income minus their equipment costs, and in a real sense, taxes in excess of economic income.

Clearly, some amelioration of this harsh effect is necessary unless we are going to shoot ourselves in the foot, and shoot ourselves we will, because we will impact employment in the manufacturing sector. It has already been hard hit. It is already declining, as shown by the most recent data.

While many people will regard this question as a financial issue, it is really a jobs issue, it is a people issue, because we will lose more of our manufacturing base; we will lose more of the jobs in that manufacturing sector, and it will affect those Americans who work in steel mills or aluminum plants, or the farms or in the mines, in chemical plants or in automobile plants, in paper mills or in shipyards, and at the railroads or in the airlines.

I do not think it is going to be visible, but I have brought a chart that provides an example of the industries that will be adversely affected by the depreciation preference in the minimum tax.

I will read the list with the Presiding Officer's indulgence: Agriculture, mining, petroleum exploration, petroleum refining, textile manufacturing, sawmills, paper and pulp manufacturing, chemical manufacturing, manufacture of rubber or glass products, manufacture of wood products, manufacture of nonferrous metals, steel manufacturing, manufacture of stone and clay products, fabricated metal product manufacture, ship and boat building, electrical machinery and other mechanical products, automotive manufacture, railroad car and locomotive manufacture, rail transportation, water transportation, air transportation, pipeline transportation, telephone communications, satellite communications, electric, gas and water utilities, waste reduction and resource recovery, to name a few.

Mr. President, that is a long list but it is significant list. I want to point out that what our amendment would do would be to revise the measure of the depreciation preference that would be retained in the minimum tax.

Under the amendment which I will be offering on behalf of a number of our colleagues, first among them Senator BOREN of Oklahoma, with whom I originally raised this issue in committee, but also for Senators SYMMS and GRASSLEY, also members of the Finance Committee, the accelerated portion of depreciation deductions would be treated as a preference.

The baseline depreciation system for the minimum tax would be straight-line depreciation over the regular tax life, that is to say, straight line over 5 years for 5-year property, and straight line over 10 years for 10-year property.

The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that the change in the depreciation preference will cost $4.6 billion over 5 years.

In spite of the fact that the amendment costs $4.6 billion, it is, nonetheless, a revenue-neutral amendment because we have a way of paying for that revenue loss.

□ 1820

It would be paid for by other changes related to depreciation. So I point out that the amendment is revenue neutral and it would not change, above all, the tax rates or the treatment of any other deduction in this bill.

How do we pay for the amendment? The amendment would be paid for by a slight adjustment in the way the 200-percent declining balance depreciation system for 5-year and 10-year property is treated. Under the bill as we have it before us, depreciation switches from the declining balance method to the straight-line method for the first taxable year for which the straight-line method will yield an allowance at least as great as the accelerated method. Under the amendment, the switch would occur 1 year earlier; for example, in the 3d year rather than the 4th year for 5-year property.

I would like to illustrate by this table how that works. Under the committee bill, the amount of recovery permitted in the 1st year works out to 20 percent, 32 percent in the 2d year, 19 percent in the 3d year—by the time you get to the 4th year, it switches over to straight-line, an additional 11.5 percent. So that within 4 years under the bill, roughly 82.5 percent of all the depreciation that can be taken has been taken.

Under the Heinz-Boren amendment, the percentage of recovery occurs at exactly the same rate in the first 2 years, slightly less in the 3d year, and it is slightly more in the 4th year, with the result that over 4 years, roughly 80 percent of the assets, value, the cost of investment, is recovered for 5-year property.

That is basically how we are able to pay for this amendment according to the Joint Tax Committee and all who have analyzed the amendment. It is revenue-neutral. In fact, it probably picks up about $100 million.

The issue that I think some people will be raising is whether or not, by making this change in the minimum tax, profitable corporations are going to avoid paying their fair share of taxes. The answer to that is absolutely not. Capital-intensive companies—that is, the basic manufacturing, production, and other companies that I mentioned a minute ago—are paying a stiff price already in this tax bill. The committee bill raises $135 billion through the repeal of the investment tax credit. It seems patently unfair to virtually nullify by the proposed minimum tax one of the few beneficial provisions in the bill for capital intensive companies; namely, the retention of the 200-percent declining balance, ACRS, accelerated cost recovery system, depreciation.

The issue is, how much are we going to overtax our basic industries? How much damage are we going to inadvertently do to economic growth and international competitiveness? If you ask me, doing either of those is clearly contrary to the committee's stated intention.

I add that the acquisition of depreciable property for use in an active trade or business is not the type of activity that should give rise to an inordinately large minimum tax obligation. Investments in depreciable plant and equipment are a cost of doing business and their recovery is an essential component of staying in business.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will not let anyone convince them that this is an issue that we need not worry about because taxpayers eventually escape the minimum tax and receive a credit for prior minimum taxes paid. The fact is that so long as the depreciation preference under the minimum tax, as is true in the committee bill, remains excessive, many companies will be perpetually subject to the penalty of the minimum tax unless they go out and acquire a highly profitable noncapital-intensive company. The last thing we want to do is encourage more tax-motivated, tax-inspired mergers.

I want to be on a record that I am strongly in favor of this tax reform bill. I am also in favor of a strong minimum tax. I believe corporations that are profitable should pay taxes. But some of the strongest minimum tax proposals introduced in this body, including the one offered by my colleague from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], do not include depreciation as a preference at all. In principle, I would agree with that. My amendment would still leave depreciation as a preference. In addition, the excess of tax depreciation over book depreciation would also still be a preference under the minimum tax. My amendment does not undermine the intended purpose of the committee's minimum tax, which is to assure that all profitable corporations pay a reasonable amount of tax. Rather, my amendment merely blunts the unintended destructive effects of this tax.

In the final days before approval of the committee bill, the Committee on Finance considered an amendment similar to this. That amendment was defeated by a tie vote because it would have been financed by a slight increase in the tax rate. The amendment we offer today is financed not by changes in tax rates, but instead by changes in the regular tax depreciation system. Depreciation pays for depreciation.

I am convinced that a majority of the committee believes that the depreciation preference in the committee bill is to restrictive. Treasury officials, including Deputy Secretary Darman, have identified this as one critical aspect of the committee bill that needs to be fixed. Mr. President, I, too, would like to see this defect fixed.

This is a simple amendment, it is revenue-neutral. It makes minor changes that if not made, would have serious adverse effects on business, productivity, jobs, and international competitiveness.

I remind my colleagues that this is a matter which is very important to the jobs and livelihoods of their constituents.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that several tables that I have had prepared be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I may have more to say about this in a few minutes, but I want to recognize my colleague from Oklahoma, DAVE BOREN, who is my principal cosponsor on this amendment. He has been a very effective voice in the Finance Committee. I wish to yield to Senator BOREN without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania. I compliment him on the work he has done on this amendment. All of us, I think, favor a strong minimum tax proposal. We have examples that I have presented on this floor, myself, of 50 corporations that made over $53 billion in profits and paid no taxes at all. In fact, a few months ago, I offered on this floor a sense-of-the-Senate resolution urging the Finance Committee to include in any tax reform proposal a very, very strong minimum tax. Those that are profiting from our system should certainly pay their fair share of the upkeep of this system of Government. I believe that very strongly.

At the same time, we have to be careful that we keep legislation tax incentives in the code. We have to think about the impact of any changes that we make in the tax law on our ability to compete overseas. One of the factors that is very important in determining whether or not we can compete with other Nations in world trade—and all of us recognize that we now have a trade imbalance of billions of dollars that is sapping the economic strength of this country, transferring hundreds of thousands of American jobs overseas. We must do something about it. In order to compete with producers in other countries, we know we have to keep our wages fairly well in line, we have to have our transportation costs and our raw material costs fairly much in line.

There is another item, the cost of capital in this country, the cost of actually borrowing the money that we need to invest to modernize our plant and equipment to keep on the cutting edge of new technology. That cost in this country must be held fairly well in line with the costs of other nations or we will not have the chance to compete with our major trading competitors.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed 4 additional minutes to complete my remarks, again without the Senator from Pennsylvania losing his right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, how much time did the Senator ask for?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four minutes.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I do not mind giving 4 more minutes, Mr. President, but when we finish that 4 minutes, I would like to go back and finish up on the Melcher amendment, finish the amendment I know the Senator from California is waiting for. I know there will be some debate on the amendment of the Senators from Pennsylvania and Oklahoma but I hope that we can dispose of the other amendments at the end of the 4 minutes, before we debate the Heinz-Boren amendment, because I know we cannot dispose of that one tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, as I was saying, I think it is highly important that we keep our cost of capital within reason so we can compete with other countries. We must be encouraging American companies to reinvest, to buy new plant and equipment, to stay on the cutting edge of research and development.

□ 1830

The amendment that I am joining the Senator from Pennsylvania in offering will do just that. At the same time it will not unduly weaken the minimum tax which we so strongly support. Under our proposal, there will still be a $28 billion increase in the minimum tax over current law. It will not be possible for companies to use this provision and to make large profits and pay no taxes. But we must assure that there is some balance in the minimum tax that we are writing. What do we want to encourage Americans to do? If we are to be able to compete, hold our share of world markets, keep jobs for Americans here at home and particularly jobs for the next generation, we want to encourage companies to invest in new plant and equipment.

Now, inadvertently, in the way that the current bill figures preference items for the minimum tax, we have greatly increased the burden on those companies that do the most reinvestment, that do the most modernizing, that do the most to keep themselves competitive, those capital-intensive industries that are reinvesting.

I have a chart behind me, drawn from the formulas that are now in the bill, which indicates that under the committee bill as now written, assuming you are a company with $600 of book income—that is the income shown to stockholders in the annual report, which indicates the way the company is performing—if you have a company that has $600 in book income and only is investing $500, the effective minimum tax rate on that company is 25 percent. But if you have a company that has only $600 in book income and it is heavily reinvesting in that company, in new plan and equipment—in this example, $6,000 of reinvestment in plant and equipment and modernization out of their gross income—the effective minimum tax rate on the book income of that company goes all the way up to 86 percent. What do we want companies to do? We want them to invest more. We want them to modernize. And yet, as you notice, as this company moves from $500 to $1,000 to $2,000 to $6,000 in additional investment in plant and equipment and modernization, their effective minimum tax rate shoots up from 25 percent, to 36 percent, to 53 percent, all the way up to 86 percent. Under the proposal that the Senator from Pennsylvania and I are making, there is still a slight increase but there is much less penalty on that company which is doing the things that it needs to do to remain competitive, to keep the jobs in this country. We had discussions on this floor of the problems of the steel industry and other basic industries of this country. This is an important and a vital provision to bring fairness and balance back into it, to do what we in the Finance Committee wanted done, and this is a bill to promote international competitiveness and save American jobs.

So I stress again I strongly support—in fact, I offered a resolution on this floor for the broadest feasible definition of income under a minimum tax—the implementation of a minimum tax, but even if this proposal is adopted, we will still have a $28 billion increase in the minimum tax and a very broad definition of all forms of economic income. I think it makes a good bill a better bill. It will promote our competitiveness while at the same time it will assure that those companies which are making vast profits will still pay their fair share under a minimum tax proposal. I commend my colleague from Pennsylvania for offering this amendment. It is sound tax policy. It is good economic and good trade policy for the future of this country, and I am very pleased to support it.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may take just 2 minutes to briefly respond to the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Oklahoma on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I will speak at greater length tomorrow, but this evening I think we ought to bring on the violins because here we go again; here is that same old music we have heard before. Suddenly this is going to help the economy, this is going to help the job market, just do not put an effective minimum tax on certain corporations.

If you pass the Heinz-Boren amendment, it opens the door for any number of additional amendments to avoid the minimum tax. We have been trying to get a minimum corporate tax for a long, long time and now this bill provides such a minimum corporate tax, but before the bill is even enacted into law there is a proposal to exempt certain corporations from that minimum tax. I will discuss this subject at much greater length tomorrow, but I want this body to understand that there are many of us who believe that a minimum tax ought to be just that, a minimum tax for all the corporations of America and not just for some of the corporations of America. The proposal is even more audacious because what it would do is recover the funds that would be lost, $4.5 billion, from other corporations that are presently paying their taxes and having a difficult enough time doing just that.

This is a bad amendment and one that I hope the managers of the bill will join in helping me to defeat.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I do not want to get into a debate with the Senator from Ohio right now. However, I direct my colleagues' attention to the table I put into the RECORD a moment ago which will show I think conclusively that what the amendment does is to lighten the minimum tax burden on those companies which really are not making any economic income and it will slightly increase the tax burden on those which have a very large income including a lot of depreciation. We are going to be taxing corporations in part in relation to their ability to pay, and if anybody doubts that there is still an effective minimum tax in this bill let me remind my colleagues of this. We are not touching the so-called book income tax provision, which taxes pre-1986 depreciation. We still leave in the bill, even if this is amended as we propose, about a $29 billion corporate minimum tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

AMENDMENT NO. 2156

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment No. 2156.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Is that the amendment of the Senator from Montana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. PACKWOOD. How much time do I have left and how much time does he have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eleven minutes, 46 seconds; 2 minutes, 18 seconds.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I have been prepared, unless someone else wants to talk, to yield back the remainder of my time, if the Senator from Montana wants to yield it back or use his 2 minutes, but I do want to ask the Senator from New Jersey, does he want to say anything on the amendment of the Senator?

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time if the Senator from Montana is prepared to use up the rest of his time, either speak or yield it back, so that we can be done with his amendment tonight in terms of debate and move on to some other business.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, will the distinguished chairman yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MELCHER. Yes; I am prepared to use my 2 minutes and that is it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I will yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, earlier it was said by the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee that farmers had gotten quite a bit in this bill by the amendment process. But precious little has been obtained so far. Farmers will be granted a one shot, for just next year, $750 on the investment tax credit. Now, that is $750 per farmer who has some investment tax credit coming as the law now stands. That is not very much. Also, farmers are guaranteed that income averaging could stay. I am very grateful for that because they do need income averaging since they have low points for the losses and hopefully in the future some higher points for income because they do have huge debts and they need to pay off those debts.

What this amendment does for farmers, ranchers, and woodlot operators is to give them a little help on capital gains. They cannot have gross incomes of more than $100,000 per year. But if they do, under the terms of the amendment, they would still be eligible for capital gains as it is under present law.

Now, to pay for that—and the cost is $600 million—we would tap what is a slush fund, an inadvertent—I do not think anybody meant for it to be there, but it is—slush fund still remaining in the bill, $1.4 billion on the net operating loss carryback for corporations, a differential of 46 percent versus 33 percent which would be in effect in 1988.

□ 1840

It seems to me that it is too much of a windfall for them to get a check from Uncle Sam for a loss based on the 46 percent rather than the 33 percent. That is the slush fund I am referring to.

I hope the amendment is adopted, and I hope we can adopt it tomorrow.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to review the bidding here.

I was just going over with the distinguished chairman, Senator PACKWOOD, the fact that we have the first vote tomorrow at 10 o'clock. There may be as many as eight rollcall votes tomorrow, at 15 minutes each. So we will have shot a couple hours, probably 2½ hours, the way we do it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Did we not have a unanimous-consent agreement for 10-minutes votes after the first one tomorrow?

Mr. DOLE. That is true.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Even if they are not back to back.

Mr. DOLE. The point is that we have only 6 hours between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m., when we are supposed to vote on final passage.

So I encourage any of my colleagues who are still around that they should be prepared to do business for another hour or two tonight.

Senator WILSON has a couple of amendments, and Senator STEVENS may have one.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I assume there will be more debate on the Heinz-Boren amendment. I do not know whether it is possible to get a time agreement. Maybe that can be done tomorrow. If that takes 1 hour or 2, we will be down to 3 hours or less for about 15 amendments.

Mr. HEINZ. I would be happy to enter into a time agreement on the amendment of Senator BOREN and myself.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I do not have any objection to entering into a time agreement tomorrow.

Mr. HEINZ. Then I ask unanimous consent that there be 1 hour, equally divided.

Mr. DOLE. That is a long time.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I have to object, until the minority leader is here.

Mr. DOLE. That would be an hour of the two or three remaining.

The point is that I am still fearful that although we have made good progress today, we may get to 3 o'clock, and find there are a lot of reservations. I think the Senator from Montana wants 30 minutes on the bill, but maybe he will reduce that.

Mr. MELCHER. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. DOLE. Good. Make that quick. But the Senator wants to speak on the bill itself?

Mr. MELCHER. That is correct.

Mr. DOLE. So, instead of the 30 minutes approved on Friday, it will be 15 minutes for Senator MELCHER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order provides that.

Mr. DOLE. It does provide 15 minutes? He did not give me any break, then. [Laughter.]

Maybe by tomorrow he will feel better.

The point is that we are going to have a lot of requests for a lot of things and no time in which to do it. So if anybody can come to the floor this evening and we can continue debate on the Heinz-Boren amendment tonight, that will be helpful.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I am not in a position to debate it this evening. I thought we would be out of here at 6 o'clock, and I made arrangements.

I have a parliamentary inquiry: Let us assume that we come to the hour of 4 o'clock tomorrow and there are a number of amendments that have not been called up at that time. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, may they be called up at that time, with no debate allowed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Chair.

I say to the majority leader that I think that is a pretty dangerous situation, where amendments will be called up without any debate whatsoever, although I cannot address myself to any specific one. I think he may have as many concerns as the Senator from Ohio, and maybe a lot more.

Mr. DOLE. That is a point I think the minority leader made on Friday, that notwithstanding the great cooperation we have had on both sides, we would be in the position of having four, five, or six amendments pending, with no time to debate, and have rollcall votes. I am not certain who benefits from that. Maybe no debate is a better strategy.

In any event, I thank my colleague.

Mr. WILSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield for that purpose?

Mr. WILSON. For the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry; yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the committee substitute.

Mr. WILSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 2157

(Purpose: To allow for deduction of certain expenses related to an individual's trade or business)

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, as the votes on the Senate floor have made clear, there is broad support for the tax reform bill as it was reported by the Finance Committee. It is a bill that I enthusiastically support, and it is a bill that I hope to see enacted—enacted in a form very close to that of the bill now before us.

But one issue that I believe is dealt with better in the House bill is the treatment of miscellaneous business expenses.

Mr. President, while there are many commendable reforms to be undertaken as part of tax reform, we must remember that we are levying a tax on income, not on gross receipts.

This concept is well recognized by the tax treatment of businesses, be they in corporate form or not, by allowing deductions for ordinary and necessary expenses that help generate income. A broad array of deductions are allowed, from advertising expenses, association dues, and costs of equipment to hand tools and typewriter ribbons.

Yet, deductions for these same expenses would be denied by the Senate's tax bill. No longer would carpenters be able to deduct the cost of tools or a police officer deduct the cost of uniforms. Furthermore, if an individual loses his or her job and incurs significant expenses to find a new one, none of these expenses would be deductible. I find this last change particularly objectionable when considering all of the money we spend through direct Federal payment for unemployment coverage or trade adjustment assistance in order to help the unemployed.

It should also be noted that if an employer covered such expenses, they would be deductible by the employer for income tax purposes—and they would not be imputed as income to the employees.

Mr. President, denial of deductions for expenses that truly serve to generate income is not simply bad tax policy, it is not fair.

In this regard, I believe that the House took the proper route by allowing for the continued deductibility of these employee expenses, while imposing a 1-percent floor. The 1-percent floor is a reasonable threshold that allows us to lower rates while imposing a relatively small burden on individual taxpayers. Furthermore, it removes a significant auditing problem for minor expenses that may be only tangentially related to the taxpayer's employment, thereby reducing compliance costs. Unfortunately, the Senate bill, while also imposing a 1-percent floor, eliminates the deductibility of most types of employee expenses.

Mr. President, elimination of the employee expense deduction is not supportable as a means of lowering tax rates, for the deduction is not a loophole, nor is it an incentive that furthers some governmental policy that we can no longer afford if we are to have lower tax rates. Rather, deductibility of legitimate employee expenses ensures that our Federal income tax does not become a gross receipts tax.

Mr. President, in order to show the impact that the Senate bill's treatment of employee expenses would have, I want to highlight one type of deduction that will no longer be allowed and its effect on one group of employees—performing artists.

The one aspect of the bill that I am referring to is the repeal of the deduction for expenses incurred to search for new employment. This change will place an additional burden on someone looking to change jobs, and will be particularly severe for anyone who is unemployed.

Within the group of unemployed, the change envisioned by the Senate tax bill could have a devastating impact on people in the motion picture, music, and television industries, as well as those who ply their trade on the stage or as models, for by the very nature of their profession, their costs for finding new employment recur over and over again in a continual fashion.

That is why I have prepared an amendment to the tax bill in order to restore the deductibility of agency fees and related expenses that are incurred for the purpose of finding new employment of limited duration.

□ 1850

Mr. President, what makes the impact disproportionately severe on actors, producers, directors, musicians, and others in the entertainment industry is that such individuals are constantly looking for new work, with the assistance of agents and others, no matter how talented they may be. Employment is always temporary, for regardless of how successful a movie or television show you appear on, regardless of how good a musician you are, and regardless of how successful a show you may be acting in, it is highly unusual that the length of employment will extend as long as 1 year. Indeed, the employment more often than not lasts only a few months, a few weeks, or even 1 day.

Now, the bill does not affect all similarly situated people in the same fashion. It hurts only those in the entertainment industry who are at the bottom of the ladder. Those at the top are unaffected by this one particular change.

The reason for the disparate treatment is that the big-name actors, musicians, and others, have most often formed personal service corporations. And, like other corporations, the cost of finding new business is an ordinary and necessary business expense deductible by them. Or such people may perform their work as independent contractors. And like other independent contractors, the cost of acquiring new work is deductible to them as independent contractors.

The lesser known, struggling actors and musicians will, when they can find work, be hired as employees—and their agent and other representational fees, which run 10 percent or more, will not be deductible. Also nondeductible will be the costs of their résumés, which, because they often include video or audio tapes as well as photographic portfolios, can cost hundreds of dollars.

Unfortunately, this group of lesser knowns constitutes the vast majority in the entertainment business. According to the New York Times, of the 50 percent of the members of Actors Equity that work during the year, half earn less than $4,500. And at the Screen Actors Guild, 70 percent earn less than $2,000 per year at their craft. At the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists, the picture is somewhat brighter, but even there the median pay is $11,000.

I do not know what the revenue impact would be of a remedial change to the tax bill that would fix this problem. But I do know that leaving the bill in its present state would unfairly penalize those struggling for success as entertainers, for, by denying them deductions for legitimate job-search costs, the kind that they continually must incur, it would make it even more difficult for them to find employment.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this amendment No. 2157 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 1413 of the amendment, strike out line 24 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

employer, and

"(4) EXPENSES FOR OBTAINING EMPLOYMENT OF LIMITED DURATION.—The deductions allowed by part VI (sec. 161 and following) which consist of agency fees and other related expenses directly related to the seeking of employment of limited duration in the taxpayer's present trade or business, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary."

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I have a concern as I have stated and I know that that concern is deeply shared by my colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey, and I would be pleased to inquire of him at this time his thoughts on this issue.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, let me commend the distinguished Senator from California for raising what I consider to be a shortcoming in the Finance Committee bill. Existing law allows employees to deduct ordinary and necessary expenses incurred in performing their jobs.

The Finance Committee bill, recognizing this provision has been abused and has also imposed burdensome recordkeeping requirements, made some changes I believe that went too far. I believe the bill went too far in making draconian changes in this area.

I say to the distinguished Senator from California who I know is extremely sensitive to the area that the amendment relates to, which is the performing arts, that the issue is even broader than he has defined it. It is true that performing artists will be particularly hard hit by disallowances of deductions of employee business expenses but it is not just agency fees, and I think the Senator's statement laid that out.

It is not just agency fees that we are talking about here but legitimate out-of-pocket expenses for things like photographs, musical instruments, costumes, publicists, and so on, that are legitimate expenses incurred in producing income and therefore ought to be deducted.

I would say to the Senator that although performing artists are an important example of this, a very important example of this, as he also correctly pointed out, there are many other professions that would be affected by a draconian provision in the final bill.

Take, for example, tradespeople like carpenters or bricklayers, or whatever. They have to furnish their own tools and those should be deductible. Expenses of those employees who have to buy their own uniforms in order to get a job ought to be deductible. All these expenditures are legitimate business costs. If they exceed 1 percent of the floor they should be deductible.

Let me say to the distinguished Senator from California that I share his concern and I support what he is trying to do, and I hope that the conference will restore the deduction for all employees.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Jersey for his comment. I know that he has been very much concerned with the same problem, and I know that it is his purpose to work for the elimination of this problem in a way that is fair and equitable and that will allow those employees, who have the myriad of expenses of the wide range that he has described and that I have touched on in my own statement, to find some relief.

I wonder if I might inquire of the chairman of the Finance Committee, whom I know has been eager to keep the bill in its present form and as free of amendments as possible, whether or not his views are compatible with those expressed by the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from California. I know that he, too, is aware of the problem.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am. I talked to the Senator from New Jersey, and the Senator from California was good enough to talk to me before he started his comments tonight.

I am sympathetic to the problem. I think it is one that should be addressed on a broader scale than one or two occupations or professions. That is obviously an issue in conference that we will consider.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, based on the colloquy that we have had, it is not my purpose to pursue the amendment at this time. I am reassured by the expressions here on the floor of a recognition that this problem is one that needs to be dealt with. I will look forward to the action of the conferees to bring equity to it.

AMENDMENT NO. 2158

(Purpose: To clarify the application of the alternative minimum income tax to corporations established pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act of 1971)

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] proposes an amendment numbered 2158.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1972, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

"(E) RULES FOR ALASKA NATIVE CORPORATIONS.—The amount determined under subparagraph (A) shall be appropriately adjusted to allow:

"(i) cost recovery and depletion attributable to property the basis of which is determined under section 21(c) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act [43 U.S.C. sec. 1620(c)], and

"(ii) deductions for amounts payable made pursuant to section 7(i) or section 7(j) of such Act [43 U.S.C. secs. 1606(i) and 1606(j)] only at such time as the deductions are allowed for tax purposes.

On page 1972, on line 22, strike "(E)" and insert in lieu thereof "(F)".

On page 1907, on line 23, strike "December 31, 1986" and insert "September 30, 1986".

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, this is the first of two amendments that deal with the subject of the Alaska Native Land Claims Settlement Act.

In 1971 Congress settled a series of claims that had been presented by the Alaska Natives against the Federal Government as a result of the claims that they had for well over 100 years against our Federal Government based on the Treaty of Purchase of Alaska from Russia in 1867.

The first amendment deals with the Finance Committee alternative minimum corporate tax proposal and includes a new preference item comprising 50 percent of the difference between the corporate adjusted net book income and its prebook alternative taxable income.

I understand full well the committee's desire to eliminate discrepancies between a corporation's reporting of profits to its shareholders and its reporting of profits to the Internal Revenue Service. But because I am concerned about the new preference provision's unintended impact on two unique items to corporations established under the Alaska Native Lands Claim Settlement Act of 1971 I have presented this amendment.

As indicated, in 1971 Congress settled these claims. It was the first time that any Indian claims had been settled by legislation rather than litigation. We found a situation at that time that there were a series of tribes in Alaska and it was difficult to conceive from a management concept of a way for the assets to be transferred by the Federal Government to the Alaska Natives through the tribal entity.

So the Federal Government, through Congress, mandated the establishment of 12 Native regional corporations and 150 village corporations to manage the settlement that was conveyed to the Alaskan Natives, who are Alaskan Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts.

In that act of 1971, Congress created a unique revenue sharing concept. Section 7(i) of that act requires a corporation, 1 of the 12 corporations, any 1 of the 12 that are organized under the act, to divide all revenues received from subsurface or timber income among all of the other regional corporations. What is required is that the receiving corporation is entitled only to 30 percent of the income from the subsurface or timber operations and the other corporations are entitled to 70 percent. And that must be distributed on a per capita basis.

Under section 7(j), those regional corporations that receive this income, in turn, must distribute 50 percent of what they receive to the village corporations.

Now, sections 7(i) and 7(j) have played a crucial role in maintaining the economic viability of the Native corporations during this period of the implementation of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act over the past 15 years. I think it is important to note that the regional corporations are legally obligated to transfer 70 percent of the income it receives from this source under 7(i) to the other corporations and the receiving corporations of the 70 percent must, in turn, distribute 50 percent of what they get to the village corporations. But in reality, they are merely acting as agents for the other Native corporations so far as these revenues are concerned.

As a result of book and tax accounting differences, a regional corporation could be exposed under this bill to minimum tax liability on 7(i) and 7(j) income that it is legally required to distribute to other corporations.

We believe this is inconsistent with the Land Claims Settlement Act and is not intended by the authors of the bill that there be this inconsistency.

The second item concerns section 21(c) of ANCSA. Section 21(c) of ANCSA provided that the receipt of land and other assets received by Alaska Native corporations pursuant to the land settlement was not taxable. In addition, this section provided that the basis in the assets received would be the fair market value at the time of receipt, except in the case of certain interests in land and timber where the basis would not be less than the fair market value at the time of first commercial development.

Under generally accepted accounting principles, Mr. President, the Native corporations cannot carry many of the assets received pursuant to ANCSA on their books. This is because it is virtually impossible to make a solid estimate of the value of these assets within the provisions of Accounting Principals Board Opinion No. 29. Since there is no basis on the books for these specific assets for financial purposes, the proceeds, that is the net of costs of extraction from disposing of these assets are accounted for as profits, without any reduction for a related expense for depletion of the resource itself. However, the Native corporations are entitled to recognize a cost basis for tax purposes on section 21(c) properties that in turn gives rise to a depletion deduction.

This difference between the Native corporations' book incomes and their taxable incomes from section 21(c) timber and mineral resources is not the result of a mere timing difference, for example, because deductions or losses are accelerated for tax purposes or income is deferred—understated—for financial purposes. In this instance, taxable income more nearly resembles economic income, while book income—by ignoring the economic cost of the asset that is sold—generally overstates the profit derived from the transaction and therefore exposes them to tax liability under the new minimum tax preference. Again, this result is unfair and inconsistent with ANCSA.

Mr. President, the amendment I have offered would not exempt Alaska Native corporations from the new minimum tax preference. It would eliminate the differences between "adjusted net book income" and "prebook alternative taxable income" with respect only to sections 7(i), 7(j) and 21(c) transactions, thus ensuring that the tax reform bill does not contravene the purposes of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act of 1971.

The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that the amendment will have only a minimal effect, $4 million, on revenues over the next 5 years. The amendment I offer would raise $4 million by rolling back the effective date of a section within the foreign tax provisions of the bill. Section 984 of the bill contains new rules limiting the deductibility of interest paid to a related tax-exempt entity. My amendment would change the effective date of that provision to interest paid or accrued in years beginning after September 30, 1986. The rule as currently drafted would apply to years beginning after December 31, 1986. I am told by both the majority and minority finance staffs that this is an acceptable change.

I hope that the distinguished chairman and the distinguished ranking minority member of the Finance Committee will be able to accept this clarifying amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Alaska. The tribal corporations in Alaska are simply different from any corporations that exist. They were forced on the tribes by law. It is almost taking with one hand and giving with the other. I think the merits of this amendment are well taken and we are prepared to accept it.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator for his comments.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the Senator from Alaska yield?

Mr. STEVENS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. METZENBAUM. As I understand it, we are talking about $4 million in connection with the Alaska Native claim corporations and you are picking up that $4 million by changing the date in connection with some other matter; is that correct?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, that is right. That is really a balancing provision in order to be revenue neutral. Second provision in my amendment has no effect on the Native corporation. It brings in the $4 million, if necessary, to offset the theoretical loss. I personally do not feel there is a loss, because the income was not taxable to these corporations in the first place. Congress mandated that the 70 percent be distributed to the other corporations. They should not be taxed on that 70 percent the Congress mandated be shared with the other 11 corporations.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2158) was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the managers of the bill for agreeing to that amendment. I want to state that I have one other amendment.

I would ask that we delete from the list of the unanimous-consent items two items, one pertaining to the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation System; and the other, Endicott. I understand those are in the technical corrections and an amendment is not necessary.

I would also ask that, under the agreement that is in the unanimous-consent that I be able to offer an amendment to delete items from the bill similarly be deleted. I had that in there in case I had to delete some item in order to pick up revenue in order to justify the revenue-neutral concept of my amendment. So I am not in need of either of those. I understand the last amendment I will offer, after the other Senators have offered their amendment, which deals with the Alaska Native Land Claims Settlement Act, will also be revenue neutral because of a provision we have borrowed from the committee itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ZORINSKY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, I will be sending an amendment to the desk that I am proposing and will continue to discuss it tomorrow, inasmuch as, in all likelihood, as the majority leader and the chairman indicated, there will be a mad rush tomorrow to seek time and to seek recognition.

□ 1910

So I would just briefly like to give an introduction to this amendment but not call it up this evening because Senator Boren also has an interest in this amendment and would like to speak on it. So we will try to seek the floor tomorrow to conclude the discussion of this amendment.

Initially, Mr. President, the amendment that I was considering offering would provide equitable tax treatment for a Nebraska constituent that suffered substantial foreign expropriation loss late last year. I know there will be many in this body that say, well, here we go again, a special amendment for a special interest for a special constituent specifically in my State of Nebraska.

But I did want to bring to the attention of the body some of the unique problems that this company, a corporate entity, is having due to no fault of its own and having been a good taxpayer to this country. It is not one of those taxpaying corporate entities that I or anyone else would ever have to make apologies for as to the extent that they comply with the tax laws, to the extent that they were good taxpaying citizens of this Nation.

Again, you might say, well, why are they not taking their chances with everybody else? When you invest in a foreign nation, if something bad happens, that is just too bad. That is part of the precondition of playing the corporate game in a foreign country.

Well, unfortunately, unlike textiles, unlike manufacturing of many other types, in this business, the Enron Corporation of which I specifically speak has to go where energy resources are. Obviously, we are concerned about the Middle East because the energy resources are in the Middle East, and likewise there are energy resources in the nation of Peru which directed the attention of Enron formerly called Internorth, in a combination with the former Houston Natural Gas Co., which has a concern. They could not move the energy from Peru to the United States so that they could continue to explore in our country, or to have offshore wells in our country. They had to go to Peru where God put the energy. Unfortunately, that is something that they had no control over, and I do not think this body has any control over with regard to where the energy exists in this country.

Certainly if it did, I think we would have a better foreign policy than we currently have with regard to the rest of the world. But that being the case, and the Enron Corp., sought its future through the purchase of another corporate entity that went to Peru, and unfortunately had their holdings expropriated and nationalized by that country at gunpoint, I might say.

The tax considerations here are critical. But they are not the only issue. Trading issues, Federal policy toward business, and foreign relations are also at stake. Each aspect is important, and reservations in one area must be balanced against the consequences in other areas.

In 1983, the Enron Corp.—formerly as I described was known as Internorth Corp.—acquired an oil and gas company in Peru. The Peruvian operations had been ongoing since 1959. Last year, at gunpoint, Peru exporpiated Enron's assets, and the negotiations between the Nation of Peru and Enron have led nowhere very fast.

Currently the tax law affects Enron in the following way: Enron lost $400 million it had invested in its Peruvian operation. Under present tax law, however, Enron is limited to a deduction of $175 million. Enron loses over $200 million that the Tax Code will not recognize. (Enron purchased the Peruvian operations in such a way that Enron was forced to assume the old tax basis (=$175 million) which was in accordance with the original owners.)

THE AMENDMENT

Under my amendment, the company would be permitted to deduct the amount of its net cash invested in the Peruvian subsidiary reduced, of course, by any potential recovery. This would be a net deduction of $218 million.

Note that my amendment does not allow Enron to claim 27 million dollars worth of foreign tax credits it earned. The original version of this bill would have allowed this. The Finance Committee expressed strong concerns about the Foreign Tax Credits, so I removed them from the bill. That was a $27 million concession on behalf of Enron.

NEGOTIATIONS

Let me tell those who have questions about the negotiations, about the crowd we are dealing with. I have spoken with members of the Peruvian Parliament. I believe once you hear the facts, you will conclude that the Peruvian Government does not make a good negotiating partner.

Some argue that negotiations are ongoing, and it is therefore premature to enact this amendment. Nonsense. The amendment is set up so that the allowed deduction is reduced by whatever amounts Enron recovers from Peru or insurance.

Enron executives met with the Peruvian negotiators several times (on Janurary 7, February 10, April 23, and again since May). Several different proposals were put forward by Enron; all were rejected by Peru.

In fact, the General Manager of Petroperu told Enron officials that the Government has no money and cannot afford to pay for the assets it stole.

To stall negotiations, Peru is now taking an inventory of every little nut and bolt in the entire operation. (For example, instead of counting 1 rig, 1 platform, et cetera, they are breaking each component down to its minutest component.) This is a monumental job that will take at least another 6 months. Until the inventory is completed, the Peruvians will not even begin to discuss issues of compensation.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION IN PERU DOES NOT OFFER MUCH HOPE

When I talked with a member of the Peruvian Government about the Enron negotiations, he brushed right past that issue and asked me to help them get money from the IMF. They have no intention of paying for the property they stole. In fact, they want us to give them more money through the IMF World Bank facilities.

The Peruvian Government is under tremendous pressure to stand up against American companies. Enron happens to be a small one that Peruvian officials believe they can hurt and get away with it.

A civil war is being waged against the Government.

In April, terrorists blew up a bomb at the American Ambassador's residence.

Two weeks ago, the Government forced down and held an American airliner because it entered Peruvian airspace.

And just last week, prison uprisings resulted in hundreds of deaths when soldiers apparently gunned down prisoners even after they surrendered. CBS reported this morning that the soldiers are disobeying Government orders and burying the dead without an investigation.

In short, I would not hold my breath waiting for Peru to get serious at the negotiating table. Yet, that is exactly what we are telling Enron to do.

I have had some of my colleagues on the Finance Committee say it is too soon, to let them negotiate a while.

Well, I wish my colleagues would get in an airplane and try to negotiate with Peru in this instance. I think they are broke. They are behind in some of their payments currently. I think economically they are going to be in more severe shape.

If a settlement were made, I cannot conceive of Enron accepting buttons and bows in payment of what they financially lost in that particular area of the world.

That is exactly what we are telling Enron to do, to go down and negotiate with someone who is not going to pay, who is broke.

Enron is forced to sit still, not knowing what the outcome will be except that the United States tax laws are not standing behind them.

Let me reiterate, this is a corporate entity. If you go and look at their income tax that they pay to this Government, it is not one where I have had to make an excuse to a resident of Omaha why they pay more taxes than this corporate entity. They have always been a good taxpayer, an honest taxpayer, a big taxpayer, and a good part of the American Government.

So where is the United States of America?

The State Department has helped, but seems willing to sacrifice an American company to "preserve the peace" with Peru in a climate of accommodation. This Government of Peru stole property owned by an American company. What will it take for us to stand up to such behavior?

Our own tax laws that Enron has complied with and paid into, and has helped support our Government, had explored energy wherever it occurred in the world—our tax laws give Enron no quarter.

Why are we turning our backs on a company that has been a good citizen abroad and at home?

I say this to my colleagues, this does not open up an area of this tax reform package that establishes something deep, dark, and sinister specifically for a single American corporate entity. This is a corporate entity that obeys the law, that pays taxes and is proud to do that. But, unfortunately, it got taken by a foreign government only because they were in business there, because the source of their business exists under the ground and under the waters of that specific country.

My amendment costs less than $90 million over the next 5 years and obviously it is a one-shot deal. We pay for the amendment by slightly increasing the bill's civil fraud penalty from 75 to 85 percent, and by increasing the interest surcharge applicable in fraud cases from 50 to 60 percent.

We can put a sunset provision on that so that it equals out when they have attained the economic relief for the $90 million over a 5-year period through their deductibility, the taxes they pay, letting it phase out to its original amount as prescribed in this tax reform package.

Mr. President, I know it is a unique request, and I understand that. I, like many others, support this tax reform package. I think it is probably one of the better propositions that the people of this country will be able to have in the foreseeable future. I think it is a step in the right direction. Again, it does not contain all the items that I would like to see in it. Unfortunately, none of my colleagues have advised me how you can vote 60 percent yes and 40 percent no to reflect the proportion of good and bad in each vote.

But this is a worthy company and it is a worthwhile cause. It is a foreign nation that took property at gun point. I ask that my colleagues consider this and hopefully tomorrow when we debate this with Senator BOREN involved in the process of the debate with me, they will consider this type of amendment.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, he is saying that there is a company once called Internorth that went down into Peru and had some business relationships there. I do not believe, as I understand it, that their property was expropriated, but I think they were not able to work out their differences with the country of Peru. They lost $90 million and they are now coming to the taxpayers of this country and asking them in this tax bill to cover that $90 million loss.

I do not know the details of their situation in Peru. We do have a Government agency that takes care of expropriations, the Oversees Private Investment Corporation, providing insurance for expropriations.

I do not wish to debate the matter at length tonight, but I want to say to my colleague from Nebraska that if the matter is going to remain on the agenda and go to a vote, then I would expect to address the issue more thoroughly and more fully tomorrow. I thought I ought to place him on notice that the Senator from Ohio does have strong objections to the amendment.

Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, I respect the views of the Senator from Ohio. Before tomorrow I will get him the document from the State Department that uses the word "expropriate." In their definition and their analysis of the situation the property was expropriated, although, again, it is one of those items that if we do not want to offend, I suppose, the nationalistic views of the Government of Peru, they say they could not reach a business arrangement.

They have told me personally they are broke, they do not have money, they took it away.

But, second, the insurance part that the Senator is talking about, this amendment specifically says any recovery from insurance goes back to the Federal Government because obviously they cannot have it both ways. They cannot deduct and then collect.

Mr. METZENBAUM. In essence, is the argument that the company went to Peru, had some business difficulties, whether it is expropriation or not, and now the Senator is saying that the taxpayers of the country ought to circumvent that loss?

Mr. ZORINSKY. I am saying that the taxpayers of this country can share the future profits of Enron if they allow them some deductibility to allow them to prosper and make contributions to this country such as the $75,000.

Mr. METZENBAUM. What $75,000 is the Senator talking about?

Mr. ZORINSKY. Senatorial salaries.

Mr. METZENBAUM. They are paying our salaries?

Mr. ZORINSKY. Certainly, they are taxpayers. The last time I heard we did not get paid from the growth of money on trees.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I understand that. But there are taxpayers in Ohio contributing, businesses, individuals, and I have not yet heard that anybody has suggested that we provide a $90 million gift to any special group of taxpayers. I certainly think that it goes a long way to expect us to cover this loss. I do not think the Senator from Nebraska is in any way suggesting that they are going out of business, and even under those circumstances we do not provide that help.

Mr. ZORINSKY. The Senator is correct. But I suggest this, that if energy companies ever get to the point where they know their own Government will not support them in risk taking in an area where energy exists throughout this world, and they pull back and let foreign powers and foreign governments do the exploration and have the inside track on energy, then Ohio, Nebraska, and every other manufacturing site will deplete our internal supplies of energy and we will wish we had the American companies out there involved in that exploration.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Would the Senator from Nebraska share with us what the earning were for Internorth last year?

Mr. ZORINSKY. I do not know, Mr. President, but I can get it for the Senator tomorrow.

Mr. METZENBAUM. We can get it, I think. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2133

(Purpose: To provide that it is the sense of the Congress that tax reform legislation remain unchanged for a period of at least 5 years from the date of enactment.)

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY] proposes an amendment numbered 2133.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so orderd.

The amendment is as follows:

Insert at the appropiate place in title XVII, the following new section:

SEC.—. MORATORIUM ON TAX LEGISLATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) constant and conflicting policy changes in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (hereinafter referred to as the "Tax Code") make it difficult for individuals to properly plan for the future,

(2) constant and conflicting policy changes by the Congress retard capital formation by increasing the risk of a project,

(3) constant and conflicting policy changes by the Congress place undue burdens on individuals and businesses by requiring utilization of financial resources to anticipate such changes and modifications in the Tax Code,

(4) the Internal Revenue Service is drained of limited resources in trying to adapt to changes in the Tax Code,

(5) one of the greatest burdens placed upon small businesses is the completion of paperwork to comply with the Tax Code, and constant changes by Congress unnecessarily compound this paperwork burden,

(6) any tax reform legislation passed by the Congress should stimulate economic growth, encourage investment, promote capital formation, expand job opportunities, and encourage savings, and

(7) the American taxpayer deserves certainty in the tax treatment of economic decisions.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 which are added or amended by this Act remain unchanged for at least 5 years in order to provide stability for the American taxpayer and the private sector.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

AMENDMENT NO. 2159

(Purpose: To clarify the Alaska Native consolidated return exemption in the Tax Reform Act of 1984)

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] proposes an amendment numbered 2159.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Alaska that an amendment is pending at this time.

Mr. STEVENS. I also ask unanimous consent that the Mattingly amendment be temporarily set-aside for the consideration of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2497, beginning with "adding" on line 9, strike through line 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "striking out paragraph (5) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(5) NATIVE CORPORATIONS.—In determining whether a Native Corporation established under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act [43 U.S.C. sec. 1601 et seq.] is a member of an affiliated group with another corporation during any taxable year beginning before 1992 or any part thereof in which the Native Corporation is subject to the provisions of section 7(h)(1) of such Act [43 U.S.C. sec. 1606(h)(1)]—

"(A) the amendment made by subsection (a) shall not apply, and

"(B) the requirements for affiliation under section 1504(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 before the amendment made by subsection (a) shall be limited to the provisions expressly contained therein.

This paragraph is limited to stock owned directly by the Native Corporation or another corporation of which the Native Corporation owns all of the stock and shall be applied without regard to escrow arrangements, redemption rights, or similar provisions. Losses incurred and credits earned by a corporation (other than a Native Corporation or another corporation which is affiliated with the Native Corporation without the application of this paragraph while it is a member of an affiliated group of which a Native Corporation is the common parent) shall be treated as having been incurred or earned in a separate return limitation year of such corporation as defined in section 1.1502-1(f)(1) of the Treasury Regulations.

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. . TREATMENT OF DISTRIBUTIONS IN REDEMPTION OF STOCK HELD BY CORPORATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (b) of section 302 (relating to redemptions treated as exchanges) is amended by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (6) and by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) REDEMPTION FROM CERTAIN CORPORATE SHAREHOLDERS.—Subsection (a) shall apply to a distribution if—

"(A) such distribution is in redemption of stock held by a corporation, and

"(B) such corporation would be entitled to a deduction under sections 243, 244, 245 with respect to such distribution if such distribution were treated as a dividend,

Provided, however, That no loss shall be recognized solely by reason of the application of this paragraph (5).

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subsection (a) of section 302 is amended by striking out "or (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(4), or (5)".

(2) Paragraph (6) of section 302(b) (as redesignated by subsection (1)) is amended by striking out "or (4)" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "(4), or (5)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to distributions after date of floor action, unless pursuant to a binding written contract in effect on that date and at all times thereafter.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act of 1971 [ANCSA] established 12 Native regional corporations and more than 150 Native village corporations to manage the land and cash granted to Alaska Natives—Eskimos, Indians, and Aleuts—in satisfaction of their aboriginal land claims. Largely as a result of the Federal Government's delay in implementing the settlement, many of the Native corporations are in poor financial shape today and have incurred large net operating losses, which they will not be able to utilize internally in the foreseeable future.

In an effort to respond to this crisis, Congress—through the good offices of Senator DOLE—in the 1984 Tax Reform Act exempted Native corporations until 1991 from changes in the Internal Revenue Code's consolidated return provisions, which established an 80-percent equity ownership requirement for consolidation. 1991 is significant because that is the date that stock in the Native corporations becomes alienable and the corporations may lose their Native character.

Congress intended that the exemption would allow a Native corporation to offset the income of a non-Native corporation's profitable subsidiary with its net operating losses [NOL's] and share the resulting tax benefits with the non-Native corporation. The idea was that this infusion of capital would allow many Native corporations to put their financial houses in order. We also hoped that the NOL transactions would enable many Native corporations to acquire new business expertise by establishing long-term substantive relationships with non-Native corporations.

Implementation of the Native exemption was disrupted last year when the IRS declined to rule on a low-equity Native NOL transaction. The IRS did not oppose such transactions per se but feared that ruling favorable on the Native transaction might undermine its argument in lawsuits involving non-Native corporations that a substantial equity requirement was part of the pre-1984 consolidation return provisions. Very few Native corporations would be able to do NOL transactions if they had to meet a high equity ownership requirement.

The refusal of the IRS to rule has not stopped low-equity Native NOL transactions from going forward. It has, however, eroded the bargaining position of Native corporations in negotiating these transactions, substantially reducing their share of the tax benefits produced by the transactions.

In summary, the evidence received so far indicates that Native NOL transactions are going ahead now. The legal uncertainties are being dealt with by escrow arrangements, and so forth, that cut down on the Native corporations' share of the net tax benefits.

Our clarifying amendment, which was drafted with the assistance of the Internal Revenue Service, would increase the Native share of the net tax benefits, thus furthering the policy decision made by Congress in 1984. It might encourage some small Native corporations, which would otherwise not take advantage of the 1984 provision, to enter into the NOL transactions but the revenue impact of that would be moderate, for example, $50 million maximum over the fiscal years 1986-91 period. We think it would be substantially less.

The clarifying amendment would offset the projected $50 million revenue loss by amending section 302 of the Internal Revenue Code to provide that certain distributions in redemption of stock held by corporate shareholders be treated as true redemptions. This change would prohibit the corporate shareholder from excluding all or a portion of the distribution under the dividends-received deduction provisions. Joint Tax Committee has estimated that this corporate tax change will raise approximately $50 million over fiscal years 1986-91.

EXPLANATIONS OF ALASKA NATIVE CONSOLIDATED RETURN EXEMPTIONS CLARIFYING AMENDMENT

The 1984 Tax Reform Act substantially revised the definition of "affiliated group." Members of an affiliated group of corporations may file, or be required to file, consolidated returns. The provision was generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984. However, section 60(b)(5) of the Act provides that the amendments made to the definition of an affiliated group do not apply before 1992 to any Alaska Native Corporation established under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act of 1971 (ANCSA). This exemption was granted to Alaska Native Corporations in recognition of the special restrictions which apply to these corporations (section 7(h)(1) of ANCSA). In addition, it was recognized that, primarily as a result of difficulties encountered in implementing ANCSA, most Alaska Native Corporations have experienced serious financial problems. The purpose of the exemption for Alaska Native Corporations was to further implement ANCSA by assisting these corporations to improve their financial health.

The clarifying amendment provides that under the exemption for Alaska Native Corporations, affiliation is based solely on ownership of stock which meets the 80 percent voting power and non-voting stock tests. Therefore, no minimum equity requirement applies. In addition, the 80 percent voting power and non-voting stock tests shall be applied without regard to escrow arrangements, voting trusts, redemption or conversion rights, stock warrants or options, convertible debt, liens, or similar arrangements. Likewise, affiliated group status is to be determined without regard to an Alaska Native Corporation's purpose for acquiring the voting stock of another corporation.

Mr. President, this amendment which I have submitted will carry out the original intent of the 1984 exemption. I am informed that there is a loss as a result of this amendment. As I mentioned earlier, we have offered as part of the amendment a provision to offset that loss by providing that certain distributions in redemption of stock held by corporate shareholders be treated as true redemptions. This change would prohibit the corporate shareholder from excluding all or a portion of the distribution under the dividends-received deduction provisions.

The Joint Tax Committee has informed me that this provision will raise approximately the same amount as the clarifying amendment will cost. Again, it is one of those situations, Mr. President, where actually if the 1984 act had been appropriately implemented, there would be no amendment necessary to this act and, therefore, there would be no need to discuss the issue of revenue loss.

I am hopeful that my good friends will understand once again this is one of the provisions I have been talking about to try and make the Alaska Native Land Claims Settlement Act work.

The impact of changes in the Internal Revenue Code at times has been such that we have had to seek these exemptions to make sure that the original intent of Congress in the 1971 act is achieved.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. As usual, my good friend from Alaska is exactly correct, and on this side I find the amendment in perfect order and am prepared to accept it.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. There is no objection to the amendment on this side.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the chairman of the Finance Committee and the distinguished Senator from New Jersey. I want to emphasize that I have discussed this amendment with the Secretary of the Treasury. The amendment is not intended to set any type of precedent for net operating losses.

In 1984 and again today we are offering an amendment in order to further the purposes of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act. The amendment before us is necessary in order to offset some of the net operating losses that were caused by the delay of Congress in eliminating impediments to the distribution of land to the regional and village corporations pursuant to ANCSA.

This amendment allows a portion of the loss that was incurred as a result of the failure of the Federal Government to live up to its commitment to the Natives to be absorbed in a tax transaction. The amendment is grounded in social policy, the policies of ANCSA, and not in tax policy considerations.

The Native corporations were organized pursuant to the mandate of the 1971 act. Alaska Natives operate these corporations pursuant to a mandate of the Congress.

I appreciate the action of my colleagues in understanding the problems the Natives face. I ask for the consideration of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska.

The amendment (No. 2159) was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CONVENTION ON WETLANDS OF INTERNATIONAL IMPORTANCE (TREATY DOCUMENT NO. 99-28)—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from a Convention on Wetlands of International Importance (treaty document No. 99-28) transmitted to the Senate today by the President of the United States.

I also ask that the treaty be considered as having been read the first time; that it be referred with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance especially as Waterfowl Habitat, concluded at Ramsar, Iran, February 2, 1971, and a Protocol to the Convention, concluded at Paris on December 3, 1982. The report of the Department of State is also enclosed for the information of the Senate.

The Convention is the result of a broad international recognition of the economic, cultural, scientific, ecological, and recreational value of wetlands, coupled with rising concern over the progressive worldwide loss and degradation of these habitats and their dependent resources. The Convention provides a framework for promoting the conservation of wetlands through international cooperative and coordinated actions, consultations, and information exchange.

A primary obligation under the Convention is the designation by Contracting Parties of wetlands within their territory for inclusion in a "List of Wetlands of International Importance." If advice and consent to ratification is forthcoming, I intend to designate the four wetlands named in the Department of State report.

The Protocol to the Convention establishes the four language texts of the original Convention as equally authentic and provides a mechanism for amending the Convention.

International efforts directed toward wetlands conservation are vital to the preservation of United States migratory bird populations, which are affected by the loss of wetlands habitats to the south. United States participation would complement domestic wetlands protection efforts and legislation; help stimulate Latin American countries, in particular, to cooperate in protecting the wintering habitat of birds that migrate to North America; and provide a framework for sharing U.S. wetlands technology and expertise.

I recommend that the Senate consider this matter at an early date, and give its advice and consent to ratification of the Convention and Protocol.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 23, 1986.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] will be coming to the floor, as well as perhaps one other Senator, to take care of their amendments this evening.

AMENDMENT NO. 2160

(Purpose: To provide for a short-term extension of the authorization of the Federal Housing Administration, and other programs until September 30, 1986, and to increase the limitation on FHA home mortgage guarantees)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment with a further Senate amendment which I send to the desk on behalf of Senator GARN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for Mr. GARN, proposes an amendment numbered 2160.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by the said amendment, insert:

SECTION 1. Each provision of law amended by Public Law 99-289, is amended by striking out "June 6, 1986" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1986".

SEC. 2. The applicable limitation on additional commitments to insure mortgages and loans to carry out the purposes of the National Housing Act during fiscal year 1986 is increased by an additional $9,500,000,000 of mortgage and loan principal.

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, the amendment proposed, does two things. First it extends the FHA authorization, and the authorization of a number of other programs, to September 30, 1986.

The second purpose of the amendment is to raise the current FHA loan guarantee limitation by $9.5 billion.

The amendment differs from the House passed amendment by correcting a technical error which raises questions over the extent that the FHA loan limitation is increased.

The intent of the House amendment was to raise the fiscal year 1986 limitation to $132 billion, the same level that will be yielded by the conference action on the Urgent Supplemental Appropriations bill.

The amendment would increase the existing loan guarantee limitation on FHA by $9.5 billion—enough authority to resume normal FHA activities through July 18.

The budget impact of the amendment would reduce fiscal year 1986 outlays by $198 million. Since the CBO scoring of the Urgent Supplemental Conference agreement is a total of $199.6 million under current level, passage of the FHA extender (H.J. Res. 652) with the $9.5 billion credit cap increase will not jeopardize the "deficit neutrality" of the supplemental.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished minority leader for his resounding vote.

TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, if it is accommodating to the leadership, I wish to give my impressions of this tax bill as it pertains to New Mexico with a short speech.

Mr. President, I will ask the distinguished manager of the bill. I have about a 10-minute speech which is my summary of the impact of this bill on a State like mine. I want to do that when it is most accommodating to the Senate.

Does the Senator who is the manager of this bill think this would be an appropriate time or does he have something else that is significant?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I ask Senator DURENBERGER, who has I think an amendment he may be offering, is he going to offer an amendment and want us to dispose of it?

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I want to offer the amendment and dispose of it tonight. I would like to be able to. But I am not sure whether that can be accomplished or not.

It is a matter on the chairman's list, called the Great Northern Trust, for the benefit of my colleagues.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield for a question?

Mr. DURENBERGER. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Ohio for a question.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I do not know exactly what this amendment is.

Is this the amendment that overturns two court decisions that have heretofore been made?

Mr. DURENBERGER. This is an amendment relating to the taxation of the Great Northern Trust, which at one point by a court was determined to be an association rather than a trust, and as a consequence of that, as I understand it, a private-letter ruling from the Internal Revenue Service has indicated that it must be taxed as an association rather than as a trust.

□ 2010

But, as far as overturning two court decisions, it is not my purpose to propose this amendment to do that.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I just want to advise my colleague that I think we have an objection to this amendment. We certainly have no objection to his bringing it up at this point. As I understand it, I think there is another amendment pending on the floor, the Mattingly amendment. But we can certainly work out the parliamentary arrangement so that the Senator from Minnesota can have an opportunity to debate this issue.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, does the Senator from New Mexico have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico does have the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. I would once again ask my friend, the chairman of the Finance Committee, what his desire is. I would like to give my explanation of this bill at some time before you pass it and I do not want to infringe on the closing moments of tomorrow, which are yours and those who have worked so hard. I need about 10 minutes and I will do it when it is most accommodating.

Mr. PACKWOOD. My first desire is—it is 10 after 8—that I would like to go home and have dinner with my family. That is my first desire. I see a few other hands being raised in the Chamber.

Obviously, I am going to stay here as long as anybody wants to go. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota certainly is not going to pass tonight and, apparently, I have forgotten we had the amendment of the Senator from Georgia pending. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PACKWOOD. So it will not be disposed of tonight, in any event, other than by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOMENICI. What time are you coming in in the morning?

Mr. PACKWOOD. May I address the Chair: It is 9:30?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will convene at 9 o'clock and routine morning business will be completed by 9:30.

Mr. PACKWOOD. And we are on the bill at 9:30. We have a vote at 10 o'clock.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does the chairman need the time?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I think probably the Senator from New Mexico would be better off to go tonight, if he wants to stay, because tomorrow we are going to have five or six or seven amendments that may require votes and some debate. I think you would be better off to say what you want to say tonight if you want to say the entire thing rather than wait until tomorrow and take your chances.

Mr. DOMENICI. I would prefer to do that. I do not at all want to infringe on your time, I say to my good friend, the chairman. If you cannot accomplish the Durenberger amendment, I see no reason why you have to manage the bill in my behalf while I am summarizing the beneficial effects of this bill to my State. I think I have done a different job in analyzing this than anyone else. I think I know precisely how much New Mexicans are helped in almost every category—50,000 leave the tax rolls in one of the smallest States in the Union. We are helped 8½ percent, on average, across the board in our taxes, and that is because we have some very peculiar situations. But I truthfully want to tell the Senate about it and tell my people about it.

So if you want me to do that now, I clearly do not want you to stay here and be burdened by that. Would you prefer I do it the first thing in the morning?

Mr. PACKWOOD. No; I would rather you do it now.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will.

Mr. President, I wish to say a few words about H.R. 3838, as amended by the Senate Finance Committee and presently pending before the U.S. Senate.

What I want to do is describe the importance of this bill to the people of my State. The Committee on Finance, as we have all said here on the floor, is to be commended for its hard work in developing this bill—the most significant tax legislation in more than a generation.

This is "reform." It is a reform bill that provides tax reform—not a cliche or not just in name as has been so much a part of the rhetoric of tax legislation in the past.

H.R. 3838 reverses the trend of the past several decades where Congress simply created a jerry-built structure of taxes with loopholes and shelters piled on top of more loopholes and more shelters piled on top of more of the same.

For decades, tax policy was used as a way to make certain that particular types of investments were attractive. Said more bluntly, tax policy was used to distort investment decisions.

H.R. 3838 replaces that house of shelters with a new structure, one with windows open to the breeze of fairness and neutrality in terms of the investment of the money that belongs to our people. This means that families earning approximately the same income will pay approximately the same level of taxes, regardless of where or how the money is earned.

I applaud that decision. The people of New Mexico—as well as the Nation—applaud that decision, or I can predict with certainty, if the conference returns with something close to this, they will applaud it.

Why is this important? Unless a person happens to be a big investor, why should he or she care if the tax policy encourages investments in beef feed-lots or high-rise apartment buildings, even if they are not necessarily needed, instead of high technology and microchips?

The answer comes from how we as humans—and investors—react. Investors look for the maximum net return—cash in the wallet.

This means that relatively poor investments can, when freed of tax consequences, produce a very attractive net return. That return may be more attractive, under present law, than a similar sized investment in a more dynamic growth company, but one that must pay a full tax bill.

When tax policy encourages investment in a shelter, that tax policy also makes it less attractive to invest in companies or businesses not so favored.

Since that second investment is less attractive, it will almost surely have to pay more to borrow. It may not be able to expand as rapidly as it would be able to grow in a tax-neutral world.

The result: higher interest costs on investments that are sound, yet lack the lure of the tax shelter.

In fact, I am positive that the tax laws of the United States have done more to allocate interest costs than almost any other single factor.

This can become critical when the capital-hungry industry turns out to be something like a young-tech company struggling to compete in world markets with the Japanese or Koreans.

Today's tax policy often makes it more attractive to invest in construction of structures or businesses, where world competition is meaningless, to the detriment of new technological companies working at the cutting edge of industrial knowledge.

Tomorrow's tax policy—the policy of this bill—frees American industry from tax prejudice. It is a bill that silences the siren lure of the shelter.

I do not want to underestimate the risks of this bill. By eliminating incentives such as the special treatment for capital gains and the investment tax credit—replacing both with a broad lowering of rates—America will be taking a chance. We will risk the fact that heavy capital investments in general may become less attractive. We will risk that investment dollars may gravitate toward the less risky company, the company that stresses income rather than growth.

Yet, I believe the opportunities that grow from the tax fairness and tax neutrality are worth the risk.

Frankly, I believe that a tax code that is fair insulates itself from the risk that taxpayers will stop paying their taxes and will seek every day to avoid payment.

This bill culminates the dramatic shift toward lower tax rates and fewer shelters begun by President Reagan. The top personal rate in this bill is 27 percent. The rate for most American families will be 15 percent.

When Ronald Reagan became President of the United States—and, incidentally, when we became the majority party, the Republican Party, in the U.S. Senate—the top personal tax rate was 70 percent.

As President Nixon did the unexpected in opening relations with China, President Reagan has moved aggressively in tax policy. He has acted in a way other Presidents might have found politically impossible. If this reform effort should fail, we may have to wait several decades to see true tax reform and fairness.

With that general background, let me now describe for the benefit of my colleagues a few of the items that hold particular significance for the citizens and the economy of New Mexico.

□ 2020

On a national basis H.R. 3838 will bring the advantage to the average American family a tax cut of about 6.4 percent. A family of 4 with a gross income of $23,000 will see its taxes cut 62 percent. A family of 4 with a gross income of $13,000 will pay no Federal taxes at all under this bill. That is as it should be.

They are the working poor of America. And what sense does it make for us to have socioeconomic policies which attempt to help those people, the working poor, with grants, aids, and various Federal programs that give them things while we are encouraging them to work and at the same time they have to pay taxes? It is a truly ridiculous situation for a growing society.

That leads me to be very proud of what I hear about our people in this country because I understand that one of the things that is most attractive to most American rich, conservative, business people, the whole gamut—is that we are removing people who earn $13,000 and less from the tax rolls. I was not so sure that I would have believed that as I look out there at the country. However, I have now seen three major polls that say Americans are most proud of about this bill is that those who work hard and attempt to get ahead, but are not making enough to be much more than the working poor will no longer pay taxes.

The typical New Mexican will see their 1987 taxes cut by 8.5 percent as a result of this bill. If the sales tax deduction is restored fully, as I believe it should be—and I urge our distinguished chairman who wonders from time to time whether it is a significant issue and important to States like mine. Let me give the number. If we get the fairness of a full sales tax deduction, New Mexico residents could receive a tax cut that could go as high as 10 percent. And I think that is good news. It is good news for our families and our State, and for our economy.

I think that bodes well for America's future. Because this tax bill provides greater tax relief for lower-income families, reducing the income disparity between the rich and the poor, the typical New Mexico family will do even better than average.

Next, there is the number of persons affected. This bill removes about 6 million Americans from the tax rolls. Americans, rich and poor, favor that removal. They see it as fair to families with lesser incomes. So do I.

Last year New Mexicans filed 499,800 returns on which taxes were paid. Because of the increase in the minimum income on which taxes must be paid, 50,000 New Mexicans—1 of every 10 of those paying Federal taxes in New Mexico—will be relieved of the burden of paying any Federal taxes on their 1988 incomes.

I repeat, 50,000 New Mexicans will be relieved of any Federal income tax to our National Government—1 out of every 10—as a result of this bill.

I believe that is fairness, and that shows that this system invites them to succeed to work, and does not punish them at the very fringe of subsistence by taxing poverty—especially from those who are trying to get out of it by working.

To assure greater fairness, H.R. 3838 imposes a new minimum tax on both individuals and corporations tightening down on shelters, and by imposing the minimum tax H.R. 3838 will insist that taxes be paid by those who have legally used shelters in current law to reduce or eliminate their tax bill.

There is nothing that is more misunderstood, nothing that is more infuriating than to have the average taxpayer address the issue of those who make much more than they do, and pay nothing. There is nothing that infuriates people more, whether they understand it or not, than to read of corporations that make large amounts of profit and pay no taxes.

We understand that is the result of our tax system, and there is nothing illegal about it. But this bill will say "that just will not work." And indeed, the American people insist that it be changed because it does not sound, look or smell like fairness. That is what tax reform is all about, treating all taxpayers in as close to the same manner as you can. I applaud that decision, and I applaud the effort to build credibility into this tax bill. Americans expect it, and Americans are expected to pay their taxes voluntarily.

If you are interested in a system that is departed from it, you can go to France. They have so departed from it that for anybody that owes a substantial amount of tax they negotiate it one on one with the tax collector because it makes no sense for them to pay voluntarily. It is so complex, so unfair, and filled with loopholes that they negotiate their tax bill one on one.

Our country will go bankrupt if we let that happen. And we are in the nick of time because many, many people are thinking about not being good citizens when it comes to paying their taxes.

What about our New Mexico economy? How will H.R. 3838 affect us?

Let us look at oil and gas, one of our largest industries. Unlike the House bill, the Senate tax bill leaves in place current law regarding the percentage depletion allowance and intangible drilling costs. That is as it should be. This is one area where we are saying we need to attract investment, and increase our independence. America must continue to encourage oil and gas exploration.

The House bill cuts back on intangible drilling costs and phases out the depletion allowance. While the minimum tax will affect some oil and gas investors and thus affect exploration, the Senate language is far preferable to the House provisions. I urge that the Senate conferees do all they can to hold firm on the Senate provision.

I am also very pleased that the Senate bill extends for 2 years the targeted job tax credits, allowing employers to receive special benefits for hiring the unemployed or underemployed. This has been an important program encouraging business to expand and hire new workers. I have long believed that targeted job credits provide an excellent source of new jobs. H.R. 3838 endorses that philosophy.

The Senate bill extends the research and development tax credits at their current level of 25 percent for the next 4 years. This, too, is a wise and praiseworthy decision, one that is particularly beneficial to a science-oriented State like New Mexico.

Similarly, the continuation of solar energy credits for business will push this important industry into new areas of expansion.

The Senate bill imposes no rules altering the way hard mineral taxes are imposed; the House version, by contrast, reduces depletion to 5 percent across the board. The conferees need to hold to the Senate position.

H.R. 3838 helps farmers. It lowers tax rates, and it will reduce sharply the use of agriculture as a tax shelter for big city investors. What does that mean? It means that there will be less overproduction, and, thus, less drain on prices and farm income. The bill retains income averaging for farmers and cash accounting, which are both important to farm families.

The bill reduces from 10 years to 5 years the minimum period that an employer can require an employee to work before the employee gains the right to a pension. This is important for women. It is important for teachers. It is important for professionals in the high-technology fields so vital to New Mexico.

The high-technology field is particularly competitive and very mobile. The new vesting rules should help the very people on whom we depend to strengthen New Mexico's economy.

H.R. 3838 provides additional important benefits directed toward women. Besides the pension reforms, the earned income credit is increased to target more effectively tax relief for working, low-income taxpayers with children.

Another important feature of this bill is the provision setting the personal exemption at $2,000. My colleagues may be aware that New Mexico led the Nation this year in raising the personal exemption to $2,000. H.R. 3838 takes the wise course of placing the United States in line with New Mexico.

Mr. President, H.R. 3838 is a good bill. It is a bill I support with enthusiasm. While there are a variety of items that need to be corrected in conference—full sales tax deductibility and the individual retirement account [IRA] are the most obvious—the basic thrust of H.R. 3838 is sound. It is legislation that does great honor to this body.

In closing, Mr. President, I would like to pay a particular tribute to Chairman PACKWOOD, to Senator LONG, and to their colleagues on the Committee on Finance.

They are to be commended personally for their leadership, their vision, and, most of all, their courage. They dared to think creatively. They dared to pass up the easy approach that would have left smiling nearly every sponsor of a shelter in this town.

Rather, they have produced legislation that is bold and daring, legislation that is fair and neutral, legislation that seems certain to benefit more Americans than any other bill enacted during this decade.

Chairman PACKWOOD, Senator LONG, committee members, we applaud you. The people of New Mexico thank you.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a table prepared from figures provided by the New Mexico State Department of Taxation and Revenue. This table, using State taxation categories, provides a guide to the impact of H.R. 3838 on various taxpayer groups in New Mexico.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EFFECTS OF THE SENATE TAX BILL ON NEW MEXICO TAXPAYERS

Income class (thousands)	Percent change in tax liability under Senate bill [1]	Percent of taxpayers		Number of New Mexico taxpayers [2]
		United States [2]	New Mexico [2]
0 to $10	−63.0	31.6	31.4	157,000
$10 to $20	−20.1	21.1	26.9	134,500
$20 to $30	−8.1	19.8	17.8	88,900
$30 to $40	−5.0	11.9	11.1	55,400
$40 to $50	−6.6	6.6	5.9	29,400
$50 to $75	−3.9	5.8	4.5	22,300
$75 to $100	−3.3	1.4	1.0	5,000
$100 to $200	−3.8	1.3	.9	4,400
$200 plus	−4.7	.5	.6	2,800

[1] These figures have been taken from a study by the Joint Committee on Taxation, released June 6, 1986. Percentages of U.S. taxpayers in each income tax group are projected figures for 1988.

[2] These figures are derived from data from the New Mexico State Department of Taxation and Revenue. Income class in these cases represents adjusted gross income after deductions in 1984. Taxpayers filing negative taxable income (since the State offered a tax rebate) have not been included.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand that the only other matter that might have been disposed of is the Durenberger amendment on which there are now negotiations going on. That may be resolved by tomorrow morning.

COSPONSORS OF THE HOLLINGS BUDGET FREEZE

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise today to clarify a technical error that was made in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD more than 2 years ago.

On May 1, 1984, I brought my budget freeze plan to the floor of the Senate during consideration of the fiscal year 1985 budget resolution. At the time, as is the usual procedure, I asked unanimous consent that several of my colleagues be added as cosponsors of the budget freeze.

Unfortunately, through a clerical error, several Senators were never recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as cosponsoring the budget freeze. Among them were the Senator from Vermont, Mr. LEAHY, and the Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. BOREN.

Mr. President, Senators LEAHY and BOREN were among the original 16 Senators who had the courage to vote for the across-the-board freeze on Federal spending that I first introduced in 1982. Had my budget freeze been enacted on that vote in 1983, there would be no budget deficit at all by 1990.

In 1984, their continued support and cosponsorship of the budget freeze helped to more than double the number of votes for the plan in the Senate. We could not have mustered that kind of support without the active help of all of the cosponsors.

Mr. President, as the sponsor of the Hollings budget freeze, I wish to clarify that these Senators were, indeed, cosponsors of that budget plan. And, as one of the co-authors of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings balanced budget law, I should also say that these Senators truly understand the urgency of eliminating the Federal deficit.

These clerical errors occur, and they are unfortunate. However, let the RECORD show that I appreciate the efforts of these Senators in cosponsoring the Hollings freeze. It is through their efforts that the discipline of fiscal responsibility is finally setting in. Mr. President, those like Senators LEAHY and BOREN who were part of this fight from the start have my strong admiration.

ROGERS COMMISSION REPORT ON THE SPACE SHUTTLE CHALLENGER

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the report of the Presidential Commission on the Space Shuttle Challenger has now been released and is currently undergoing study within Congress and the administration. In its report the Commission recommends that "the joint" be completely redesigned, all critical items on the shuttle be reviewed before the shuttle flies again and safety procedures be improved. I wholeheartedly endorse these recommendations and urge my colleagues to give the support NASA will need in order to implement these changes.

In the aftermath of the Challenger tragedy and the completion of the Commission's work we must look to the future with new resolve that our efforts in space go forward. With the support of Congress, NASA should take the necessary steps to get the shuttle program moving again. And while we must not sacrifice safety for expediency, getting the shuttle program back on schedule must be a national priority. It is also imperative, in my judgment, that Congress move with haste to approve legislation authorizing NASA to go forward with the development and construction of a fourth orbiter. Because the space shuttle is the Nation's premiere launch vehicle, long launch delays will mean that important commercial, Government, and scientific payloads will be postponed. We have come to depend on the routine access to space that the shuttle provides us and on the important duties only it can perform. In order to achieve the goals established for the shuttle and get our space program moving again, we must begin as soon as possible on the construction of a fourth orbiter to replace the Challenger. I was greatly pleased that President Reagan expressed his support for building a new orbitor earlier this month.

Since its initial launch on April 12, 1981, the space shuttle has been the cornerstone of the U.S. manned space program. During its 5 years of operation the shuttle has proven to be capable of a variety of space operations that cannot be achieved with today's expendable launch vehicles. For example, it has the ability to retrieve payloads from orbit for reuse; to repair and service satellites in space; to transport to orbit, operate and return space laboratories; to transport materials and equipment to orbit; and to perform rescue missions. The space shuttle will also play a vital role in constructing and operating the permanent manned space station.

Mr. President, I have been concerned with remarks made by administration officials in recent weeks indicating that NASA should be required to pay for a new orbiter by taking funds from other programs. This is an unrealistic approach and could prove devastating to many ongoing and important NASA programs. Production of the fourth orbiter should not come at the expense of other programs within NASA. In particular, NASA must continue with the schedule established for development of a permanent manned space station so that it will get a new start in 1987 and be operational by the mid-1990's. Both the shuttle and space station programs deserve the strong support of Congress and should continue simultaneously. Without a vigorous space program the United States is threatened with permanently losing leadership in this area to the Soviet Union. The Soviets are moving ahead in both manned and unmanned missions and have put a permanent space station in orbit around the Earth. This is not the time for the United States to slacken in its commitment to a strong national space program.

Mr. President, I would like to make a few general comments on the report of the Presidential commission. The Commission pointed to a wide array of management problems in the space agency as being fundamentally responsible for bringing about the failures which led to the Challenger disaster. There is no doubt but that over the years there have been numerous managerial mistakes and misjudgments within NASA. It is also evident that there have been serious and repeated communications breakdowns between engineers and managers, between the separate NASA centers, and between the contractors and NASA. I believe NASA will learn much from its past mistakes and should move expeditiously to correct them. I also believe NASA will emerge from this dark period a wiser, stronger, and more efficient agency.

As NASA struggles to resume its space operations I think we should keep in mind the Agency's spectacular successes during the past 25 years and the fact that it had a 100 percent flight safety record during that time. NASA is responsible for establishing America as the world leader in space exploration and scientific research. It has increased the quality of life of all Americans and has advanced our understanding of our planet, our solar system, and the universe. The Agency has been so successful many had come to expect it to be near perfect in all its endeavors. NASA now needs the support of all Americans, and especially the Congress, as it works to implement the changes recommended by the Commission and begins to move our space program forward.

Mr. President, there will no doubt be many more spectacular and important feats performed by NASA in the years to come. The Nation's space program, much like the firebird, must and will go forever onward to reach new plateaus and new horizons in the eternal quest for understanding our cosmos and our place in it.

THE RETIREMENT OF DR. WILLIAM R. LUCAS

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, today I would like to share with my colleagues an account of the career of an outstanding Alabamian and a very good friend, Dr. William R. Lucas. Dr. Lucas is retiring from his position as the director of the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, AL after spending nearly his whole life serving his country—both in the military and at NASA. A true space pioneer, he has been with the center and its predecessor organizations for more than 30 years, directing a major portion of the Nation's space endeavors.

In addition to the 1,800-acre Huntsville facility, Dr. Lucas also oversaw additional facilities in Mississippi and Louisiana. The Marshall Space Flight Center is well known for its role in developing NASA's powerful launch vehicles and propulsion systems, and as a developer of important research and technology payloads for space flight.

Born and educated in Tennessee, Dr. Lucas holds a BS degree in chemistry from Memphis State College—now Memphis State University—and MS and PhD degrees in metallurgy from Vanderbilt University. Prior to beginning his association with the space program, he served as a naval officer during World War II.

Dr. Lucas moved to Huntsville, AL in 1952 to join the Redstone Arsenal team of rocket pioneers headed by Dr. Wernher Von Braun. A specialist in materials, he pioneered the work that resulted in the concept of ablation cooling, which allowed our space vehicles to reenter the Earth's atmosphere from space without burning up. He also established overall criteria for the selection of materials for use with liquid oxygen. That criteria became the standard for industry, and still in use today.

He was also responsible for designing the passive thermal control system for the free world's first satellite, Explorer I, which was launched by a Huntsville team and Jupiter rocket in 1958. And he selected the materials used in the Redstone that would carry the Nation's first astronaut, Alan Shepard, into space in 1961.

In 1960, Dr. Lucas joined the newly formed Marshall Space Flight Center when the Army's rocket team was annexed by the fledgling National Aeronautics and Space Administration. For most of the decade of the 1960s, while working on the giant Saturn family of rockets, he served in progressively responsible management positions with the center's Propulsion and Vehicle Engineering Laboratory, becoming laboratory director in 1966. In these positions he directed the critical selection of major materials and welding techniques for future launch vehicles. He pioneered work with spray-on foams for cryogenic insulation and high-temperature materials. And he led the development of the world's largest propulsion system used in the giant Saturn 5 launch vehicle. This Saturn was the 36-story, multistage rocket that successfully launched the series of Apollo spacecraft which carried 27 Americans to the Moon. Twelve of them landed on the Lunar surface, and several of those were transported by lunar roving vehicles, Moon cars, developed by the Marshall Center.

Dr. Lucas was involved in another major project during this time, the design and development of the world's first space station, Skylab. Under his direction, one of the upper states of the Saturn 5 was transformed into a laboratory and living area where three astronaut crews would eventually spend a total of 6 months probing the unknowns of long-duration space flight and conducting numerous other scientific experiments.

In 1969, 4 years prior to the actual launch of Skylab, Dr. Lucas was named by Wernher Von Braun to direct a new organization designed to look to the future and bring new business to Alabama and the center. His superb leadership and managerial abilities in this position, then as deputy director of the center, and finally in 1974, as center director, were instrumental in bringing to the Huntsville space organization a lion's share of the Nation's major space program.

In first of these major projects was managing the conceptual design for a new, reusable space vehicle. The vehicle would be called space shuttle, and the Marshall Center was to be given responsibility for three of the four main shuttle elements:

The main engines on the orbiter, which are the most complex rocket engines ever designed.

The twin solid rocket boosters, which provide about 75 percent of the shuttle's thrust at liftoff.

And the huge external tank, which holds the more than half-a-million gallons of liquid oxygen and liquid hydrogen fuel for the three engines.

Spacelab, an international laboratory carried in the shuttle, is among the numerous payloads managed by Marshall. It enables career scientists to travel into space to acquire a new knowledge about the Sun, the stars, the Earth, and life itself. The Marshall Center controlled the first three spacelab missions from a special facility adjacent to Mission Control in Houston.

Other Marshall shuttle payloads include everything from erectable large space structures; to deployable solar arrays; to the first commercially marketed space product, tiny beads used as reference material to make microscopic measurements.

There are several projects that Dr. Lucas helped to start which will carry on his contribution to the space program. These contributions include the Hubble Space Telescope which will enable astronomers to see seven times further into space. Under his leadership the Marshall Center was assigned nearly 40 percent of work on the space station the most exciting and promising new NASA program. This includes the development of propulsion systems and modules where men and women will work and live. When launched in the 1990's, the space station will provide a permanent platform from which we can explore our solar system, use space for commercial enterprises, and continue our fundamental studies of the universe.

Other future Marshall projects for which Dr. Lucas is largely responsible include an advanced x-ray telescope, vehicles to move objects about in low-Earth orbit, and propulsion systems to transport satellites to and form higher orbits.

Much of the technology developed by the space program under Dr. Lucas' leadership is being applied to improve the quality of life here on Earth. One example is a highly reliable mass-screening system to detect eye problems in children which was developed with the help of the Marshall Center. A Miami fireboat also uses Marshall's high pressure pump technology from the Saturn rockets in a portable, low-cost firefighting module.

Needless to say, the successes of the Marshall Center have had a major impact on Alabama's economy. Dr. Lucas has established programs at Marshall that have an annual budget of about $2 billion. His organization pumps $450 million a year into the State of Alabama for salaries, goods, and services.

Throughout his career, Dr. Lucas has demonstrated a great concern not only for the welfare of Marshall employees but also for his community and State. Dr. Lucas is a member of the board of directors of the Huntsville Chamber of Commerce; trustee of Mobile College; a long-time deacon and finance committee chairman of his church. He has led his area's Combined Federal Campaign, a major element of the United Way; was appointed by the Governor to the Alabama Space Science Exhibit Commission; he serves on the Executive Advisory Council for Constitution Hall Park; and is a member of the Huntsville Council of International Visitors.

Dr. Lucas is nationally recognized in his position as director of the Marshall Center and is highly respected for his technical expertise as well. He is a fellow of the American Society of Metals, a fellow of the American Astronautical Society, a fellow of the American Institute of Astronautics and Aeronautics, and member of the American Chemical Society, and the National Academy of Engineering.

It is with sadness, that I mark the retirement of this dedicated and brilliant man. Over the years Dr. Lucas and I have worked closely on many programs and projects. I have always found him to be completely dedicated to the best interests of Marshall Space Flight Center, NASA, the space program, and the country. He has always put his work above personal conveniences. As his colleagues will readily attest, he was usually at work before others, and would leave long after everyone else had gone home. Dr. Lucas set the standards of excellence for everything that he has been associated with. He is a man of great personal integrity and very active in church, a fine Christian gentleman. It is with sadness that I watch his departure, but also I bid him farewell with deep gratitude for his service to Alabama, NASA, and our Nation.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. WEICKER (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. GORTON, and Mr. RUDMAN):

S. 2583. A bill to provide for an Under Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere; an Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere; a Chief Scientist of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

PROVIDING FOR CERTAIN POSITIONS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation for myself and my colleagues to designate the Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration as an Under Secretary of Commerce, the Deputy Administrator as Assistant Secretary, and the Associate Administrator as Chief Scientist.

This legislation requires an organizational change in the Department of Commerce that is appropriate and timely. NOAA has more than half of Commerce's budget and personnel and, as the lead civilian oceanic and atmospheric agency, it is fitting that the Administrator join the other three Under Secretaries of Commerce. His Deputy would join the other Assistant Secretaries in the Department.

An equally important provision in this legislation is the appointment of a Chief Scientist in the Associate Administrator's position. NOAA must have the assurance of someone in upper management who has direct scientific experience relevant to the agency's activities. The Chief Scientist would act as the principal scientific adviser to the Under Secretary, and must have experience in oceanic, atmospheric, or other scientific disciplines important to NOAA's missions. While NOAA's past and present leadership has done a fine job with the agency, it only makes sense that creating a Chief Scientist position will strengthen the agency's scientific direction.

Mr. President, this legislation would give this important agency the recognition and standing within Commerce and the administration it has long deserved. NOAA was created in 1970 following the recommendations of the Commission on Marine Science, Engineering, and Resources—Stratton Commission. In its report, the Commission stated that NOAA should be the "principal instrumentality within the Federal Government for administration of the Nation's civil marine and atmospheric programs."

The Commission went on to recommend that NOAA be established as an independent agency reporting directly to the President to allow its wide range of technical and operational activities to strengthen and grow. As Under Secretary, the Administrator would keep both titles, giving NOAA the recognition within Commerce that it deserves while maintaining the option to be reorganized as an independent body.

Mr. President, this bill has the support of the administration and, with the establishment of the Chief Scientist position, saves approximately $4,000 per fiscal year. The salaries of the Administrator and Deputy Administrator are unchanged.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2583

DISASTER RELIEF ACT AUTHORIZATION

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am introducing today a bill to provide monetary authorizations in fiscal 1987 for the programs carried out under the Disaster Relief Act and for related administration expenses.

The bill—which would authorize the same amount of appropriations as requested in the 1987 budget—provides $100 million for the President's Disaster Relief Fund to carry out the programs authorized by the Disaster Relief Act of 1974 and $6.6 million to the Federal Emergency Management Agency for salaries and expenses.●

By Mr. HECHT (for himself, Mr. LAXALT, and Mr. STAFFORD):

S. 2585. A bill to authorize the President of the United States to award a special gold medal to Red Skelton in recognition of his lifetime commitment in service of Americans and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bronze duplications of such medal; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

AWARDING OF SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL TO RED SKELTON

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce legislation, for myself and Senator LAXALT, to authorize the President of the United States to award a congressional gold medal to Red Skelton in recognition of lifetime dedication to his country and its principles.

Red has spent his lifetime making America laugh, and has done so with dignity and honor. In every performance, he portrays his love and respect for America.

Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues here in the Senate a memorable performance during the Red Skelton hour on January 14, 1969. It is Red's recollection of a grade school teacher trying to instill in his students the true meaning of the Pledge of Allegiance. With the celebration of Flag Day recently, it is only appropriate for Red's timeless rendition to be presented. It goes as follows:

I've been listening to you boys and girls recite the Pledge of Allegiance all semester and it seems as though it is becoming monotonous to you. If I may, may I recite it to you and try to explain each word:

I—me, an individual, a committee of one.

Pledge—dedicate all of my worldly goods to give without self-pity.

Allegiance—my love and devotion.

To the Flag—our standard, old glory, a symbol of freedom. Wherever she waves, there is respect because your loyalty has given her a dignity that shouts freedom is everybody's job.

Of the United—that means we have all come together.

States—individual communities that have united into 48 great States. 48 individual communities with pride and dignity and purpose, all divided with imaginary boundaries, yet united to a common purpose, and that's love for country.

Of America.

And to the Republic—a State in which sovereign power is invested in representatives chosen by the people to govern. And a government is the people and it's from the people to the leaders, not from the leaders to the people.

For which it stands.

One Nation—meaning so blessed by God.

Indivisible—incapable of being divided.

With liberty—which is freedom and the right of power to live one's life without threats or fear or some sort of retaliation.

And justice—the principle of quality of dealing fairly with others.

For all—which means it's as much your country as it is mine.

Red went on to explain that since he heard this as a small boy, two States have been added to our country and two words have been added to the pledge—"Under God." He hopes that someone will not designate this a prayer and eliminate it from the schools.

Many of my colleagues might also remember Red's heartrending pantomime of the old, stooped-over soldier filling with pride and standing at crisp attention to salute the passing flag during a parade.

Mr. President, Red's contributions to America and its people go much further. While most of us think of Red Skelton, we think of Clem Kadidlehopper, Freddy the Freeloader, Sheriff Deadeye, Junior the mean little kid, Cauliflower McPug, and the little old man in Red's more famous pantomimes, he also served his country during World War II and broke all records selling war bonds, entertained American troops during the Korean War, and raised our consciousness of freedom and responsibilities with the above mentioned Pledge of Allegiance. These are examples of Red Skelton, the patriotic American whose commitment to America warrants this special recognition.

Red Skelton was born on July 18, 1913, 2 months after the death of his father. Red began entertaining at age 10, starting with medicine shows and graduating through the circuit of tent shows, minstrels, circuses, burlesque, riverboats, motion pictures, early radio, and vaudeville. Further, Red holds a record 20 consecutive years on television and even now is on the verge of launching a new career in videos, and syndicating reruns from his past performances.

Though Red is praised as a great pantomimist, he himself insists he is one of America's clowns. The fact is, he is one of the best loved paradoxes in show business today. A writer of his radio, television, and personal appearance programs, he has also written over 22 motion picture screenplays, with plans to produce two of them in the near future.

Red has also starred in 48 motion pictures and has written nearly 5,000 musical selections—many of which have been played and recorded by the likes of Arthur Fiedler, Van Cliburn, David Rose, and the London Philharmonic Orchestra. In addition, he has written 64 symphonies which have been performed by the Las Vegas Symphony and others.

Mr. President, as if this were not enough, Red has accomplished much more. In his spare time, Red paints in oil, does pastel pencil drawings, and bookbinds. An avid gardener, Red's special interest are his bonsai trees which take so much time and attention. Red has even had a rose named in his honor.

A prolific writer, Red has authored more than 4,000 short stories, published full-length books and story coloring books. He plans soon to publish his "Twenty Christmas Stories" which will include his own illustrations.

Red is one of the few entertainers alive today who has had the honor of being a guest and entertainer of eight U.S. Presidents—Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, and Reagan. He has also received private audiences with three popes—Pope Pius XII, Pope John XXIII, and Pope Paul VI.

His Pledge of Allegiance has won him 42 awards and has now been read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD three times including today. Other honors bestowed upon Red include awards from the American Legion, the American Freedom Foundation, and the United Conference of Christians and Jews. He holds honorary doctorate degrees from Boston's Emerson College, Indiana's Vincennes University, and Indiana State University.

Among his most recent honors is the Cecil B. Demille Award for outstanding contributions to the entertainment industry presented to him by the Hollywood Foreign Press Association at its annual Golden Globe Awards Program. Additionally, a command performance, Royal Albert Hall, London, England in 1984, the 1984 Mark of Achievement Award by the National Association of Campus Activities and the Western Heritage Award gold medal by the National Cowboy Hall of Fame in 1985.

Mr. President, though Red's life has been filled with personal tragedy. He has remained dedicated to comedy as the most monastic of monks are to religion. For laughter is Red's religion and, as he himself puts it, "God's children and their happiness are my reasons for being." It is in recognition of his great deeds that I offer this bill today and ask my colleagues to join me in cosponsorship of this measure which will bestow on Red Skelton an honor for which he is so richly deserving.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, a few minutes ago, I happened to be watching the Senate on television and heard the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT] mention that he was introducing a bill to make a congressional award to Red Skelton in his behalf and that of Senator LAXALT. It may not be that well known, but during World War II, when the Senator from Vermont was serving on the U.S.S. West Point, Red Skelton was assigned as personnel to the U.S.S. West Point. So, for about 6 or 8 months, we were shipmates on that vessel.

Its assigned task, since it was a large ship—in fact, was our largest troop transport—was to uplift the morale of the some 8,000 soldiers, sailors, and others that we were carrying overseas every time we left the United States for a port in the Solomon Islands or in the New Guinea campaign or in that part of the world. I can still remember Mr. Skelton going about the ship. There was always a constant group around him. They were always laughing. Finally, he was persuaded to put on one of his more famous skits on the foredeck of the U.S.S. West Point, where the commanding officer on the bridge watched, as well as any other officers who could get there and have a chance to see him.

I got to know him slightly during that period. He worked so hard that finally, after about 8 months, it was necessary to give him a little respite ashore.

I thought that little footnote to history might be worth recounting. After it, I can do no less than ask unanimous consent that I may be a cosponsor of the Laxalt-Hecht legislation in behalf of Mr. Skelton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

S. 2586. A bill to require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish a respite care demonstration project; to the Committee on Finance.

RESPITE CARE ACT

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Respite Care Act of 1986. This bill is designed to establish a statewide respite care demonstration program in order to aid families trying to care for their ailing, elderly family members living at home.

Mr. President, most elderly persons want to live as independently as possible. Most chronically ill elderly in need of help would rather be cared for in their homes by their own family members whom they trust and love. These individuals in need are frequently dependent on a spouse or child not only for companionship but also for assistance with daily chores—from dressing, feeding, and bathing, to difficult health care procedures, such as constant monitoring, injections, and testing.

Families frequently want to take care of their ailing kin at home, but the burden of providing care to an elderly dependent family member can be great. Often the caretakers themselves are elderly and frail. According to one study, over 50 percent of the caregivers are over 60 years old and 18 percent are over age 70. Their dependent relatives can rarely be left alone for more than a few hours, and in many cases only for a few minutes. Since few people can expect much help from the community, most can expect no more than a few free moments for themselves each day. The task of being a caretaker is therefore an emotionally and physically difficult one.

Mr. President, I have long been involved in efforts to help elderly persons receive the home care services they need to avoid institutionalization. But in many cases, the elderly person is not the only one in need of help. Family members need a break from the day-to-day burdens of caring for their loved ones.

Without some intermittent assistance, families may reach the breaking point. Today, when families can no longer shoulder the burden, the sick or elderly are sent from their families to institutions, often creating both a tragedy for the family and a burden for the taxpayer. There is a compelling need to help keep these families intact. This bill addresses this need by providing respite services to families trying to cope with the difficulties of home care.

Mr. President, what is respite care? Respite care is the provision of temporary care for ailing, elderly individuals. This allows their health to be periodically monitored, but more importantly it gives the family upon whom the elderly are dependent momentary relief from the daily stresses and demands that caring for a functionally disabled adult brings. Respite care is designed to keep the elderly individual with his or her own family. It is designed to keep the elderly out of institutions. It is designed to keep families together.

Respite care can be provided in a variety of forms. For many families, a few hours of relief each week is all that is needed. The provision of a minimally trained and modestly paid companion once a week would meet those needs. For others more intensive services are needed. For example, 1 day a week of medical care would allow both the caregiver and the elderly person to get out of the house. Many others families need respite care for 1 week or a few weekends each year so they can get away for a truly needed break from the intense care needs and constant attention required by their charge. None of these services has to be expensive, for respite care is not an ongoing service but a service strategy using a variety of options to help families take care of their own.

We need to promote respite care at the Federal level. My bill establishes a Federal respite care demonstration project to be run by a State health department. By respite care, I mean short-term sitter services, adult day care, in-patient care, emergency respite and ongoing peer support and training for family caregivers. All families will be eligible for the program but priority will be given to Medicaid recipients, with others paying on a sliding scale for services. Highest priority will go to elderly beneficiaries who will become Medicaid eligible if they become institutionalized. Half of the funding for the respite care program will come from the State and half from Medicaid. In no case will Federal outlays exceed $2,500,000. The project will last for no more than 4 years with an additional 6 months for a final evaluation.

Mr. President, my home State of New Jersey had developed a small respite care pilot project. The program is very popular and very successful. There are long waiting lists to get into the program. Over 80 percent of the participants are very satisfied with the program, and an even greater percentage feel that the task of caring for their impaired relatives has been made easier. The limited respite care pilot program founded in New Jersey works and should be tested nationally to determine the costs and benefits of this approach.

Mr. President, families trying to care for their elderly and sick dependents need our support so they will be able to keep their ailing dependents in the family and out of nursing homes. What is the bill all about? That's simple. It is about helping the elderly remain in their own homes and about keeping families together.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill appear in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2586

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. RESPITE CARE DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.

(a) Establishment.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall enter into an agreement with a State for the purpose of conducting a demonstration project (in this section referred to as the project) under title XIX of the Social Security Act for providing respite care services for—

(1) elderly and disabled individuals eligible for benefits under such title, and

(b) CONDITIONS.—A State entering into an agreement with the Secretary under this section shall—

(1) provide that the demonstration project shall be administered by a State health services agency designated for such purpose by the Governor (which may be the State agency administering or responsible for the administration of the State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act);

(2) provide that the agency designated shall, to the maximum extent feasible, arrange for coordinating its activities under the agreement with activities of other State agencies having related responsibilities;

(3) provide that respite care services provided under the project to individuals specified in subsection (a) (2) shall be available without regard to the income of the individual requiring such services, but that a reasonable fee will be charged (on a sliding-scale basis related to income) for services provided to individuals who have income (as determined in accordance with a methodology designated by the State) in excess of the income standard established by the State pursuant to section 1902(a)(10)(C)(i)(III) of the Social Security Act;

(4) provide that, in making respite care services available to individuals specified in subsection (a)(2), special priority will be given to individuals who would be eligible for benefits under title XIX of the Social Security Act upon institutionalization;

Such amount shall not exceed $2,500,000 for a fiscal year.

(e) DURATION.—The demonstration project under this section shall be of a maximum duration of four years, plus an additional time period of up to six months for final evaluation and reporting.

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 2587. A bill to facilitate public access to public lands for recreational purposes, to the Committee on Engery and Natural Resources.

ACCESS TO PUBLIC LANDS FOR RECREATIONAL PURPOSES

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, there is a growing problem throughout the Nation with the public being unable to gain access to millions of acres of Federal land.

The Bureau of Land Management has estimated that 25 million acres under its jurisdiction are inaccessible to the public.

According to the Forest Service, 20 percent of the land in national forests in the northern region, which includes Montana, northern Idaho, North Dakota, and northwestern South Dakota, is inaccessible to the public.

In Montana alone 3 million out of 9 million acres in six national forests are inaccessible.

One major reason for the lack of access is a lack of funds. Counties have had to cutback spending for maintaining county roads and for acquiring right-of-way accesses.

The bill I am offering today amends the Sikes Act to help State and Federal land management agencies increase public access to public lands.

Currently, the Sikes Act permits States to charge people who hunt, fish, and trap on Federal public lands a nominal fee. These fees can then be used for conservation and land rehabilitation programs.

This bill would expand the act to permit State governments to use the funds to acquire right-of-ways or easements across private lands for hunting, fishing and trapping on public lands.

Recreational access to public lands is a major concern among sportsmen in Montana and many other States. I urge my colleagues to give this bill close consideration.

Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill that addresses the problem of public access to public lands.

The issue of public access to public lands is a "double-edged sword." That is, on the one hand, there are cases of too much access to public lands. Roads are provided that degrade the esthetic quality of land which would be better left inaccessible. On the other hand, there is an increasing problem throughout the Nation with the public being unable to gain access to millions of acres, to which they, the people of the United States, hold title.

This bill, which I offer today, provides one tool for sportsmen and State and Federal land management agencies to deal with this latter problem. The bill amends the Sikes Act to allow funds generated under authority of the act to be used for acquisition of right-of-ways or easements across private lands for hunting, fishing, or trapping on public lands.

Recreational access to public lands is a major concern among Montana sportsmen. At their recent annual meeting, the Montana Wildlife Federation called lack of public access to public lands the highest priority issue that needs to be addressed.

Last December, Gov. Ted Schwinden convened the Governor's Forum on Montanans Outdoors in response to the President's Commission on Americans Outdoors. Forum participants expressed concern over problems of public access to public lands. There was also widespread agreement that recreationists should be expected to contribute more toward costs involved in providing outdoor recreation.

Statistics compiled by the Forest Service point to the huge dimensions of the access problem. Of some 9 million acres within six Montana national forests on the east side of the Rockies, public access is needed to 3 million, or one-third, of the total acreage. In the Forest Service's northern region, which includes Montana, northern Idaho, North Dakota, and northwestern South Dakota, nearly 5 million acres, or 20 percent of the region, lacks adequate access to the public.

Nationwide, the Bureau of Land Management has estimated that 25 million acres of land under its jurisdiction are inaccessible to the public.

The problem is growing significantly. One Montana National Forest supervisor, for example, has ventured that across the northern region, the agency is losing 10 accesses for every 1 that it acquires.

Reasons for loss of access to public lands are many. However, one important reason is the widespread abandonment of county roads by county governments who can no longer afford to maintain them. Cutbacks in Federal funding have begun to affect adversely relationships between the Federal Government and local counties. Relationships between the two levels of government are strained. This change has contributed to right-of-way abandonment by counties.

In addition, lands are being purchased by nonresident interests. These new landowners do not maintain the "good neighbor" tradition of public access across private lands allowed by the previous resident owner. There is a legitimate need and right for ranchers and farmers to be able to protect their property. However, curtailing recreational access to public lands in order to be the sole user and beneficiary of the public lands adjacent to their property, cannot be condoned.

The amendment to the Sikes Act that I offer today, is one step toward the solution to the problem. More important, it provides a mechanism for acquiring access without any cost to the Federal treasury.

The Sikes Act established a mechanism for Federal-State cooperation in conservation of wildlife and fish resources. A provision of the law authorizes the State, through appropriate memorandums of agreement with Federal land management agencies, to issue for a nominal fee, a "public land management area stamp." Purchasers of the stamp are entitled to hunt, fish, and trap on Federal public lands which have been designated for special management by the memorandums of agreement.

The Sikes Act restricts the use of funds generated from the sale of public land management area stamps to conservation and rehabilitation programs on the land. The amendment that I offer to the act, also authorizes use of these funds to acquire right-of-way accesses to public lands for hunting, fishing, and trapping.

Mr. President, the need to solve the problem of inadequate public access to public lands is unquestionable. This amendment to the Sikes Act recognizes the responsibility of Federal and State governments and private citizens in solving the problem. It also recognizes that opportunities for hunting and fishing can be provided by opening up public land now closed to sportsmen. This bill would help accomplish that goal.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

S. 2587

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the first sentence of section 203(b)(3) of the Act entitled "An Act to promote effective planning, development, maintenance, and coordination of wildlife, fish and game conservation and rehabilitation in military reservations", approved September 15, 1960 (Public Law 86-797; 16 U.S.C. 670i(b)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) Except for expenses incurred in the printing, issuing, or selling of such stamps, the fees collected for such stamps by the State agency shall be utilized (A) in carrying out conservation and rehabilitation programs implemented under this title in the State concerned, and (B) for the purchase of lands or interests in lands to gain public access over nonpublic lands to public lands for the purpose of hunting, fishing, or trapping (and for no other purposes other than those described in clauses (A) and (B)).

By Mr. DOMENICI:

S. 2588. A bill to provide permanent authorization for White House Conferences on Small Business; to the Committee on Small Business.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON SMALL BUSINESS AUTHORIZATION ACT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I think most of us are aware of the success of White House conferences on small business.

As a result of this year's White House conference on small business, the recommendation of the New Mexico contingency—they will be meeting in the region with members of this White House conference from various States out in our part of the United States—but my New Mexico contingency recommended that we make the White House conference on small business a permanent institution of Government to take place at least once each Presidential term. This would mean that instead of just expecting it to occur, or making it an ad hoc event we would pass legislation saying during each 4-year terms of Presidents there will be one White House conference on small business.

I need not tell the Senate the successes that have come out of the White House conferences, and I need not tell the Senate the issues have been dramatically different, even though only 2 or 3 years passed in between them. For the first conference, the issues were high interest rates, and inflation—issues that are not the issues today. This year, for instance, the new issue was liability insurance for small business.

We know the tremendous impact of small business on the U.S. economy. We know the numbers, and while they are not the biggest businesses around, they contribute 45 percent of the jobs. Whenever we have a recovery cycle, they are at the forefront because they are risk takers. They are out there trying to get their share out of this magnificent entrepreneural society.

So today at the request of the New Mexican contingency to the small business White House conference, I am introducing a bill that would regularize the so-called White House conferences on small business.

I am confident that when my fellow Senators see this legislation and when they hear from their members of the White House conference, they will support it.

Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to make permanent an authorization for a White House Conference on Small Business, once every Presidential term. As my colleagues are aware, the administration will host a Small Business Conference in August of this year. The first White House Conference on Small Business was in 1980, and it is uncertain when the next conference would be held. My bill would eliminate this uncertainty.

At New Mexico's Small Business Conference, one of the recommendations was to authorize a national conference every 4 years. The need is evident by the fact that many of the key issues at the 1980 conference, such as high energy costs and a dismal national economy, are no longer primary concerns. These issues have been replaced in 1986 by budget deficits, taxes, and the liability insurance crisis.

My bill is a simple, yet far-reaching effort for America's small business owners. These are men and women who provide so many vital services to our Nation, and who perform a very significant role in our Nation's economy. These conferences provide an opportunity for issues to be raised, and for solutions to be proposed. Two-thirds of the recommendations reported by the 1980 conference have been enacted. Clearly, this is an excellent source of direction for us as legislators.

America boasts almost 15 million small businesses, and 45 percent of these have been created just within the past 4 years. America's small businesses employ 48 percent of our private work force, and account for 38 percent of our gross national product.

Small businesses provide more than jobs and services. They also provide on-the-job training for our nation's young people, training which gives them an opportunity to utilize first-hand their education.

Perhaps what is most special about these businessmen and women is their unique entrepreneurial spirit. They have accepted the challenge of running their own business, and bring to it an impressive optimism and ingenuity. Not only do they often discover new markets and develop new products, small business owners improve America's economic efficiency through their keen competitive nature and their penchant for hard work.

Mr. President, this bill will be of great benefit to America's small business owners, by providing them the opportunity to have a greater voice in many of their Government's policy decisions. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

So today, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be made a part of the RECORD and that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee of the U.S. Senate for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. HEINZ (for himself and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S.J. Res. 367. Joint resolution to designate July 31, 1986, as "National Kidney Program Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL KIDNEY PROGRAM DAY

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a joint resolution designating July 30, 1986, as "National Kidney Program Day." Joining me in support of this joint resolution is my colleague from Minnesota, Senator DURENBERGER.

Today, more than 80,000 Americans suffer from irreversible kidney disease. Medicare's End Stage Renal Disease [ESRD] Program provides the means through which these citizens can receive treatment, while remaining economically independent and able to make contributions to family, community, and country.

Fourteen years ago, Congress established Medicare funding of dialysis and transplantation for patients of all ages. Prior to the Medicare End Stage Renal Disease [ESRD] Program, lifesaving care from dialysis treatments remained beyond the financial grasp of nearly all Americans. In each year leading up to this expansion of Medicare coverage over 8,000 Americans died needlessly because they could not afford an artificial kidney machine or a kidney transplant. In 1972, the Congress responded to these needless deaths by expanding Medicare coverage of the disabled to include all patients suffering from chronic kidney failure.

As a member of the House-Senate Conference Committee on the final ESRD legislation, I have a long-standing interest in and commitment to the continued success of the ESRD Medicare Program. Since its creation, the ESRD Program has assured access to lifesaving dialysis or transplantation therapy for every American suffering from otherwise fatal kidney failure.

Three times a week, 52 weeks a year, patients hook up to kidney machines for lifesaving dialysis treatment. During each 4-hour session, blood flows through filters that trap toxins, salt and water; the machine then returns purified blood to the patient. The extraordinarily successful ESRD program has special significance as an example of the power of partnerships between Government and the health care industry to address the burdens of catastrophic illness.

Mr. President, an investigation conducted by the Special Committee on Aging, which I chair, revealed that the increasing tendency of dialysis clinics to reuse certain dialysis devices poses a serious health threat. The committee identified several problems associated with multiple uses of dialysis devices manufactured for "single use only." Today we have inadequate information to conclusively determine the health effects of reusing disposable devices and no standards to ensure that procedures for reuse are safe or effective. A critical issue that was raised by the Aging Committee investigation is that dialysis patients are not informed of the dangers and potential risks associated with the practice of reuse.

On June 12, 1986, I introduced S. 2547, the End Stage Renal Disease Patient Rights Act of 1986, which addresses some of the problems raised by the Aging Committee's investigation. I will continue to work to see that all of the dangers identified by the committee are addressed through legislative initiatives or regulatory actions in cooperation with the administration.

Medicare coverage for dialysis opened a major door of access to care for victims of catastrophic illness. Dialysis is literally the difference between life and death for patients with severe, irreversible kidney damage. While there will be a continued need to monitor health protection to assure quality of care, there can be no doubt that the ESRD Program has provided a tremendous benefit to the many thousands who would not have had access to this life-sustaining treatment without the assistance of the Medicare Program.

Mr. President, I urge all of my colleagues to support this important resolution. I ask unanimous consent that the text of this joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 367

Whereas the tens of thousands of Americans suffering from irreversible kidney disease are treated by Medicare's End Stage Renal Disease [ESRD] Program;

Whereas this program has assured that every American suffering from otherwise fatal kidney failure has access to lifesaving dialysis or transplantation therapy;

Whereas ESRD beneficiaries may remain economically productive and are able to continue to make irreplaceable contributions to family, community and country;

Whereas this extraordinary successful program has a special significance as an example of the power of partnership between government and the healthcare industry in dealing with catastrophic illness; and

Whereas this partnership has achieved economy in health services without compromising quality of care or social responsibility: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to designate the day of July 30, 1986, as "National Kidney Program Day" and call upon the Federal, State, and local Government agencies and the people of the United States to observe such day with the appropriate programs, ceremonies and activities.●

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, today I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania, Senator HEINZ, in introducing a joint resolution to designate July 30, 1986, as National Kidney Program Day.

The purpose of this measure is to focus national attention on Medicare's End Stage Renal Disease [ESRD] Program. The ESRD Program is an example of what can be accomplished through the Medicare program for individuals suffering from such a catastrophic illness as end stage renal failure.

The ESRD Program was created in 1972 to guarantee life-saving treatment for every American suffering from kidney failure. Without treatment in the form of dialysis or transplantation, Mr. President, patients with end stage renal failure cannot survive. Properly treated, those same patients can enjoy full and productive lives.

Over 80,000 Americans are currently receiving treatment under Medicare's ESRD Program. And, as opposed to so many other health care programs in this country, the cost per dialysis treatment is actually less than it was in 1973. In 1978, the program was called "probably the only example of cost containment in Government-financed health care" by then private citizen Ronald Reagan.

The ESRD Program has literally become a lifeline for the thousands of individuals who receive their requisite 3 to 4 dialysis treatments per week. In these times of cost restraint and budget retrenchment, Mr. President, we need to recall the far-sightedness of those who knew the critical importance of such a program, and celebrate the success of this public-private sector relationship.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting this joint resolution. The ESRD Program is a Federal health program worthy of this type of recognition. It has promoted successful cooperation between the public and private sectors in providing and improving services for people with extremely serious kidney failure so that they can continue to be productive members of society and family.●

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE

(By request of Mr. BYRD, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, for a decade, the Congressional Call to Conscience Program has actively sought to focus national attention on Soviet citizens who are neither free to practice their own religion nor free to emigrate. These fundamental rights are taken for granted by many Americans, but we must not lose sight of the fact that these basic rights are not yet universal rights. As a result, I am both pleased and proud to join the fight to end religious persecution and suffering in the Soviet Union by participating in the 1986 congressional call to conscience.

Since 1979 when Soviet emigrants numbered over 50,000, there has been a sharp decline in the number of individuals allowed to leave the U.S.S.R. Barely 1,000 received permission in 1985. Instead of freedom, applicants for emigration are awarded jail sentences, physically beaten, or publicly denounced. Moreover, refuseniks have lost their jobs, been expelled from schools, and been forcibly isolated from society. In short, declaring one's desire to emigrate from the Soviet Union jeopardizes one's rights as a citizen and a human being.

The plight of the Finermans, a Soviet Jewish family, is a case in point. Miron and Iosef Finerman first applied for visas 7 years ago and have been refused ever since. The Government's explanation is that their invitation to live abroad "did not come from a sufficiently close relative." The fact that the Finermans already have an aunt and grandmother in Israel seems somehow irrelevant to the Soviets. Meanwhile, the Finermans must remain religious captives, unable to pursue their beliefs or their cultural heritage.

The 1986 congressional call to conscience seeks to increase public awareness about the Finermans and numerous other Soviet families in similar situations. Ultimately, we hope to assist these families in attaining their common goal—freedom. I commend my colleagues for their efforts in this regard and trust that our voices, along with those of the Finermans and other refuseniks in the Soviet Union, will eventually be heard.●

THE SOFTWARE CRISIS

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today this Nation faces many challenges as we seek to maintain our national security and to reestablish our economic competitiveness in the world marketplace. Probably no industry is more important to those twin goals than our computer industry.

We tend to take our advantage in that industry as a given, but we should not; for the computer industry is part of the same society as our other less competitive industries. And that is a society in which we do not have an adequate number of qualified math and science teachers in our junior high schools and high schools. It is a society in which too few students in our colleges and universities are being educated in mathematics and the sciences. It is a society in which foreign students constitute a growing proportion of the graduate students in these critical fields. And it is a society which is underinvesting in education and in technology-base research. As a result, our productivity has not been rising at the same rate as in other countries. And if we let this productivity lag continue for too long, we will see our standard of living fall further and further behind that of our economic rivals.

The May 1986 issue of Air Force magazine carries an article by James W. Canan entitled "The Software Crisis," in which he discusses the growing problems facing the United States in this critical industry. The United States is spending more and more each year for software. For example, General Motors is spending billions of dollars on plant automation software. The Defense Department is already spending $10 billion a year and may be spending $30 billion a year by 1990.

Computer software is a field in which the United States enjoys a growing lead over the Soviet Union, but not over other nations. Indeed, the article points out that in Japan the software productivity norm is 3,500 lines of code per person per month, whereas in the United States the same norm is 183 lines of code. Now it may be that this is not a totally fair comparison. The United States software industry may concentrate more on new innovative programs and the Japanese industry may spend a lot of time adapting software produced elsewhere. But that is an extremely worrisome statistic in what it may portend in the near future for our position in this industry.

The article outlines what the Defense Department is doing to try to tackle this productivity problem in its own defense programs. It describes DOD initiatives, such as the Ada programing language, the DOD STARS project, and the Software Engineering Institute. I have followed these projects for the past several years and I am convinced that they are among the most important being funded by the Federal Government. If they are successful, they will hopefully generate important spin-offs to the commercial sector.

I only wish that we had an equally aggressive technology base program in computer software being pursued by the National Science Foundation and other domestic agencies in our civilian sector. Our national industrial policy in such a critical field should not be overwhelmingly dependent on spin-offs from defense research programs. For if our educational system will not allow us in the short term to produce the number of software professionals which our economy needs, our only recourse is to try to increase the productivity of those working in both the defense and civilian sectors.

Mr. President, we are going to hear more about this problem in the future. I hope that the Air Force magazine article will spur greater attention to it here in the Senate sooner than otherwise would have been the case. I ask that the Air Force magazine article be placed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

THE SOFTWARE CRISIS

(By James W. Canan)

Computer software is the brainpower of modern US military systems. The systems have come to live by it. There is increasing concern, however, that they may go into decline for the future lack of it.

Virtually all major military systems—aircraft, missiles, satellites, ships, tanks, torpedoes, and command control communications and intelligence (C^3I) networks—now embody programmable digital electronics.

More and more, the performance of such systems is dictated by the computer programs in their signal processors and data processors that tell them what to do and how to do it.

Modifying the computer software is now the main means of upgrading the systems to keep them on top of the threats.

"Software has become a highly important force multiplier, even though this is difficult to express in terms of bombs on targets," says Col. Kenneth Nidifer, director of mission-critical computer programs for Air Force Systems Command's Deputy Chief of Staff for Product Assurance and Acquisition Logistics.

"The very security of our nation depends on software," Colonel Nidifer declares.

SOFTWARE AND NATIONAL SECURITY

That security is now being threatened by a full-blown software crisis.

Software costs have skyrocketed so high that they dominate the costs of military electronics and are headed for runaway proportions.

The Department of Defense spends $10 billion a year on software and anticipates the need to triple such spending by 1990. At $3 billion a year, software spending accounts for five percent of the total Air Force budget, and it is expected to eat up ten percent of the budget by 1990.

The demand for software and for software professionals, which is to say engineers, managers, and programmers, far outstrips supplies and is becoming more intense and more worrisome by the minute. The military is currently developing as much new software as the 100,000,000 lines of code that it now has in use. The national shortfall of some 80,000 civilian and military software professionals is expected to swell to 1,000,000 by 1990, and only a few US universities offer advanced degrees in software engineering.

Military systems software is becoming ever more complex. For example, the B-1A bomber of ten years ago embodied 500,000 lines of software code, fewer than half of the 1,200,000 lines of code in today's B-1B.

It has often taken the military services as long as nineteen years to get software into systems from the time of its conception. The heightening demand for increasingly complex software threatens to protract this excruciating process even more.

Software quality is spotty. "Debugging" error-ridden software is a major headache and highly expensive software for SDI battle management and C^3 systems will make those systems "the paramount strategic defense problem."

Any "closed-loop" system in which the human element is lacking or is rarely present, such as SDI, demands an awful lot of its computer software. The more a system is automated, the more reliable its software must be.

SCRAMBLE FOR PROGRAMMERS

The software crisis is by no means peculiar to the military. It also grips the civilian sector, where efforts to solve it are in some ways making matters worse for the defense establishment.

This is especially true when it comes to recruiting software talent.

Because of their dire need for software engineers and managers, banks and industries, for example, are paying top dollar for them and are luring military officers and DoD civilians from the already thin ranks of those with solid software managerial experience.

As a result, the Air Force now depends almost exclusively on captains and lieutenants to work its worsening software problems.

By and large, these junior officers are quite good at what they do. They lack clout when it comes to competing for resources, however, and—as part of that—convincing their seniors of just how bad the military software situation has become.

Project Bold Stroke, with its emphasis on making senior commanders aware of the situation, should be a big help in this regard.

The commercial sector's voracity for software and for software professionals is starkly illustrated by the fact that General Motors Corp. alone uses as much software and spends almost as much money on it as does the entire US defense establishment. GM reportedly spent $7 billion to $9 billion last year on automating its plants. Ninety percent of its expenditure went for software and for software people.

Dr. John H. Manley, a former Air Force officer who is the director of DoD's Software Engineering Institute (SEI) at Carnegie-Mellon University, says that "the commercial sector is offering double or triple the salaries of our [military] software professionals to hire them away.

"We can't compete with that," Dr. Manley asserts, "so we're going to have to rely on the commercial world to build the software for us. This raises the questions of how DoD manages that and of who minds the store for DoD. And this is why DoD set up the STARS [Software Technology for Adaptable, Reliable Systems] program and why it created SEI—to get control of the software crisis."

That crisis has been building for years. Jointly and separately, the military services and the Office of the Secretary of Defense have studied software problems off and on ever since programmable digital electronics began entering combat systems in the 1970s.

One OSD report in 1982 concluded that "the military power of the United States is inextricably tied to the programmable digital computer." It drew the corollary conclusion that software problems "can make our future military systems fail in ways that could be disastrous for our national security."

THE SOFTWARE INITIATIVE PROGRAM

That report spawned DoD's three-proned Software Initiative Program to develop reliable, cost-effective software for mission-critical computers. It consists of SEI, the STARS project, and DoD's adoption of a standard military programming language called Ada.

SEI is set up to investigate the entire software engineering scene in the US, to foster new software engineering talent and new software technologies, and, perhaps most importantly to expedite the transition of software technologies into practice.

The office of the Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Advanced Technology oversees the DoD Software Initiative Program. For it, the Air Force administers SEI out of AFSC's Electronic Systems Division at Hanscom AFB, Mass.

AFSC headquarters at Andrews AFB, Md., also plays a major, eclectic role in the Software Initiative Program through its Mission Critical Computer Resources Division. The division, which reports to AFSC's DCS for Science and Technology, is headed by Maj. Duane Johnson. Capt. Greg Juday and Capt. Gregg Swietek are its computer system staff officers most intimately involved with software and advanced-computing projects on a workaday basis.

Both captains make persuasive cases that USAF must give much more financial and managerial attention to solving the software crisis and that it must stop doing "business as usual" in designing, developing, and acquiring software.

The facts are on their side. The Air Force is in hock to software.

For example, the core avionics of today's fighter aircraft embody about 200,000 machine instructions. The next generation of such aircraft—defined generically, not as any particular aircraft—will need 1,000,000 such instructions in their core avionics. Those future aircraft will also require about 250,000 machine instructions just for the signal processors that will be mated with their sensors.

It costs $85 million to develop the software for an F-16D. It costs another $250 million to maintain that software—rectifying its errors, keeping it in shape, updating it—over its anticipated operational lifetime.

THE PACING TECHNOLOGY

Software has become the pacing technology in advanced fighters, just as it has in most other weapon systems and information systems.

AFSC's Colonel Nidifer, in his Bold Stroke briefings of USAF commanders and other personnel, makes a point of this as follows:

Through most of the Vietnam War, Air Force F-4s contained no digital computers and no software.

Each F-16A that went operational in 1981 had seven computer systems with fifty digital processors and 135,000 lines of code.

This year's F-16D has fifteen computer systems with 300 digital processors and 236,000 lines of code.

Moreover, the magnitude of the software inside an aircraft may represent only a fraction of that aircraft's total software requirement. The "on-the-ground" software of the automated systems used to develop the aircraft's on-board operational software contains many more lines of instructions than does the software that it develops.

All this is hard for AFSC's software missionaries to get across, especially to those who did not grow up with digital electronics and computer programs and who still size up combat aircraft in terms of their sizes, shapes, speeds, and other obvious characteristics.

As AFSC's Captain Juday puts it, "When you see an F-16 fly by, you don't say, 'Look at that software.' And yet, to a great extent, that's what you're seeing."

If software costs and requirements for USAF's newest fighters are already chilling, they may be downright bloodcurdling for future fighters and other sophisticated combat aircraft.

AFSC estimates that the software of each future fighter, as envisioned in generic terms, will cost $450 million to develop and a whopping $1.3 billion in life-cycle maintenance, defined as "ownership cost."

Such costs look to be prohibitive. USAF will have no choice but to pay them, however, if it wants its aircraft to do what it now believes they will need to be able to do—unless, of course, it can cut those costs.

Increasing software productivity will be the key to such cutting. As an Air Force report sums up the situation:

"The single most important factor in fully utilizing the advanced electronic capability in aircraft systems is going to be the production of the software required to implement the desired capability.

"In order to reduce the cost of the software, major productivity improvements are required. . . .

"It is also obvious that this requirement is not unique to airborne systems."

THE ESSENTIALITY OF SOFTWARE

USAF simply cannot turn away from software. Dr. Thomas E. Cooper, Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Research, Development, and Logistics, made this clear in calling, last year, for a "bold stroke" at the software crisis. So did USAF Chief of Staff Gen. Charles A. Gabriel and former Secretary of the Air Force Verne Orr in a subsequent joint memorandum for all USAF major commands and separate operating agencies.

They wrote: "Our newest weapons and information systems—the B-1B, Peacekeeper, SACDIN [Strategic Air Command Digital Network], and the Phase IV Standard Base Supply System—depend upon sophisticated software. In a very real sense, our ability to deliver and support this software in a timely and cost-effective manner provides the Air Force its most significant technological edge over our potential adversaries."

Among other new systems that provide USAF's technological edge are the Advanced Medium-Range Air-to-Air Missile (AMRAAM) and the Low-Altitude Navigation and Targeting Infrared for Night (LANTIRN) system. Both rely on sophisticated computer programs for guidance and targeting. LANTIRN's development required 6,000 lines of software code.

SOFTWARE IS THE KEY

All "smart" weapons derive their IQs from their software. It is crucial to precision-guided munitions (PGMs), to the increasing automation of combat aircraft with fully integrated avionics, and to the emergence of battle-management systems and others featuring artificial intelligence (AI).

USAF's new F-15E dual-role fighter is nearly as "software-intensive" as the B-1B bomber. When Air Force officials remark on the F-15E's capacity for "growth," they mean its capacity for software embellishments that will make it more capable to meet changing threats.

It is easier and less costly to modify software than it is to modify hardware. USAF's experience in its F-111 program is an example.

The Air Force upgraded the avionics of its F-111A/E aircraft by altering their analog (hard-wired) computers. It also upgraded the avionics of its F-111D/F aircraft, introducing the same new capabilities, by altering the software in their digital computers.

The hardware changes cost fifty times as much as the software changes and took three times as long to make.

According to a DoD report, software changes that improved the accuracy of USAF's 550 deployed Minuteman III ICBMs cost "only $4 million, a fraction of what the corresponding physical modification might have cost."

The report continued: "The cost and time required to design a software change is comparable to the cost and time to design a hardware change, since both are human-intensive, intellectual tasks of comparable complexity.

"But the cost and time needed to implement these changes favor software by orders of magnitude, particularly when the change is replicated in many systems.

Before systems software can lend itself to such modification, however, it must be designed to system specifications in the first place, its errors must be discovered and eradicated, and it must be introduced into the systems on schedule and up to speed.

THE PEOPLE PROBLEM

Getting all this done is largely a people problem. It has to do not only with the shortage of software personnel but also with the individualism and the lack of discipline that are rampant—necessarily so, given the freehand nature of the software workplace—in the programming world.

Creating sophisticated software is still much more an art than a science, and the all-too-few premier programmers reflect this in the way they do their jobs.

For example, three such programmers may take three different, innovative approaches to writing a program to satisfy a military requirement. Only the programmer whose program is adopted really knows exactly what is in it and, thus, how to debug it without a lot of expensive—and maybe fatal—trial and error.

Such dependence on individual creativity, which could have dire results if, for example, the top programmer for a vital piece of software becomes incapacitated, is not the fault of the programmers themselves.

They lack the automated tools and automated "support" environment—meaning good software and computers for writing good "applications" software—that they need for greater efficiency and discipline of their "methodology."

As defined by AFSC's Captain Swietek, a software environment is a "collection of tools organized to support a specific function, such as the development of software for an avionics or a C^3 application." Among such tools are program-language compilers and debuggers.

"Methodology" is nothing more than the way the programmers use thier tools and their environment to get their software written and into use and the way the software managers use them to keep the programming on track and to predict its costs.

AFSC's programs in software technology and in advanced computer technology are aimed, in large measure, at just such automated improvements in the software production process.

DoD's STARS program is also concentrating on this.

Citing USAF's B-1B and E-3A systems and the Navy's Aegis shipboard fire-control system as prime cases in point, the 1982 DoD report on the military software situation described the development and support of software for major military systems as "one of the most complex human endeavors, often requiring hundreds of people for five or more years at costs exceeding $100 million."

This makes a salient point that USAF is addressing.

"Software is extremely labor-intensive," says Captain Swietek, "so if we could cut by a factor of four the time it takes to produce software, we could cut its cost by about the same proportion. We could make a big dent in the problem."

One-tenth of the money that USAF expects to spend on software in the current fiscal year would buy twenty-six more F-16Ds.

SUFFICIENT RESOURCES?

Air Force officials point out that the US, which prides itself on its computer technology, slights the software arena in its per capita allocation of resources in terms of percentages of the Gross National Product.

By USAF's calculations, workers in agriculture are supported at the level of $75,000 per person, those in industry at $45,000, and those in the software field at only $10,000.

A rough analogy can be drawn with respect to military software's slice of total military resources.

Software productivity is hard to measure, because software, unlike hardware, is not visibly a production item. This also deters software contractors from investing their own funds up front to improve the productivity of software for military systems.

In hardware production, contractors are usually willing to make such investments, because they stand to recoup much or all of them from DoD in contracts pegged to productivity incentives and because they can write off some of such investments as well.

In software, however, there is no "production" phase as such and, thus, no possibility of returns on investment. This means no incentive for the contractors to invest in modern software-producing tools or, if they have them, to use them for defense software work.

Contractors' proprietary claims on the software that they produce for DoD or that DoD would like to acquire from them also get in the way. Under current law, DoD has not only the rights to the software that contractors produce for it but also the rights to the tools that they use in producing the software.

"What we find," Joseph Batz, deputy director of USDR&E's Computer Software and Systems Directorate, explains "is that contractors are not willing to use the most advanced tools in their possession because they don't want DoD to come after those tools. In order to foster the use of the most advanced existing tools and the further development of such tools, we're going to have to overcome that problem."

One move being considered is to permit contractors to keep some rights to their tools as an incentive to improving them and maybe even to marketing the use of them, under licensing arrangements, to their competitors. To encourage them, DoD may even let the contractors charge it royalties for its use of such tools.

Such considerations are emerging in the STARS program, which is only now picking up steam. That program is also working the major problem of software reusability.

The services have been in the habit of starting from scratch in developing software for each new system. Through experience, however, they now know that portions of software in one missile, for example, can be transferred to another, newer one, thus cutting its costs and expediting its development.

COMPUTER BABEL

A big difficulty with doing this lies in the wide divergences of program languages used across, and even within, the military services. Many systems use "maching assembly languages" that are especially and laboriously devised just for the particular computers of each.

This is a major reason why DoD's adoption of the Ada standard programming language is so important.

Having studied ten different missile systems in all three services, DoD has begun building a library of what it calls "Ada packages" or CAMP (for Common Ada Missile Parts) of software to perform functions that it found to be common to the software of all the systems.

AFSC's Armament Division at Eglin AFB, Fla., is now taking this software-commonality process much farther. It is building a prototype missile digital avionics software package in Ada and with some artificial intelligence characteristics.

Ada is earmarked for incorporation in more than 100 military systems. The changeover will take time, however, because the services' systems already have millions of lines of code written in other languages.

Even so, Ada's implications for increasing the productivity of military software development through standardization—and for the cutrate reusability of such software—are profound.

"Each individual piece of software that gets reused becomes better and more reliable," explains DoD's Mr. Batz. "If we could reuse thirty percent of our software, just think of the savings we could make."

Much of the STARS program, in which software reusability ranks high as a goal, also deals with getting software technology into practice. Such software technology transition is mainly the responsibility of DoD's Software Engineering Institute, however and is expected to take up about two-thirds of all SEI activity.

First off, SEI is identifying emerging software technologies, assessing those currently available for military use, and promoting the development and the eventual use of those that promise big advances in software reliability and integrity.

In a joint report last January, USAF's Dr. Cooper and Lt. Gen. Bernard P. Randolph, Deputy Chief of Staff for Research, Development, and Acquisition, called attention to SEI's pivotal role.

"It will be increasingly important," they wrote, "to develop advanced software technologies that are user-friendly and are robust enough for all applications. Use of the Ada language and efforts of the Software Engineering Institute will provide the software technology for future weapon systems."

"Robust" has become a byword in USAF software circles.

"We must make computers tougher components of battlefield systems," declares AFSC's Captain Swietek. "They must be fault-tolerant; they can't just quit. We can't afford to have computer programs that crash if you type in a wrong number. We need programs that degrade gracefully."

There are too few such programs now. Military software reliability and integrity are too often constrained by the outdated technologies that SEI has set out to cull.

FOSTERING HOME-GROWN TALENT

SEI is also on the hunt for software talent for the military and for the means of nurturing such talent in the nation's colleges and universities.

Operating in a state-of-the-art software environment at Carnegie-Mellon, SEI is now affiliated with several other academic institutions as well and is beckoning to prospective industrial affiliates.

Captain Juday, who is AFSC's program element monitor for SEI, says that SEI aspires to "bringing the ablest minds and the most effective technology to bear" on improving the quality of operational software.

Through SEI, Captain Juday declares, "We want to establish software engineering as a profession, form a national center for software engineering technology information, and lead the development of a progressive software engineering technology base."

SEI's Dr. Manley emphasizes that SEI itself "does not give software engineering courses."

"We're concentrating at the leverage point by creating software professors and graduate students," he asserts. "We are in business to educate the educators and to train the trainers."

The whole idea is to increase the US military software technology lead. First, however, it must be kept from narrowing.

A major problem in this regard is that US graduate schools in engineering and scientific disciplines in, or related to, the computer field are heavily populated by students from foreign nations. In many cases, such students make up more than half of the classroom complements.

They also tend to have an advantage over their usually monolingual American counterparts in that they can speak and read several languages and thus can glean more extensively from international writings in their field.

Compounding this problem of foreign competition is the increasing excellence and drive of several nations, notably Japan, England, and France, in the computer technology arena.

In Japan, for example, the software productivity norm is 3,500 lines of code per man/month. In the US, it is 183 lines of code.

The same thing could happen to the US software industry that happened to the US steel industry and to others. Unless its productivity goes up and its costs come down, it could slip badly or even be lost, with grave consequences for future US military capability.●

BALTIC STATES

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, this month, for the fifth consecutive year, the Congress passed legislation designating June 14 as "Baltic Freedom Day." Although the independence of the Baltic States was tragically and illegally ended by the Soviet Union during the Second World War, time has not diminished their desire for political autonomy or the commitment of the United States to their noble cause. On the 64th anniversary of our de jure recognition of the sovereign nations of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, I want to reaffirm this commitment and honor the Baltic peoples' struggle for freedom.

In 1918, after more than a century of Russian rule and czarist oppression, the Baltic Republics triumphantly declared their independence. Fortified by their rich and diverse cultural heritage, these young democratic nations withstood Bolshevik challenges to their sovereignty, negotiated nonaggression pacts with their neighbor to the east, and enjoyed full membership in the League of Nations. Their bright future was an inspiration to all emerging nations after the ravages of the First World War.

In the regional power struggle of the late 1930's, the Baltic States tried to maintain absolute neutrality. They became victims, however, of a secret protocol to the German-Soviet pact of 1939 under which they were relegated to the Soviet "sphere of influence." Once Moscow demanded that the three strategic countries sign mutual assistance treaties with the Soviet Union, their fate had been sealed. In rapid succession, Red Army troops were stationed on Baltic soil, the national governments were replaced with pro-Soviet regimes, and the new "parliaments," in flagrant violation of the Baltic constitutions and against the will of the Baltic peoples, voted for incorporation into the Soviet Union by a mere show of hands. Because of the Soviet Union's disrespect for the principle of national self-determination, Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia became the only members of the League of Nations unable to join the United Nations. To this day, the United States has consistently refused to recognize the Soviet Union's unlawful annexation of the Baltic States.

Since 1940, the Soviet Union has pursued a policy of russification designed to eliminate independent religious, political, and cultural activities in the Baltic States. While the Stalinist practice of mass deportations and arbitrary murder has ended, the repression continues. In Lithuania, where Catholicism is deeply rooted, worshippers have been intimidated and harassed, and Catholic priests have been detained, brought to trial and convicted on charges of "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda." The Lithuanian Helsinki Monitoring Group, another target of the government's campaign, has been severely shattered by the imprisonment and involuntary exile of some of its members. In Latvia and Estonia, in addition to individual cases of human rights violations, evidence of cultural repression is starkly provided by demographic statistics; in both states, the proportion of native citizens continues to decline.

In spite of such formidable obstacles, the people of the Baltic states continue to strive to protect their national identities. As a member of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I am heartened by their courage and vitality, but I am also deeply concerned about recurring violations of their human rights. The Soviet Union has pledged respect for these rights and as a party to the United Nations Charter and a signatory of the Helsinki accords, it has accepted political and legal obligations in these areas. We must take every opportunity to remind the Soviet Union of these obligations and, as we do today, continue to pledge our support for the Baltic peoples' historic struggle for freedom.●

WHAT HAPPENED TO DIPLOMACY?

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, we all share the problem of too much paper and too little time. But every once in a while, something filters to the top that demands attention. So it is with a recent column by Harrison Brown, editor in chief of the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists. Entitled, "What Happened to Diplomacy?" Mr. Brown's column thoughtfully details frustration with current U.S. foreign policy similar to my own. The column speaks for itself, Mr. President, and I ask that it be inserted into the RECORD at this point. As Mr. Brown said of the current turning point in arms control and foreign policy, we ignore this column and its warnings "at our peril."

The column follows:

WHAT HAPPENED TO DIPLOMACY?

(By Harrison Brown)

This spring the United States was responsible for several major setbacks to world peace in Libya, Central America, and Moscow. The developments in Libya appeared to be by far the most dangerous. First the Reagan Administration conducted massive naval maneuvers off the Libyan coast in an attempt to contest Colonel Qaddafi's declaration that the Bay of Sidra beyond the 12-mile limit belongs to Libya rather than to the world community. Following predictable attacks from Libyan missile installations, U.S. planes penetrated the Gulf, destroying two of the ground-to-air missile bases and two small Libyan naval vessels, killing several Libyan seamen.

A few days after the Gulf of Sidra episode, with the avowed objective of discouraging terrorist activity, the United States launched air attacks on specific military and terrorist centers in Benghazi and Tripoli. Unfortunately, some of the bombs did not reach their targets but instead seriously damaged residential areas and embassies, killing a number of civilians.

Whether or not these military actions should be called "war," they were certainly warlike. One wonders whether the United States could not have taken diplomatic actions to greater effect. To be sure, President Reagan has become increasingly distressed by Libyan support of terrorism, and many Americans undoubtedly approved when the U.S. giant finally struck the Libyan pygmy. But the United States and the world would be better off in the long run had peaceful measures been tried first.

The United States could have put much more effort—including economic clout—into persuading its allies to bring the Gulf of Sidra matter before the International Court of Justice, or boycotting passenger and freight flights in and out of Libya or, for that matter, any nation which harbors and encourages terrorists. Washington could have offered military as well as expanded economic aid to those African countries which have good reason to suspect Libya's intentions. These are but a few of the less warlike actions that could have been taken. Even a naval blockade of Libyan ports would have been preferable to the bombing of Libyan cities.

Not long after the Gulf of Sidra incident, it was revealed that in July of last year Robert C. McFarlane, the president's former national security adviser, told a group of the Administration's top foreign policy advisers that since diplomatic and economic pressures had failed to curtail Qaddafi's terrorist activities, much stronger measures would be needed. But McFarlane did not specify how strong those pressures had been. What did become clear was that the United States had engaged in serious discussion and study of the possibility of taking preemptive military action against Libya, possibly with the full cooperation of Egypt. However, Egypt apparently decided against going along with the plan.

In Central America, President Reagan's concern is that Daniel Ortega will provide a major base of operations for Cuban and Soviet activity in all of Latin America, but particularly in Mexico. His primary approach to this problem is military. Once again, the United States is not making adequate use of the diplomatic and other resources of its many friends in Latin America who share these concerns but appear to be less alarmed. Moreover, the United States has long avoided taking positive actions to help alleviate many of Latin America's serious economic, social, and political problems. Lack of progress in these areas will only hasten the day when U.S. fears of Nicaragua will seem trivial.

While the Nicaraguan and Libyan political winds were blowing hotter, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev again proposed a ban on nuclear testing and invited Reagan to join him in a summit meeting in Europe to reach such an agreement. The Administration, backed up by an army of pro-nuclear-weapons advisers, immediately rejected the proposal and then conducted tests.

If you don't want to do something, one excuse is as good as another. Richard Perle's latest concern is whether untested nuclear explosives would be "safe" to use. Groups with fat SDI contracts claim testing is essential to develop space defenses and to determine the effectiveness of possible patterns of SDI deployment.

Representative Les Aspin, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, said that the Administration is "rejecting something that's worth pursuing." Four former U.S. officials and negotiators—Paul Warnke, Spurgeon Keeny, Gerard Smith, and John B. Rhinelander—agreed, and Warnke added: "Since 1981, the Reagan Administration has made it clear they have no interest in a comprehensive test ban."

The prospects for arms control and disarmament are more dismal than they have been in a long time. If testing is not stopped until SDI is pronounced successful, the final great catastrophe may come first. The only development which could change this course would be truly effective protests from the American public and both parties in Congress. People must realize that we are approaching a turning point which is probably irreversible and which can lead to an accelerated arms race, and eventually catastrophe. We ignore this at our peril.●

ANNIVERSARY OF THE RESTORATION OF UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, June 30, 1986, marks the 45th anniversary of the restoration of Ukrainian independence. For Ukrainians throughout the world, this anniversary is a very important one. Although only free for a brief time, the emergence of Ukraine as a free state symbolizes the spirit of freedom which continues to live in the hearts of the 35 million Ukrainians who, today, live under Soviet oppression.

For those in the homeland and the 3 million Ukrainians scattered throughout the world, the story of the precious few months of Ukrainian independence in 1941 is well known. After suffering so much at the hands of the Russian Bolsheviks, particularly during the collectivization and the ensuing famine of 1932–33, the Ukrainian people enthusiastically supported the declaration of a provisional government by Prime Minister Yaroslav Stetsko. The Nazis ferociously suppressed this independence movement in Western Ukraine and initiated 4 years of persecution against the Ukrainian freedom fighters.

Despite the brutality they suffered at the hands of the Nazis, the Ukrainian people kept the spirit of the provisional government alive. Their fierce resistance to the German occupation in the Nazi-Ukrainian war hastened the defeat of fascism, but came at a cost of nearly 8 million Ukrainian lives.

Any hopes for Ukrainian sovereignty in the wake of World War II were shattered as Soviet Russian domination replaced Nazi suppression. Although it is the largest non-Russian nation in Eastern Europe, Ukraine remains, as it has for centuries, denied the freedom to determine its own fate.

In 1986, we continue to witness persecution of the Ukrainian people. The most recent manifestation of their suffering came with the Chernobyl nuclear powerplant disaster, the detrimental effects of which may never be fully known. Thousands of Ukrainians have lost their livelihood and homes as a result, and hundreds of thousands may suffer from long-term effects of radiation poisoning.

Despite the series of travesties, including genocide and violent russification, visited upon the courageous Ukrainian people, they have persisted in their struggle for autonomy and freedom.

To the Ukrainian-American community in my State of Michigan as they honor this important anniversary with special celebrations, we reaffirm our support for the struggle which continues in the homeland. In so doing, we demonstrate not only American disdain for the injustice of Ukrainian subjugation, but also our belief in the right of self-determination for all the peoples of the world.●

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY

RECESS UNTIL 9 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 9 a.m. on Tuesday, June 24.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order on tomorrow, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond 9:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following Senators be recognized for special orders, for not to exceed 5 minutes each, at some point during the day on Tuesday: Senators HAWKINS, PROXMIRE, HUMPHREY, EXON, MELCHER, and GORE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I indicate that we want to be on the bill by 9:30, and we will try to intersperse special orders if there is a little lag time between amendments or if there is a quorum call. We can fill that in with special orders.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we will resume consideration of H.R. 3858 tomorrow. I was visiting with the chairman, Senator PACKWOOD, and there may be six votes.

Mr. PACKWOOD. We are doing pretty well. Twelve amendments have been taken down in the last hour and a half or hour and three-quarters. We have a vote set on Senator MELCHER's amendment at 10 o'clock, with the yeas and nays. Senator MATTINGLY will bring his amendment afterward.

I think we have five or six amendments on which there may be rollcall votes.

Mr. DOLE. That sounds good to all of us, because that means we can keep our deadline for a 4 o'clock vote on final passage, which I believe would not only be in keeping with our agreement but also would accommodate the chairman and others who have a number of commitments following final passage.

If the House should give us the supplemental appropriation conference report tomorrow, we will act on that tomorrow evening, because it is causing a great deal of inconvenience.

My phones in Kansas are ringing off the walls. People who would like to close up their home deals cannot do it because there is no money. I hope we might be able to complete action on that tomorrow night.

I still hope that on Wednesday we can consider the Manion nomination, although I get little rumblings that that may not be possible. I hope we can bring it up for a time agreement and a vote and see what happens. Otherwise, we have no choice but to extend the week and try to complete action on it on Friday.

RECESS UNTIL 9 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there being no further business to come before the Senate, I move in accordance with the previous order that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 9 a.m., Tuesday, June 24, 1986.

The motion was agreed to: and, at 8:27 p.m., the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 24, 1986, at 9 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

USHEALTH ACT OF 1986

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the USHealth Act of 1986.

Over 50 years ago, Franklin D. Roosevelt articulated the need for protection against the costs of health care when he said: "We must bring home more and more to the average citizen the fact that health has become a part of Government, that it is no longer a question of charity."

Over 25 years later John F. Kennedy expressed his concern regarding the threat of catastrophic health care costs when he said: "* * * I am concerned about the futility of imposing on any person or family an unwarranted, unpredictable, and often unmanageable (health cost) burden that could easily be borne by an insurance arrangement—insurance that is spread over the working lifetime of each individual."

Earlier this year President Reagan, in his State of the Union Address, sounded the call for a major initiative on: "* * * how the private sector and Government can work together to address the problems of affordable insurance for those whose life savings would otherwise be threatened when catastrophic illness strikes."

Illness of a catastophic nature can strike any of us. And with few exceptions, the catastrophic illness creates a second catastrophe—a financial catastrophe. Tragically, there is little in the way of financial protection against the devastating costs of severe and chronic illnesses—costs that can rapidly deplete a family's lifetime savings.

I have seen middle-aged and older families struck by a chronic illness such as Alzheimers disease be faced with the catastrophic cost burden of long-term care. I have seen families of all ages denied access to needed primary and acute care due to lack of adequate insurance. According to a recent report, over 33 million Americans lacked health insurance in 1984. Part of this is because the Nation's program to provide coverage for health care for the poor—Medicaid—actually provides care to less than half of the poor population. Part is because some people are precluded from privately purchasing health insurance coverage due to a preexisting medical condition.

The personal catastrophe of having a productive and loving spouse, parent, or child be in a state of ill health already is as much as any family should have to bear. With the accompanying financial catastrophe—totaling tens of thousands of dollars in some cases—the burden becomes unbearable.

However, this Nation can prevent the financial catastrophe if it can find the political will to do so. Options do exist if America has the will to take on this "catastrophic health" crisis.

Today I am introducing one such option—a bill entitled the "USHealth Act." If enacted, this "American health plan" establishes the USHealth Program which provides catastrophic and basic health protection for all Americans, regardless of age or income.

USHealth would provide coverage for primary, acute, and long-term care and include special safeguards for catastrophic illnesses. It gives assurances that health care quality would be maintained. Most importantly, it would bring about these critically needed improvements without disrupting the essential professional relationship between individual patients and their health care providers.

USHealth is fiscally responsible in that it would constrain total health care costs to about 12 percent of gross national product [GNP]. USHealth offers an affordable American alternative to the current health care system through its constraint on health care cost increases—just as Canada has done successfully for the last 10 years. In the absence of such an approach, the Nation's health expenditures are projected to exceed this 12 percent of GNP by the year 2000, but without resolving the crisis facing people with catastrophic illness and people without adequate health insurance protection.

USHealth is a workable solution to address the broad concerns expressed recently by President Reagan and his Health and Human Services Secretary Otis Bowen. USHealth provides a major legislative benchmark against which other approaches—including the President's—can be compared.

Much to the credit of the President and Secretary Bowen, a consensus may finally have emerged on the need to protect all Americans from the financial risk of catastrophic illness. As evidenced by my introduction of the USHealth legislation, I totally agree with the administration that a broad problem exists which affects Americans of all ages and includes both acute and long-term care. I also agree that only a broad solution will provide the full health protection which Americans so desperately need.

The American people understand that need. Americans find it unacceptable that 30 to 40 million people have no health insurance protection whatsoever. Americans find it unacceptable that health care costs rise much faster than the incomes of most wage earners and the elderly. And Americans find it unacceptable that the tragedy of a severe or long-term illness is followed by a second tragedy—a financial disaster striking young and old alike.

Finally, we may once again be moving forward on a "health care crusade" that began with broad bipartisan support for the Medicare and Medicaid Programs 20 years ago and that has been advanced by the successes of these programs ever since. Let us hope that we can again follow this proud American tradition and find a truly workable American solution to today's health care challenge.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my full statement and the bill summary be included in the RECORD.

THE "USHEALTH" PROGRAM ACT: AN AMERICAN HEALTHPLAN

(A bill to contain health care costs, maintain quality and ensure access for all Americans)

PURPOSE

This bill is designed to control health care costs for all Americans whether they be individuals, employers, or the government; to maintain health care quality for all providers and patients, and to ensure financial access to health care and prevent financial disaster resulting from catastrophic illness.

BACKGROUND

Between 1978 and 1984, health care costs rose at an average rate of 12.6 percent, or 3.4 percent faster than the Gross National Product. Health care costs continue to rise and are likely to reach a level of 11.2 percent of GNP by 1992 and over 12 percent by the year 2000. At the same time, the elderly are paying more and more of their limited incomes for health care even with the help of Medicare and Medicaid. Out-of-pockets costs are estimated to be 18.5 percent of the elderly's income by 1991—substantially more than when the Medicare and Medicaid programs began. On top of the elderly's growing financial burden and in spite of the enactment of Medicare and Medicaid, many poor and near poor (over 30 million) still face major access problems due to lack of insurance. Many more Americans are underinsured against catastrophic illness.

BILL OVERVIEW

The provisions of this bill establish the USHealth program in 1992 which is designed to contain costs while maintaining quality and ensuring access. Health care cost increases will more closely match the increase in per capita Gross National Product—a level which closely approximates the Nation's ability to pay. The provisions to ensure financial access for all Americans, including the poor, the unemployed, the uninsured, and the elderly are financed through the savings generated by the cost containment provisions, extension of the Medicare payroll tax to all incomes, beneficiary cost-sharing, an employer tax, an expanded cigarette tax, State revenues, a premium paid by the elderly approximating the "Medicare Part B premium", and a surcharge on corporate and individual income taxes. The provisions to maintain quality include the active involvement of providers and consumers, Peer Review Organizations or qualified state quality assurance programs, a national Council on Quality Assurance, and the qualification of Health Maintenance Organizations.

THE "USHEALTH" PROGRAM ACT—BILL DESCRIPTION

In attempt to deal with the problems facing the American health care system, a series of changes are proposed. The provisions of this bill, if enacted, establish the USHealth program which contains health care costs for the federal government, States, employers, and consumers; improves financial access to needed services; helps maintain quality; and increases equity among health care providers and payers.

SECTION I: COST CONTAINMENT

This bill incorporates a series of cost containment measures. Greater incentives are provided for Health Maintenance Organizations States are encouraged to implement statewide cost containments programs as long as they perform as well as the federal program.

Health maintenance organizations

Medical care costs are contained through greater incentives for Health Maintenance Organization (HMO) development in general. The payment for HMOs is raised from the 95 percent of the Average Area Per Capita rate (AAPC) to 100 percent of AAPC as of 1992. The federal government initiates a national campaign to encourage beneficiaries to enroll in qualified HMOs. Employers are encouraged to encourage their employees to enroll in HMOs.

Federal and State cost containment programs

The federal health care cost containment program includes all services and patients. The cost containment provisions take effect in 1992 and include the following:

Inpatient hospital care is paid on the basis of Medicare's prospective payment system using the Diagnostic Related Groupings and adjusted for population differences (for example, based on a severity index). Future payment increases are limited to increases in per capita Gross National Product.[1]

Physician, nurising home, home health, hospice, and ancillary services (including prescription drugs) are paid on the basis of a prospectively set, fixes fee developed in consultation with health care providers and adjusted for differences in patient population, service type, and input prices. Future payment increases are limited to increases in per capita Gross National Product.

Exceptions to this payment system include payments to qualified Health Maintenance Organizations and payments in States with an approved state-sponsored cost containment program. Future payment increases for Health Maintenance Organizations and state-sponsored cost containment programs are also limited in effect to increases in per capita Gross National Product.

Payments to all providers are to be adjusted as necessary to ensure reasonable availability of health care services in rural areas, central city areas and for other "special need" areas or populations.

Utilization review of all health and long term care services is conducted by the Peer Review Organizations.

States have the option to be exempt from the federal system and to implement their own alternative payment programs. In order to qualify for the exemption, the state program must meet or exceed the cost containment targets entailed in this bill and maintain access and quality equal to or exceeding the levels resulting from this bill. The alternative payment system must be mandatory for and equitably treat all types of providers covered under the State system.

[1] Index is based on a 3-year moving average of increases in per capita Gross National Product.

For each State wishing to develop acceptable alternative payment programs, the federal government provides a three year development grant totaling between $1 million and $3 million. Those States with acceptable programs are eligible to have up to 50 percent of the savings (as compared to what would have paid under this amended law) added to reduce the state payment for the poor beginning in 1992. No additional state funds are needed to match this latter allocation.

Catastrophic protection and beneficiary cost sharing

Beneficiaries are protected from the cost of catastrophic illness but are required to pay coinsurance as follows:

a. 20 percent of health care and skilled nursing home and home health costs up to a maximum of $500 per person per year (indexed to per capita GNP), and

b. 25 percent of non-skilled long term costs up to a maximum of $1,000 per person per year (indexed to per capita GNP).

Coinsurance payments are made directly to the Trust Fund. The above coinsurance provision is waived for individuals in families with incomes under the poverty level and for individuals whose health care costs require the family to spend down below the poverty level. However, a small copayment may be charged to the poor as long as it does not prevent access to needed health care.

SECTION II: INSURANCE SYSTEM

A. USHealth Program

The following reforms take effect in 1992.

Administration

Overall administration is by the federal government's USHealth Administration (currently, the Health Care Financing Administration) which is both an off-budget and operates as an independent agency.

USHealth is overseen by the USHealth Board. The Health Board has responsibility for and control over the program subject to the law, or subsequent changes in the law, establishing the USHealth program. The Administrator of the USHealth Administration reports to the USHealth Board. Within the USHealth Administration, an Ombudsman office is established to represent beneficiary interests and help resolve beneficiary problems. The Administrator and the Health Board members are appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate.

Eligibility

All U.S. citizens and residents are eligible for the USHealth program.

Financing

Financing comes from several sources as outlined in Section V, "Financing of USHealth."

Benefits

Beginning in 1992, the basic health benefits package, for all enrollees, are similar to Medicaid "categorically needy" package and include the following: inpatient hospital services, outpatient hospital services, physician services, rural health clinic services, laboratory, x-ray services, EPSDT (for those under age 21), family planning (individuals of child-bearing age), preventive care, prescription drugs, physical therapy, occupational therapy, prosthetic devices, orthopedic shoes, nursing home services, home health services, respite care, inpatient psychiatric hospital services, and other medical or remedial care recognized under State law and specified by the USHealth program. Dental (including dentures) and eyeglasses are added before the year 2000 unless total USHealth expenditures would exceed 12 percent of GNP.

More specifically, long term care benefits are covered. Full coverage is provided with the co-payments made to the Trust Fund. The co-payment is waived for low income and for spend-down individuals. As part of the long term care benefit package, incentives are to be developed to encourage families to keep a LTC family member in their home.

Beneficiaries are protected from the cost of catastrophic illness but are required to pay coinsurance as follows:

a. up to a maximum of $500 per person per year (indexed to per capita GNP) for health care and skilled nursing home and home health costs, and

b. up to a maximum of $1,000 per person per year (indexed to per capita GNP) for non-skilled long term care costs.

Payment

Beginning in 1992, inpatient hospital care is paid on the basis of Medicare's prospective payment system using the Diagnostic Related Groupings and adjusted for population differences (for example, based on a severity index). Future hospital prospective payment rate increases are limited to increases in per capita Gross National Product as described in the cost containment section above. Capital is no longer allowed as a pass through and is added to the DRG payment. The adjustment to a particular DRG payment reflects the amount of capital required for that DRG. The mean ratio of total capital outlays to total non-capital DRG payments is not to exceed the mean ratio for the most recent three years.

Beginning in 1992, a fixed, prospective fee schedule is used to pay all providers in full for all non-hospital services (including physician, nursing home, home health, drugs, laboratory). The fee schedule is developed by the USHealth Administration in consultation with the respective provider organizations and consumer groups. In designing the fee schedule, adjustments should be made for differences in resource inputs and input prices. For example, physician payments should address current inequities among geographic areas, physician specialties, and types of services. To the extent possible and appropriate, the fee schedule should reward higher quality providers. For comparison purposes, the mean weighted fee cannot exceed the mean fee for a similar service paid under the current Medicare system as amended by this Act. Except for adjustments to reflect service delivery changes, future fee increases are limited to no more than increases in per capita Gross National Product.

Beginning in 1992, the payment for HMOs is raised from 95 percent of the Average Area Per Capita rate (AAPC) to 100 percent of AAPC. The AAPC is adjusted by age, sex, enrollee type, and appropriate health status factors. (The federal government initiates a national campaign to encourage beneficiaries to enroll in qualified HMOs.)

Beginning in 1992, the approved health care provider fee is full payment.

Medical education is paid on the same basis as under current Medicare law.

This provision does not apply in States with federally qualified alternative payment programs.

Delivery System

HMOs are the preferred providers of health care for beneficiaries. The USHealth

Administration shall require participating HMOs (including HMOs, CMPs, and IPAs) to be qualified as specified under Title XIII of the Public Health Service Act beginning in 1992. HMOs must continue to be qualified on an annual basis. HMOs shall be penalized or removed from the program when they no longer meet the HMO qualification standards. The Office of Health Maintenance Organization's cost for carrying out the ongoing qualification process is covered by the Trust Fund.

Beneficiary Information

Publications are provided which give side-by-side comparisons of HMOs in each area of the country. The use of HMOs is promoted, including the provision of a comparison of HMOs with the non-HMO providers in terms of quality assurance, covered services, and out-of-pocket costs to the elderly and disabled. (Information on the quality assurance system and the availability of a consumer hot-line are described in the quality assurance section.)

B. Medicare and Medicaid

USHealth replaces the current Medicare and Medicaid programs and is built upon those two programs. All Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries are entitled to enroll in USHealth.

C. Private insurance

The only private insurance which remains would be for benefits beyond those provided in USHealth. Any costs would not qualify for a tax deduction either for employers or for individuals.

Insurance companies are permitted and encouraged to perform intermediary and carrier functions under contract to the USHealth Trust Fund.

SECTION III: DELIVERY SYSTEM

As described above, Health Maintenance Organziations (HMOs) and similar delivery systems are to become the primary vehicle for delivering health and continuing care services in the long term. This is not to limit future delivery systems to the current definition of HMOs as long as alternative delivery systems are initially and continuously qualified by the USHealth Administration, provide the full range of benefits, and perform as effectively in terms of quality, access, cost to the consumer, cost to the respective third party payer, and covered services.

Campaign to promote HMO's

The federal government is to conduct a national media campaign to encourage the development of an enrollment in HMOs.

Financial incentives for HMO's

This bill improves the HMO's financial position relative to other delivery approaches by raising the payment rate to 100 percent of the Average Area Per Capita rate by 1992.

SECTION IV: QUALITY ASSURANCE SYSTEM

The current Medicare quality assurance (QA) system of Peer Review Organizations is upgraded to cover all medical services (inpatient and outpatient) for all patients and all providers and to place as much emphasis on quality assurance as on cost containment. Most provisions are to be phased in as of January 1, 1991. A State has the option to obtain a waiver from this requirement if it establishes its own plan of quality assurance and as long as it provides at least the same level of protection as the amended federal plan.

Increased emphasis on quality assurance

This bill requires DHHS and, subsequently, the USHealth Administration to award, administer, and evaluate its PRO contracts under the stipulation that at least one-half of the PROs' level of effort is for the purpose of quality assurance as of January 1, 1991.

Extension to all patients and payers

This bill requires DHHS and, subsequently, the USHealth Administration and its contract PROs to conduct quality assurance for all patients.

Extension to all medical services

This bill requires the DHHS and, subsequently, the USHealth Administration and its contract PROs to conduct quality assurance activities on all medical providers including hospitals, physician offices, nursing homes, home health agencies, and hospices. The level of PRO effort expended on each type of provider is in proportion to the national health care expenditure for this type of provider. Similarly, membership on PRO boards reflects the range of health care providers reviewed by the PRO.

Hospital discharge planning

This bill sets guidelines for discharge planning to protect against inappropriate discharges and to ensure a smooth and timely transition to post-hospital care. It also requires that hospitals have in place a discharge planning process that begins as close to the time of hospital admission as appropriate and that alerts nursing home and home health providers of a patient's anticipated need for post-hospital care at the earliest possible time.

Quality assurance "hot-line"

This bill requires PROs to have a 7-day-a-week hot-line for receiving questions and complaints from health care providers, consumers, and interested parties concerning health care quality problems. PROs are required to assist in the resolution of any legitimate quality related problems. The USHealth Administration, in coordination with each PRO, shall provide beneficiaries with the hot-line number for their PRO in a way that can be easily attached to their USHealth cards.

Local consumer advisory board

This bill requires each PRO to have a Consumer Advisory Board (CAB) by October 1, 1986 which conducts ongoing oversight of the PROs, provides input into the award and evaluation of PRO contracts, and can receive input from Medicare beneficiaries and other interested parties. The CAB and the PRO are responsible for educating consumers on quality assurance and on the availability of assistance from the PRO and other agencies. The PRO makes available to the CAB such information and staff as are necessary to carry out the CAB function, but not review information on either individual health care providers or consumers.

The CAB is required to prepare an annual report on the PRO's performance and submit that report to the respective Governor(s), to the National Council on Quality Assurance, and to DHHS and, subsequently, the USHealth Administration. CAB input is to be utilized in decisions to award PRO contracts.

The CAB consists of 5-7 volunteer members appointed by the respective Governor of the State covered by the PRO and representing organizations of the elderly, the disabled, the poor and other consumers.

National Council on Quality Assurance

This bill requires the establishment of a national Council on Quality Assurance (CQA). The Council's function is to provide oversight on the operations of the quality assurance system and make recommendations to DHHS and, subsequently, the USHealth Administration, and to the Congress for its improvement. Its oversight function includes the review of the administration of quality assurance, the overall performance of the PROs and waivered state plans, reports of the Consumer Advisory Boards, quality assurance studies and methodologies developed by DHHS, the USHealth Administration and others, the data needs of the PROs and input from interested parties.

DHHS and, subsequently, the USHealth Administration are required to provide such information as is needed by CQA to carry out its responsibilities. Based upon these reviews, the Council is to make recommendations annually for improving quality assurance to DHHS and, subsequently, the USHealth Administration, and to the Congress. DHHS and, subsequently, the USHealth Administration are required to take into account CQA input in its administration of the PRO program.

The Congressional Office of Technology Assessment (OTA) will provide for the appointment of the fifteen member Council consisting of equal numbers of health care providers, health care consumers, and experts in quality assurance. Subject to the review by OTA, the Council may employ staff as necessary to carry out these functions.

Studies and reports

The USHealth Administration shall prepare an annual report which assesses the performance of the quality assurance system and addresses the recommendations of the CQA and the concerns and recommendations of the CABs. DHHS and, subsequently, the USHealth Administration shall analyze the impact which the federal cost containment system, limitations on health care provider payments, and Health Maintenance Organizations have had on health care quality, access and beneficiary cost and submit an annual report to Congress. The USHealth Administration shall conduct studies on and develop improved methodologies for quality assessment and assurance for health care services including hospital, physician, nursing home, home health services, and hospice services. The USHealth Administration shall submit an annual report to Congress on the progress toward developing such methodologies.

Financing

As compared to current law and adjusted for inflation, the funding level for the PRO program is increased by 50 percent in FY 1992 (first year of implementation), by 65 percent in FY 1993, and by 75 percent in FY 1994 and in subsequent years. The funding for the CQA and the PROs program will be made from the Trust Fund. For those States with their own federally qualified quality assurance plans, the USHealth Administration is authorized to make available funds up to the amount that would have gone to the respective PRO as authorized above.

SECTION V: FINANCING OF THE USHEALTH PROGRAM

Much of the long term cost of expanding access and reducing costs for all beneficiaries comes from reducing health care cost inflation for all payers and all health care providers.

Health care cost savings are expanded by holding cost increases down to per capita growth in GNP.

Beneficiary cost-sharing applies to all services (but is limited by the catastrophic provisions).

In order to finance the USHealth program and to provide an orderly transition from the current system of financing health care, USHealth is financed through the following revenue sources:

A premium approximating the cost of the "Medicare Part B premium payment" is charged to people over the age of 65. This premium may be waived for elderly with incomes under the poverty level.

Employers pay a tax based on a percentage of employee compensation. The basis for setting that percentage is the aggregate amount which employers are paying under the current system for employee and retiree health benefits in 1990.

The cigarette excise tax is raised by 16¢ and indexed to per capita GNP. The "Medicare payroll tax" is expanded to cover all income levels. States provide revenues equal on average to ½ cost of the poor (i.e., everyone under poverty level). Payment formula is as follows: (total cost of poor) X ½ X (State population/US population) X (State per capita income/National per capita income).

An earmarked surcharge on all corporate and personal income taxes is made which equals the amount necessary to maintain the solvency of the USHealth Trust Fund. (Financing formula: Total USHealth expenditures minus cost sharing minus cost savings minus State share minus cigarette add-on minus the "Medicare payroll tax" minus the employer tax minus other revenue additions = Net revenue required from an X% surcharge on federal corporate and individual income tax.)

Revenues are placed in the USHealth Trust Fund which is off-budget.

Within 6 years, the Trust Fund should have an appropriate reserve for contingencies.

SCRAPPING SALT II RAISES RISK OF ACCIDENTAL NUCLEAR WAR

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, the decision by President Reagan no longer to abide by the SALT II Treaty increases the likelihood not only that we will stockpile an immeasurably large number of nuclear weapons, but also that we may in fact use them.

Much of the debate surrounding the administration's new SALT-free diet has centered on the nuclear buildup we will probably be forced to undertake if we free the Soviets from the numerical constraints of the treaty. That is the obvious concern. What has received less attention, though its implications are no less frightening, is that neither side would be required any longer to notify the other before simultaneously test-firing more than one ICBM. This relatively obscure provision is a very important safeguard against an accidental nuclear war. Without it, the razor-thin protection we have from nuclear holocaust would be shaved much closer.

Mr. Speaker, the area of confidence-building measures [CBM's]—provisions designed to reduce superpower tensions and to protect against an accidental war—is extremely important. Most defense experts believe that if one of the superpowers ever fires a nuclear weapon in anger, it will be because of a miscalculation or misinterpretation. CBM's would reduce that possibility by improving communications, codifying standard operating procedures in a crisis, limiting provocative actions, and so on.

The nice thing about CBM's is that they provide great benefits with very liitle cost for either side. For example, notifying the Soviet Union before simultaneously test-firing several ICBM's would clearly be in our interest. Whom would the joke be on if the Soviets were fooled into thinking such a test was a United States first strike and retaliated? The cost to us of the Soviets knowing of the test beforehand would be negligible. Unfortunately, the Reagan administration seems determined to play a high-stakes gambling game with the Soviet Union and is treating the CBM issue with the same casual disregard it has had for all attempts to reduce tensions between our two countries.

Last summer, I drafted an amendment to the foreign aid bill ordering a study of 10 ideas for CBM's by the Secretary of State and the Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. The response I got was disappointing, to say the least. Of the 10 proposals, the administration felt 5 were unnecessary, 3 were counterproductive and 2 were not verifiable—and therefore not worthy of consideration. The report was the sorriest excuse for analysis that I remember seeing from that level of government. The 10 proposed CBM's were not just ideas of mine; they have been discussed by prominent academics for years.

The proposals to be studied included some very commonsense approaches that could literally save the world someday. Yet the administration spurned them all—and offered no ideas of its own. The list to be studied included the following; an administration interested in arms control could have found at least one that it liked:

1. Increased redundancy for the Hot Line,
2. Create Hot Lines among all nuclear armed states;
3. Agree not to target each other's Hot Lines;
4. Agree on Standard operating procedures for communication and cooperation in a third party nuclear attack;
5. Prohibit "locking on" of fire control radars on ships and planes, agree on separation of naval forces during a crisis, and other measures to reduced provocations;
6. Place unmanned launch sensors in the missile fields of the U.S. and the U.S.S.R.;
7. Create zones free from anti-submarine warfare;
8. Mechanisms on submarine launched missiles to prevent accidental or unauthorized firing;
9. Training program for national command authorities; and
10. Announce contingent relocation of national command authorities.

Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to single out from the myriad choices the biggest mistake that the Reagan administration has made in dealing with the Soviets. Scrapping SALT II, though, certainly ranks high on the list. I think by now it is abundantly clear that these people have no interest in arms contol or in making the world safer from accidental nuclear war. That being the case, it is up to the Congress to take the necessary steps to keep the United States in compliance with the SALT II Treaty. I urge my colleagues to support Chairman FASCELL's resolution calling on the President not to exceed the numerical sublimits in SALT II and Congressman DICKS' bill to delete funding for weapons which would violate the SALT II agreements.

HONORING MASTER DANIEL PICCIANO

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct pleasure for me to add these remarks to a special occasion on June 29 honoring Master Daniel Picciano, head of the Second District of the Pennsylvania Knights of Columbus.

Under Master Picciano's leadership there has been an outstanding growth in membership and the many achievements of the second district.

Master Picciano has received numerous recognitions for his outstanding work with the Knights of Columbus. He is past grand knight of Jeannette Council 1222, is vice president of the Jeannette Columbus Home Association, he is a former district deputy, State council, past faithful navigator of St. Vincent Assembly Fourth Degree and is certified in every ceremonial of the order. He was also appointed to the newly created rank of master with star, the only master in the Calvert Province to receive this highest honor. Master Picciano was honored by Pope John Paul II with the apostolic blessing on the 10th anniversary of the Newman Associate Program that he instituted as president and served as chairman for the first 6 years.

When I see an individual record of accomplishment like that of Master Picciano, I cannot help but think of the thousands of lives his good work has touched, or the thousands of hours of better lives that have been lived because of this dedication, of the countless hours he has devoted to helping his fellow citizens.

I often remark that when the history of our great Nation is written, it will be marked less by the headlines of Government officials, than by the numerous individual acts of caring and concern by individual citizens. That is the example that Master Picciano has exemplified in his work on behalf of our citizens and communities.

We sometimes take such dedication for granted, but it does not happen in many other countries in the world, and it should never be overlooked when it happens in our own land. We reserve very carefully the title of "Great American" for a very few people, but it is my pleasure to make these remarks on behalf of a truly great American, Master Daniel J. Picciano.

FARMING THE GOVERNMENT

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, over the past months, I have continually addressed the various problems with the current farm program. I have always said that the current farm program is fundamentally unsound. It takes the wrong approach. The right policy is to develop a farm program which maintains a network of family farms—not large corporate farms. If we did so as a matter of policy, we would spend our money in a much different manner than it is now spent under the present farm plan.

In support of my disbelief in the current farm program, I'd like to share with my colleagues an article published on Tuesday, June 17, 1986, in the prestigious Wall Street Journal. It accurately describes the shortfall of the present program.

[From the Wall Street Journal, June 17, 1986]

NEW FARM LAW RAISES FEDERAL COSTS AND FAILS TO SOLVE BIG PROBLEMS

(By Wendy L. Wall and Charles F. McCoy)

Jimmie White, a debt-swamped Iowa farmer cut adrift by his lenders, is using government payments to plant hundreds of acres of corn and soybeans this spring. Come harvest, he expects to unload his crop on Uncle Sam.

The government will have paid Mr. White to plant unneeded crops that it may well end up buying; those crops will add to already-mountainous grain surpluses, depressing prices and driving up government costs. And Mr. White? In bankruptcy court for the second time in three years and hounded by creditors trying to sell off his land, he sees a good chance that he will be out of farming within two years anyway. Much of his more than $400,000 in federally backed debt would probably go unpaid.

This wasn't what policy makers had in mind when they patched together a new five-year farm bill last December. The program slashes the levels at which the government props up prices of most major crops, a nervy gamble that falling prices will spur farm exports and shrink surpluses. In theory, crop prices will rebound once the gluts dwindle. Meanwhile, the law reaches deep into taxpayers' pockets to blunt the battering that further price drops will inflict on farmers.

SCARS OF ITS BIRTH

But the bill emerged only after months of deal-cutting between Reagan-administration free-marketeers and farm-state congressmen. Critics say the program bears the scars of its birth. Some provisions of the program are contradictory, and it is at odds with other government policies, spending billions of dollars to do things for farmers that other programs spend billion to undo. It will give more federal money than ever to well-off farmers who don't need it to survive. And it won't make much of a dent in the root causes of farm distress: too much crop, too many cows, too much debt.

Admittedly, the new program will do some good. It probably will increase U.S. farm exports moderately, and a new conservation reserve could take some 45 million acres of poor land out of production for years. The law also forestalls a collapse in farm-land prices that would further ravage troubled farm lenders. And the federal payments will allow some farmers to survive long enough to benefit from falling fuel and fertilizer prices.

"Legislation is the art of the possible, and that's what was possible on that day," says Rep. Kika de la Garza, a Texas Democrat and the chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, who adds that it's too early to write off the measure. Sen Rudolph E. Boschwitz, a Minnesota Republican and a member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, says other farm-program alternatives "aren't as good as the policy we adopted."

MAJOR EMBARRASSMENT

But even so, critics say, the new law is an ill-conceived patchwork that will waste billions of taxpayers dollars. "When we look back in a year or two, it will be a major embarrassment," says John Schnittker, a Washington consultant and former undersecretary of agriculture.

Mushrooming costs could prompt legislators to scrap much of the program earlier than originally intended. The Agriculture Department estimates farm-program outlays for the full five years at $80 billion, before any cuts required by the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction act. But cost overruns are almost inevitable. The department puts the cost for the first three years alone at $54 billion, but the Congressional Budget Office estimates $64 billion and many economists guess perhaps $70 billion or more. The previous farm bill, budgeted at $11 billion, eventually cost nearly six times that over four years.

"These numbers can swing around $10 billion or so very easily," concedes Scott Steele, an Agriculture Department budget official.

Where does all this money go? Huge chunks go to people who farm for fun or tax breaks, to foreign investors and to big-time farmers with the financial muscle to survive on their own. In 1984, 15% of all federal handouts went to farmers with net worth exceeding $1 million, according to the department; under the new farm program, they will get even more.

VARIED BENEFICIARIES

Frederick Joseph, the chief executive of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., retreats every weekend from the big Wall Street firm to his 160-acre dairy farm in upstate New York. He says he is "troubled" by the economic impact of dairy price supports. But they will make the million pounds or so of milk that his farm will produce this year a lot more valuable.

Mohammed Aslam Khan grows rice in Butte City, Calif. He is a U.S. citizen, but four relatives, passive investors in the farm, aren't. They live in Faisalabad, Pakistan. Uncle Sam paid the four $152,010 for Mr. Khan's 1984 crop. Like other big rice, cotton, wheat and corn growers, the Khans will probably get even more this year. The new farm law exempts large portions of crop payments from limits on how much an individual can receive.

In Vincennes, Ind., Dennis Carnahan's family has pushed corn-production costs so low that they could probably turn a profit if the farm program were abolished. But the 33-year-old farmer figures that the program is "the best ball game in town." The Carnahans expect to collect $81,180 from the government for the corn grown on their 3,800-acre farm this year.

"Farmers are farming the government as well as the land," says John Baize, a soybean lobbyist.

Ironically, the new program is actually driving some big operators into the government fold. The policy sharply raises the stakes by slashing price supports—and thus market prices—for major crops, while increasing direct federal handouts to farmers who agree to idle some land.

Salyer American, a Corcoran, Calif., corporation that runs one of the nation's largest cotton farms, hasn't participated in a farm program since the early 1970s. But this year, the company, anticipating steep declines in cotton prices, is signing on. It expects to glean more than $1 million from Uncle Sam, while diverting much of its "idled" land to other crops.

TWO TIME BOMBS

Nevertheless, the two biggest time bombs now menacing agriculture, debt and overproduction, won't be defused.

The nation's farmers owe about $199 billion. About 75% of that is concentrated in the books of half of them, mostly operating the medium-sized family farms that policy makers aim to help.

But under the new farm law, only about 17 cents out of every federal dollar being spent does to full-time farmers in desperate straits, says Frank Naylor, the newly appointed head of the Farm Credit Administration and a former undersecretary of agriculture. That is largely because federal payments are based on how much a farmer grows.

Many debt-soaked farmers will get just enough to put in one more crop but not enough to survive. Paul Harbaugh, a Kiowa, Kan., wheat grower, will use his record federal payments to pay for planting this year's crop. But he doesn't expect to be able to trim his $600,000 debt enough to stay in farming. All the farm law is going to do is "prolong the agony," the 36-year-old farmer says.

Failure to deal with the debt problem is likely to cause huge federal losses on top of the farm-bill expenditures themselves. Uncle Sam holds or backs nearly half of all farm debt, including the shakiest part of it. That puts taxpayers in triple jeopardy.

Timothy Hartsock, an insolvent Ohio grain farmer, says the Farmers Home Administration recently wrote off a $200,000 loan that it backed for him in 1984. But, cut off by his lenders, he used fat federal payments to sow thousands of acres of corn and soybeans this spring. When the crop is reaped, he expects to get more money for shoveling it into storage bins.

Those bins are already bursting. Last fall, mountains of excess corn literally buried Main Street in some midwestern towns. Surplus cotton stuffs Southern warehouses. And as the winter wheat harvest began last month, the U.S. already had enough wheat to make 27 loaves of bread for each of the world's 4.9 billion inhabitants.

EXPORT PROBLEMS

The mammoth gluts guarantee that prices will stay low while government costs soar. And exports won't rise enough to substantially shrink the stockpiles anytime soon, economists say. Athough lower price supports should make the U.S. more competitive abroad, rivals such as Argentina and the European Community are expected to cut their prices to hang onto markets. Even one-time importing nations have begun to export food.

Meamwhile, the program encourages U.S. farmers to plant. Government subsidies are based on the amount farmers produce. With federal payments guaranteed, many farmers plant every permissible patch, regardless of economics.

In Indiana, Mr. Carnahan says his leased river-bottom land probably "would have grown weeds this summer" were it not for the program; otherwise, the land, costly to farm, wouldn't be profitable.

DAIRY POLICY

Dairy policy similarly chases its tail. The Agriculture Department is spending $1.8 billion to get some dairymen to kill their cows and quit the business; that program is supposed to slash milk-product surpluses that the government is forced to buy. But other farm-bill provisions will make milk production more profitable and encourge the remaining farmers to expand their herds. Meanwhile, pressured by cattlemen, Uncle Sam is buying up meat to ease a glut caused by slaughtering dairy cows.

The farm law is at odds with other government policies, too. The program will dish out $1 billion in subsidies to help spur U.S. farm exports. But the Reagan administration has barred one of farmers' biggest potential customers, the Soviet Union, from the export-subsidy program; irritated by this move, the Soviets have steered clear of U.S. wheat markets.

The bill seeks to recapture markets lost to cheap farm exports from Third World debtors such as Argentina and Brazil; but the Treasury Department opposes anything that might cut into those exports and crimp debt payments to the banks. Federal water programs pour out billions of dollars so that farmers can produce heaps of cotton and other surplus crops where only cactus would otherwise grow.

OLD MEDICINE

The new farm legislation treats some problems with heavier doses of old medicines that have never proved a cure. For instance, farmers have to idle more land than in the past to get subsidies. But Don Sutter, a heavily indebted Iowa farmer, says that won't stop him from reaping a near-record corn crop. "I'll idle the wet spots, the patches, the rocky ground that don't grow anything anyway," he says. "You just do whatever you can to outsmart them. It's not hard."

Some economists worry that the new farm program will sink beneath the weight of its own cost. Gramm-Rudmann pressures could gut it. Or Washington may just decide "that it isn't worth paying that much for those votes," says D. Gale Johnson, a University of Chicago economists.

Already, some members of Congress are warning that poor results on some fronts, notably exports, may prompt congressional consideration of drastic farm-program changes as early as next winter. Some experts favor expanding export credit and subsidy programs or paying farmers to idle as much as 50% of all land devoted to certain crops. Others have pushed for an undisguised welfare program that would pay farmers whether they plant or not; such a program, advocates say, would bolster farm income without encouraging production and could be cheaper than current programs, particularly if payments are gradually, particularly if payments are gradually scaled back.

However, most such approaches would probably drown in the same political riptides that engulfed the current law. And most experts say U.S. agriculture's fate will turn on factors such as inflation and the weather that no farm bill can influence.

Even some farmers question the current program's thrust. "The government can't sit there and pay us to grow corn," says Scott Scheetz of Ferris, Ill. "How would the American public like to pay Chrysler to produce cars it couldn't sell?

THE URGENT NEED FOR PARENTAL LEAVE

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, If you were to ask most people whether women in the United States received adequate time off during and after pregnancy you would be likely to find that people think there is. This is the United States after all. But perception and reality couldn't be further apart.

The United States has no national policy establishing maternity or paternity leaves for new parents. In fact, it is the only industrialized nation that does not; 127 countries around the world have established national maternity related benefits, the United States is only one of a handful of countries that does not.

You might ask why this is important. Lis Bensley, in an article for Medica, a newsletter for psychiatrists, does an excellent job explaining the health and emotional costs of ignoring the needs of working mothers. It is time that we stop putting our families at risk.

The article follows:

DOES PREGNANCY HAVE TO HURT YOUR CAREER?

(By Lis Bensley)

When Ruth Schwartz, MD, had her first child over thirty years ago, she did so with virtually no maternity leave. She worked up until she went into labor, then returned to work a few weeks later. "Stopping work to have a child was not accepted then," She says. Three years ago, Evelyn Witkin, MD, gave birth to her second child hours after performing surgery. Ten days later she was back on the job. Maternity leave was no longer taboo, but running a private practice allowed little time to stay home with an infant.

Despite the influx of women into medicine—by 1990 it is estimated that there will be 90,000 women physicians and 30,000 women in medical school—maternity leave remains a sore subject for most physicians. Women who have just started a practice are reluctant to take time off and medical students are hesitant to interrupt their studies. Financial demands and concerns about having to take a back seat professionally to peers who play by the books are further deterrents to getting pregnant.

"The current economic situation really hurts women's future as mothers," says APA president, Carol Nadelson, MD. "We're in a competitive model, pitting men against women. If a woman takes time off, who will hold her job? Who will pay her? It hasn't changed and I don't think it's going to until we have a critical mass of women in policy-making positions."

Typically, a woman who wants to work partime so she can be with her small children finds herself shuffled off to a less prestigious job. "We had one woman who had a professional appointment," explains Alexandra Symonds, MD, president of the Association of Women in Psychiatry. "She became pregnant and wanted to take a short time off, then come back partime. And, that's where she lost the appointment. Women simply can't maintain their status if they cut down their hours."

To help protect women's jobs, the Association has set up a task force to gather data on women who've lost their positions or been forced into lesser jobs because of a pregnancy. The group hopes to use that data to pressure hospitals and medical school to change their policies. "It's like civil rights," adds Dr. Symonds. "The attitudes won't change. We've got to get into the political networks and intimidate them."

The medical community is not the only culprit concerning maternity leave. The US in general lags behind all other Western industrialized nations in its maternity allowances. Sweden, for example, allows nine months' leave with 90 percent of the woman's pay and all her benefits as well as job protection. England gives a woman the option to take a paid prenatal leave and six weeks maternity leave with 90 percent pay and the option of taking a further 23 weeks leave. Americans, however, have no such impressive benefits—women have no job protection, no reasonable maternity leave and no health benefits if they take time off.

To remedy that situation, Senator Patricia Schroeder introduced a bill last April that is currently in committee. Entitled the "Parental and Disability Leave Act of 1985", the bill, if passed, would require employers to provide a minimum of 18 weeks maternity leave with job protection.

This bill could help countless women in the workforce directly, and perhaps create a better atmosphere for women physicians trying to alleviate the pressures of a medical career where grueling working hours, competition and stress are making motherhood increasingly difficult. One of the most insidious problems facing women physicians, particularly in the residency years, may be the strenuous labor they perform during pregnancy. Working during pregnancy, in and of itself, does not apper to be a risk to mother or child. A recent study tracking 12,515 deliveries over a 3-year period, in Rehovot, Israel, for example, found indentical rates of prematurity, prepartum and intrapartum pathology and vaginal delivery among housewives and employed women.

But a comparison of strenuous and nonstrenuous employment in pregnant women turned up less comforting results. M.J. Saurel-Cubizolles, MD, and associates, of the National Institute of Health and Medical Research, followed 621 pregnant hospital workers. Those women whose work included lengthy periods of standing, heavy cleaning and carrying heavy loads had a preterm delivery rate of 30 percent. In comparison, the premature delivery occurred in only 6 percent of the births to women whose work included no strenuous duties, and 18 percent of those whose work involved two out of three of the heavy work tasks. These results held even when statistics were adjusted for age and the socio-professional category of the woman's husband.

For women doctors, strenuous working conditions are often coupled with the age factor. Many women wait until they finish their training to conceive. This typically puts them in their mid to late 30's, a time of heightened risk for such problems as spontaneous abortion, ectopic pregnancy and infertility.

The pregnancies of 27 women physicians and medical students over a period of three years were studied by Dr. Schwartz, a clinical professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry, and published in November's "Obstetrics & Gynecology" Dr. Schwartz found "an increased incidence of threatened premature labor and a much higher incidence of abruptio and placentae and associated serious bleeding among women doctors when compared with the general population." A mother of 3 children, Dr. Schwartz had mild abruptia with the first child, and premature labor with all three. Her last child was born five weeks early. Still she was not comfortable taking any substantial time off. Several years later, after amassing a sizeable group of women physicians as patients, she decided it was time to do a formal study.

"It's a very difficult situation," Dr. Schwartz acknowledged in a recent interview. "And one that's not easily going to change. Doctors tend to ignore fatigue—when we're tired we don't submit to it. Our workday is much longer than normal and most of that time is spent on our feet. I hope we can get to a point where we can take a few weeks off before delivery and three months afterwards."

However, until there is a noticeable change in the attitudes of the medical establishment towards pregnancy and motherhood—even fatherhood—the question of having children will remain a very difficult one for women.

"When I was young, women MDs who had children simply had to muddle through," says NY forensic psychiatrist, Naomi Goldstein, MD. She acknowledges that times have changed. Women today have more options in their careers. But, because of increased competition and social changes, medicine is throwing up more barriers towards pregnancy. "My daughter is just finishing her training at Harvard Medical School and is getting married," Dr. Goldstein explains. "I know the issue of having children is very agonizing for them. They may ultimately choose not to."

Hopefully, women leaders in congress and professional associations will help create a system of adequate pre- and postnatal leave in this country. Without it, our supposed "freedom" to combine career and motherhood remains something of an illusion.

HEAVY TECH

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, trade barriers and international financial conditions, foreign subsidies and outdated attitudes on shopfloors and in corporate suites here at home—all these contribute to the flagging competitiveness of many American industries in world markets. But more important than any of these influences on the fate of America's most important industries is dwindling productivity. If our society can solve the problem of declining productivity, we can regain our position as the world's unrivaled economic superpower.

David Hoag, the president and chief executive officer of LTV Steel Co., has pointed out one important way of addressing the productivity problem: Bring high technology and heavy industry together. Too often, Mr. Hoag insightfully argues, journalists, politicians, and even businessmen and economists, treat high-technology enterprises and smokestack industries as incompatible rivals rather than potentially complementary partners. In a recent article in Industry Week, Mr. Hoag has laid out the case for applying the successes of high technology to the modernization needs of heavy industry. The result, "heavy tech," may hold the key to our country's economic future. I commend Mr. Hoag's article to the attention of my colleagues:

HEAVY TECH: NEW HOPE FOR BASIC INDUSTRIES

(By David H. Hoag)

There's an all-too-popular notion afoot that the American economy is trading in its smokestacks for potato chips and silicon chips. Even reputable business publications are hailing the emergence of service and high-tech industries as the wave of the future for the U.S. Heavy manufacturing, mining, and metal processing have been relegated to the rust bucket, floundering relics of another era.

It's certainly true that high-tech stocks have often been the darlings of the investment community. And it's interesting that the nation's leading fast-food chain now has more employees than General Motors. But the annual number of highflying, high-tech enterprise failures is growing rapidly. And few, if any, families are subsisting on fast-food wages. The basic reality remains that with only 20 percent of the non-agricultural workforce, manufacturing still manages to churn out nearly 50 percent of the gross national product.

High-tech marvels must be applied in order to be successful. Approximately 70 percent of high tech's products are consumed by basic industries. Services, whether financial or fanciful, cannot survive by serving each other. For the long haul, the U.S. needs a balanced economy. We cannot choose to ignore steel, mining, and manufacturing industries any more than we can choose to pursue a national course dependent on emerging industries. Either course is the equivalent of returning to the old King Cotton economy of the South.

The reality is that high technology and heavy industry are not competitors for the future. They are necessary components of the future—economic life without either is impossible. And when properly wed, they become the engine that will power American industry back to world leadership, not only in terms of profits, but also in quality, value, and image.

RAY OF HOPE

The solution to many—if not all—of our current economic riddles can be found by enhancing the productivity and quality of basic industries through high technology. I call that solution heavy tech, the blending of high technology and heavy industry—which, by the way, will strengthen, not limit, the growth of the service sector.

Heavy tech carries no glamor with it, but it does offer one vital ingredient—hope. Hope that Americans can regain its global preeminence in basic industries.

The transition from labor-intensive to heavy tech has been a slow, painful, and costly exercise both in terms of money and human energy. Through heavy tech the steel industry, for example, has applied computers, electronic controls, management-information systems, advanced production processes, and statistical process control to the herculean task of becoming globally competitive. In relation to the size of the task we have only just started.

Yet, today, this effort is in danger of stalling out. The basic industries are struggling to stay afloat, their pockets being emptied of money needed to invest in advanced technology. We need imaginative efforts now, before the clock runs out, to put heavy tech into high gear.

SUGGESTIONS

The first step may sound simple, but it will require courage. Many events of the last decade testify to the fact that Americans have abandoned some of their growth mentality. We must recapture that mentality. A quick sketch of the way basic industry has responded—defend, contract, erect fortifications, wait until the dollar declines—supports this view.

Moreover, we must stop doing things that work against the process of investment and growth. For example, the current program of investment tax credits is the kind of program that encourages and fosters growth—as long as your company is profitable and paying taxes. At a time when we should be encouraging growth in our heavy-tech industries, our leaders are proposing, under the umbrella of tax reform, to eliminate investment tax credits.

To make this matter worse, capital-intensive industries like steel, which have made enormous investments in plants and equipment and posses hundreds of millions of dollars of credits, have not benefited from the existing program because they have had little or no taxable income. These industries that need capital to implement high-technology equipment could lose that opportunity to be world competitors.

Senate Finance Chairman Robert Packwood—while out to repeal the investment tax credit as part of the overall tax reform—has proposed a sensible tax credits at the rate of 70¢ on the dollar. If tax reform requires that we sacrifice our special incentives to invest, at least we should assure that the credits already earned can be put to effective use.

Both high-tech and heavy-tech companies should lobby for the implementation of Sen. Packwood's unused tax-credit proposal. With an infusion of this capital, basic industries could solve many of their most dire programs by becoming heavy-tech industries. The producers of the high-tech products would benefit greatly by having their primary customers strengthened. And service companies would flourish from the downstream demand created by vital, expanding manufacturing base.

FANNIE ROYSTON: AN OUTSTANDING CITIZEN

HON. WILLAM J. COYNE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, on June 24, 1986, in the East Conference Room at the U.S. Supreme Court, Mrs. Fannie Royston will receive an award for outstanding public service benefiting local communities. Mrs. Royston is from Pittsburgh, PA, and a resident of the 14th Congressional District which I represent.

This award is given by the American Institute for Public Service. This award, according to the institute—

. . . is designed to recognize the countless private individuals across the country who are performing extraordinary public service in their local communities.

An article in the Pittsburgh Post Gazette describes Mrs. Royston—

. . . as a one-woman relief agency . . . [who] has had a profound effect on her neighborhood.

The article describes in detail why the institute is bestowing this award upon Mrs. Royston and I want to include it in the RECORD.

Mrs. Royston is a credit to the city of Pittsburgh. Her actions to improve the quality of life for her neighbors is a clear indication that one person can make a difference. I congratulate the institute on its choice and I congratulate Mrs. Royston upon her receipt of this Public Service Award.

FANNIE ROYSTON

Somewhere on her journey from a sharecropper's cabin in Georgia to a brick house in Pittsburgh, Fannie Royston became a one-woman relief agency without red tape. At 66, she has had a profound effect on her neighborhood.

Whether she was leading a group of children in cleaning up a vacant lot, turning her house into a tutoring center, starting a lunch program, getting teenagers out of jail and finding them work, or paying a neighbor's rent, Mrs. Royston's purpose has always been the same: to fight poverty, ignorance, hunger and prejudice with the only weapons at her disposal—self respect, a paycheck laden with overtime, a sense of humor and a lot of unconditional love.

Mrs. Royston works at the U.S. Post Office operating a sorting machine, and puts in all the overtime she can get—weekends, nights and holidays. The extra money goes to other people in one way or another. She may spend it on someone's gas bill or a family's groceries or clothes for children whose parents can't afford them. By far the lion's share goes for gardens. Gardens, full of vegetables, placed around the black community on lots that were strewn with debris until Mrs. Royston decided they could be put to better use.

When her husband died in 1963, she moved to her current neighborhood in South Oakland. She couldn't believe the mess. She marched out and began to clean up the streets. A group of kids followed her for a while, then started to help. That was the beginning. Soon she was going door to door meeting her neighbors. She found each house had a problem worse than the last.

Ever since then, Mrs. Royston's life has been one long list of problems discovered, solutions delivered. The list of her projects over the years has grown too long to remember. Some were institutional, like founding the South Oakland Citizens Council. Some were more personal, like the time she kept a neighbor from being evicted by buying her house.

She is quick to credit the many people who have helped her projects over the years with time, money and moral support. And she makes no claims to self-sacrifice.

"When folks tell me I can't do something, I just go and do it anyway."

TRANSPORTING SALVAGED FOOD

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention to a bill which I am introducing today that would amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to the charitable deduction for providing transportation of donated food.

Needy and hungry people in our country are relying more and more on donations of food from food banks and soup kitchens. These private voluntary organizations in turn rely on donations of money and food from concerned individuals.

One concerned individual, John van Hengel, saw his project of gathering food for a local soup kitchen grow into a national network of food banks, appropriately named Second Harvest. Second Harvest, a nonprofit corporation, received 100 million pounds of food and grocery products during 1985. National food companies, such as Beatrice, Del Monte, Kellogg, Proctor & Gamble, and Nabisco have donated food and management expertise to aid this national network of food banks.

The over 250 national and regional companies that donate food to Second Harvest have been encouraged by section 170(e)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, which provides a special rule for the deduction by corporations of qualified contributions of certain property. This rule gives food companies a deduction which is equal to the costs incurred in processing the food for sale plus one-half of the profit the company would make if the food were sold.

At the request of Second Harvest, many in the transportation industry have offered reduced rates or sometimes transported food at no cost. Conrail, Burlington Northern, Preston Trucking Line, Leaseway Transportation Corp., and Giant Food, Inc., are among many companies that deserve special recognition and thanks for their role in transporting food during Second Harvest's initial development period. However, there is a need for more help from the transportation industry. Presently, this industry has carriers who pay high taxes and carriers who are barely making ends meet. A deduction similar to the one available to food companies for their donations could be a very helpful incentive in recruiting more carriers to help transport food to feed the needy.

This deduction would increase the amount of food Second Harvest and other organizations who collect donated food could gather and distribute. In 1985, for each dollar spent by Second Harvest, $153 worth of food was distributed to needy Americans. You have to admit that is an extraordinary return on the dollar.

But, the need for donated food is not diminishing. Various studies show that our country's need for emergency food assistance has grown nearly 20 percent over last year.

The role of the transportation industry must grow in order to continue moving donated food to nonprofit organizations that feed the ill, the needy, or infants. I believe that my bill will provide a real impetus to the transportation industry to participate more heavily in these efforts.

A partnership of concerned individuals, nonprofit organizations and private industry are making a difference in the lives of poor and needy Americans. Our Government, through the type of encouragement provided by this bill, also has role and contribution to make. I urge my colleagues to join me and support this bill.

REMEMBERING BILL MATSON

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, this past Sunday I joined with 500 other friends of Bill Matson at a Memorial Service in Camp Hill, PA, to honor this great American and good friend, who died on Monday, June 16.

Mr. William F. Matson was a friend of mine for nearly two decades. As president of the Pennsylvania Rural Electric Association and the Allegheny Electric Cooperative we worked together over the years on numerous projects and plans for the people of Pennsylvania.

Bill Matson was a consumerist and a leader who left his mark across the State of Pennsylvania in helping people and improving their lives. As I sat and listened and remembered at the memorial service many words occurred to me that need to be mentioned in connection with Bill Matson's life and career: integrity, dedication, devotion, courage, understanding, concern, caring.

Bill had an invisible magnetism, some refer to it as leadership, but however you describe it, Bill was a man who made a difference. His life is evidence to the impact that one individual can have.

It was somehow typical of Bill that though he was sick for several months prior to his death, his friends and associates were unaware of it. He carried on and continued his work and kept his spirit strong. Through his actions in life and in death he has made all of us who knew him a little stronger, and a little better, and he will continue to as we remember him.

SANCTIONS ON SOUTH AFRICA

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the recent passage of the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986 puts the House of Representatives clearly on record in favor of tough sanctions against the Government of South Africa. The behavior and policy of South African leaders leave the United States little choice. As long as they persist in denying political and economic freedom to the majority of South Africans, President Botha and his colleagues need to know that the United States stands with those denied freedom and not with a handful of reactionary Afrikaners.

This is not to say we should punish South Africa and then forget the human rights abuses of the Soviet Union, North and South Korea, and dozens of other nations. But we have imposed sanctions on 20 other nations with flagrant human rights records. And since South Africa enshrines discrimination in its very laws and constitution, which explicitly denies seats to blacks in the South African Parliament, the United States should stand up for freedom.

I include for the RECORD an editorial from the Grand Forks Herald of North Dakota, which makes a cogent plea for sanctions against South Africa:

U.S. SHOULD TIGHTEN SCREWS ON SOUTH AFRICA

Declaring another state of emergency in South Africa, President Botha told his country to get ready for more economic sanctions from abroad.

And that's how the United States should respond—more sanctions.

President Reagan has to let white South Africans know that their country will lose more American dollars for every day that South Africa shows a preference to bloody police action over the political freedom of the majority of its population.

Sanctions might not work, but they have to be tried at least for a while, to see if economic loss will help the moderates in South African's political scene gain some influence, all the better to avoid a civil war.

If the United States is to stand for freedom abroad, it cannot stand for business as usual with the government of a country that dispenses liberty on the basis of skin color and ancestry.

South Africa's government should be fully aware that its attempt to placate the extreme right-wing Afrikaner influences in its government will lead to more severe reprisals from its industrial trading partners. Canada was among the first to announce a series of political and trade restrictions this week, and the United States should not be far behind.

The Reagan administration ought to follow Canada's example—not cutting relations entirely, not cutting trade entirely, but making it clear, nevertheless, that South Africa's government has worn out a welcome for more of its envoys and business promoters. Canada also set a good example by offering a new education fund for blacks.

We may buy a lot of South African chromium, platinum, uranium and gold in the United States—and South Africans like to keep reminding themselves and us of that mineral dependency. But the protection of the trade in these resources could mean getting on the side of freedom in South Africa, and not the side of extremists who would sacrifice their country's future by clinging to the mishapen ideals of its past.

Let the United States be one of the nations that helps, not hinders, the quest of freedom and civil rights for the majority of South Africa's population.—Steve Schmidt for the editorial board.

ALL AYES ON TAX REFORM

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, Central New Jersey's well-respected daily newspaper, The Home News, came out in support of the Senate Finance Committee's tax package on the day that the full Senate began debating the measure. The editorial predicted, we now know correctly, that the Senate would reject substantive amendments in order to preserve the 27 percent top tax rate which is the bill's main attraction. I commend The Home News' insightful editorial to my colleagues attention.

[From the Central New Jersey Home News, June 9, 1986]

ALL AYES ON TAX REFORM?

As the Senate resumes debate today on the most radical tax-revision proposal in 50 years, some of its most influential members are saying they expect the bill to be passed unanimously—"by a vote of 100-0," predicts minority leader Robert Byrd.

That's a breathtaking possibility—it would have been inconceivable only a few weeks ago. But plainly, the train has left the station on tax reform and it will surprising if more than a handful of senators aren't on it when the tickets are punched next week.

Still, the final shape of the tax bill that the Senate is certain to pass is not yet clear. Finance Committee Chairman Robert Packwood, whose carefully structured 27 percent top tax-rate plan is the engine of tax reform, is urging his colleagues not to open up the bill to amendments, which could cause the whole process to collapse. It will be amazing if his plea is heeded and the bill sails through unchanged. A number of senators already have vowed they'll seek amendments to retain deductions for Individual Retirement Accounts and for sales taxes, for example.

But the Senate is remarkably reluctant to tamper with the Finance Committee's bill—at least for now—because members know the danger that once the amending begins, there's no end to it. And that would be the end of tax reform for this year and probably for several years. Moreover, the bill as it emerged from committee really is a good bill. New Jersey's Sen. Bill Bradley calls it "the best thing middle-income Americans have seen in a generation . . . infinitely better than current law." That's right—and Bradley, of course, deserves much of the credit for it.

Whatever bill the Senate passes, however, won't be the last word. The Senate and House versions of tax reform will be reconciled in what promises to be one of the most important conference committees ever. That's where the real changes will be made, where the deals will be cut and the horses traded—and where the lobbyists for hundreds of special interests will concentrate their efforts to protect and preserve tax preferences.

So if the Senate passes the Finance Committee's tax bill intact and overwhelmingly—maybe even unanimously—count on the opening of a whole new tax era. But don't count the costs and benefits until the conference committee writes the final bill.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. PAOLO FUSAROLI

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished colleague JOHN MURTHA and I were recently invited by Dr. Paolo Fusaroli, rector of the University of Trieste, to visit the university and participate in a symposium. We were greatly honored by his request but will be unable to accept this most kind invitation because of the urgency of congressional business.

However, I did want to acknowledge officially his invitation and the esteemed Dr. Fusaroli for his many contributions to the friendship between Italy and the United States. Through his vision and his leadership, he has established collaborative agreements with leading American universities, as exemplified by Polytechnic University and New York University on the east coast, and Stanford University on the west coast.

The pivotal location of the University of Trieste, which is at one of the significant crossroads of Europe, makes the vision and dynamic leadership of Professor Fusaroli particularly significant to the prosperity and stability of that region. It is an admirable example of the impact that the initiative of a committed individual can have on cutting across the boundaries of geography, language, and culture through scientific and academic collaboration, Mr. Speaker, I am certain that my colleagues will want to join me in recognizing the distinguished president of the University of Trieste for his many fine contributions to the friendship of our two countries.

SAVING AND THE SENATE IRA PROPOSAL

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday June 23, 1986

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, the proposed changes in the treatment of Individual Retirement Accounts [IRA's] contained in the Senate tax reform bill have caused a storm of protest. Under the bill, individuals who are active participants in employer-maintained retirement plans would not be allowed to make tax-deferred IRA contributions (though IRA's would remain available to all). All other taxpayers would be unaffected by the change, and all taxpayers would continue to defer taxes on IRA earnings.

At my request, the Congressional Research Service prepared a study (CRS Report #86–733 E) comparing the Senate's IRA proposals with current law. The findings show that any differences would likely be minor, and some individuals would actually be able to increase the value of their IRA under the Senate plan.

The IRA debate has concentrated on the loss of the deductibility of contributions, even though that is not the major benefit from an IRA. The principal benefit—deferral of taxes on the IRA earnings—would remain intact. In addition, two other aspects of the Senate bill would work to offset the loss of deductibility of contributions.

The first, and most obvious, is the dramatically lower marginal tax rates. This means that individuals would be able to keep more of the proceeds of their IRA than under the current, higher schedule of tax rates. This does not mean—as is often implied—that the lower rates depend on giving up the ability to defer taxes on IRA contributions (the revenue gain associated with the IRA change finances only a fraction of the revenue loss associated with the drop in rates). Nevertheless, the lower rates are a significant factor that must be taken into consideration.

The other offset is more subtle, and could be far more important. Under the Senate proposal, individuals would be able to increase the amount of their own funds in their IRA's which earn tax-deferred interest. Under current law, part of any IRA contribution is deferred tax liability (equivalent to a government loan) and part is the taxpayer's own funds (equivalent to an after-tax contribution). For example, a person in the 30-percent marginal tax bracket who invests $2,000 in an IRA actually has an investment of only $1,400 and a loan from the government of $600. At retirement, he or she pays taxes on everything that is withdrawn, but it turns out that this is equivalent to keeping the investment portion (the after-tax amount, $1,400 in this case) and its interest, and repaying the government $600 plus its interest. Put another way, the deductibility "benefit" under current IRA law prevents taxpayers from investing fully $2,000 of their own funds.

Under the Senate proposal, no part of an IRA contribution would be deferred tax liability, and therefore, contributions would be made with after-tax dollars. As a result, individuals would be able to increase, or "scale up", the amount of their own funds earning tax-deferred interest (to $2,000) instead of using these extra funds for current consumption or otherwise saving it in a taxable account.

This has important implications for our Nation's deplorable savings rate. There is no evidence that IRA's, as currently contrived, have increased saving in this country; in fact, our savings rate has actually dropped since IRA's were established. One reason may be that people save as if their IRA contributions were being made with money that was all theirs. If so, the "scaling" aspect of the Senate proposal could result in increased personal savings in the country. While perhaps unintended by its authors in the other body, an increase in personal savings would nevertheless be one of the most important and beneficial public policy provisions of tax reform.

In my opinion, the IRA debate has seen too much emphasis placed on the loss of the deductibility of IRA contributions and not enough attention to the offsets and the potentially significant public policy implications. This new CRS study indicates that many people would do better under the Senate proposal because of the combination of a lower marginal tax rate and the "scaling" effect. And the country could be better off by the increased saving induced by the IRA policy change.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 350

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to outline my reasons for supporting House Concurrent Resolution 350, calling on the President to adhere to SALT II, which passed the House Thursday.

First of all, without SALT, verification would be much more difficult. This, of course, would also serve to undermine our confidence in our ability to measure Soviet nuclear capabilities, leading to a possible escalation of the arms race. In addition, the abandonment of SALT would enable the Soviets to double the number of warheads they already have in place. Where as if SALT were adhered to, it would force the Soviets to retire considerably more nuclear systems than the United States.

This resolution enjoyed considerable support because it is a sensible, measured statement as to how we should view the treaty. It plainly states that the United States will only continue to comply if the Soviets do the same. Further, there are three concrete steps outlined in House Concurrent Resolution 350 that enable us to deal with issues of Soviet noncompliance. They are: First, taking issue with Soviet violations through the auspices of the Standing Consultative Committee [SCC], a body which has already resovled a number of disputes relating to verification; second, to raise the issue of Soviet compliance at the Geneva arms talks; and third to raise the issue of Soviet noncompliance at the upcoming Shultz-Shevardnadze talks, the summit, or by having the United States respond to violations by way of our own unilateral defense programs, such as speeding up the development of the Midgetman.

Certainly, the intention of this resolution is not to undercut our arms negotiators in Geneva, but it is intended to let the President know that we are concerned about his abandonment of SALT. On a much simpler note, we have nothing to replace SALT. If we are ever going to get a grip on the insanity of the arms race, we cannot do it by abandoning arms control agreements already in place.

One final point as chairman of the North Atlantic Assembly's Civilian Affairs Committee, I have come to appreciate the importance of working with our allies on defense and arms control issues. It is my understanding that most NATO governments, including Great Britain and West Germany, are not in favor of the President's proposal to abandon SALT, and they by no means can be considered anti-nuclear or "knee-jerk" liberals. If the President's staunchest, conservative allies oppose this move, isn't it reasonable that he should take a step back and reconsider this position on SALT? The alliance has been bruised enough lately by its constant critics. It's time we payed more attention to our NATO partners on issues of substance. The Atlantic Alliance has served us well for 37 years, maybe we should heed their advice on SALT.

A vote for this resolution was a vote for alliance unity. It was also a vote for sanity. Arms control is our only hope for the future. I congratulate my colleagues on the passage of House Concurrent Resolution 350.

LEATHER WORKER IS HONORED

HON. GENE CHAPPIE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. CHAPPIE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to a citizen whose artistic contributions have been honored by the National Endowment for the Arts. Luis Ortega, a Hispanic-American rawhide worker from Paradise, CA, is one of only 13 artists from the entire country to receive a National Heritage Fellowship this year. The Endowment's Folk Arts Program recognizes the achievements of the country's outstanding traditional artists who enhance America's cultural heritage.

Western leather workers agree that Luis Ortega is the best rawhide braider in the world today and probably ever. His work is displayed in museums across several Western States, including Oklahoma City where 24 of his pieces are on display at the Cowboy Hall of Fame.

Ortega and the 12 other recipients will be honored in official ceremonies to be held in early September in Washington, DC. The main objective in honoring these outstanding people is to help preserve and enhance this Nation's multicultural artistic heritage.

All of us who live in California's Second Congressional District are very proud of Luis Ortega and congratulate him on his many artistic achievements. I know that he will continue to bring a sense of fascination to many, and inspire others to pursue an interest in the arts.

HONORING OUR NATION'S FIREFIGHTERS

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 23, 1986

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to praise the work of our Nation's volunteer firefighters.

We have seen in recent years an enormous increase in volunteer work across our country, as the American people have risen to President Reagan's call for a renewed spirit of volunteerism. It is this spirit that makes the American people, and in turn, America, great.

The volunteer firefighters, since the earliest days of our Nation, have never lost this spirit. Each day these brave men and women risk their lives to save the lives of others. This is the noblest work any one can do.

The firefighters have a prayer, calling on God to give them the strength and courage to carry on their noble work. I wish to share this prayer with my colleagues in Congress and with the American people.

The text of the prayer follows:

THE FIREMAN'S PRAYER

When I am called to duty, God, Wherever flames may rage;
Give me strength to save a life Whatever be its age.
Help me embrace a little child Before it is too late,
Or save an older person from The horror of that fate.
Enable me to be alert and hear the weakest shout
And quickly and efficiently To put the fire out.
I want to fill my calling, Lord, And give the best in me;
To guard my ev'ry neighbor, and Protect his property.
And if, according to your will, I have to lose my life,
God bless with your protecting hand My children and my wife.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

SENATE—Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Legislative day of Monday, June 23, 1986

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Father in Heaven, we invoke Your presence and wisdom as the Senate enters the final hours on the tax reform bill. Very few Americans will be unaffected by this bill, whatever shape it takes in its final form. We thank You for the leadership by the chairman and ranking member of the committee, the hard work of committee staff, and the legislative aides of each Senator in preparing amendments and processing voluminous details of this monumental task. Mighty God, work Your will and way through the minds and hearts of the Senators in completing this definitive legislation and through the conference to an equitable and just conclusion. In His name Who said "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's."—Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able majority leader, Senator ROBERT DOLE, is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer, the President pro tempore, Senator THURMOND.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this is sort of a recap for Members.

The leaders have 10 minutes each. That will be followed by routine morning business, not to extend beyond 9:30. At 9:30, we hope to be on the bill. There will be special orders. Hopefully, they can be interspersed throughout the day, maybe some before 9:30 and maybe some between 9:30 and 10, depending upon what happens.

There will be a vote, as I understand, at 10 o'clock. Special orders have been entered for Senators HAWKINS, PROXMIRE, HUMPHREY, EXON, MELCHER, and GORE.

At 9:30 a.m., we will resume consideration of the bill H.R. 3838. As I said, there will be a vote at 10 o'clock.

Mr. President, this is the last day of the tax reform bill. The big vote should come at 4 o'clock. We would appreciate help in that effort. I would guess we may be able to have just that final passage vote. There is about a half-hour reserved before that for the leaders and the managers to make statements on the bill itself.

Mr. President, I think we are in pretty good shape, according to the chairman, Senator PACKWOOD. I would hope that Members would come to the floor as early as they can this morning, say at 9:30. At least on this side, we will not have our normal luncheon because there will be votes throughout the noon hour.

Mr. President, I just urge my colleagues not to wait until 3 o'clock and rush over and say, "I want 30 minutes on the bill," or "I want to offer my amendment." That would cause problems later in the day.

Mr. President, at this point I wish to present a statement for the RECORD on the tax bill. I want to point out one or two things.

SENATOR RUSSELL LONG'S CONTRIBUTION TO TAX REFORM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, first about the bill itself, I think it is an outstanding piece of legislation. Obviously, it is not perfect. It could be improved and I think there will be improvements in the conference, maybe even improvements before we vote today. I know that many Members on both sides have reservations about the bill, about certain provisions in the bill. We are hearing from constituents on a daily basis about, "It is a good bill, but—."

I think on both sides of the aisle, we are aware of those problems and hope they can be resolved if not before the vote, then later.

Having been the chairman of the Finance Committee, I want to certainly extend my congratulations to the chairman. I think BOB PACKWOOD has performed a near miracle because this bill was about as dead as a dodo bird 6 or 7 weeks ago. In a period of 2 or 3 days, it was revived. It is now right on track.

Mr. President, this bill has broad support on both sides. It is a bipartisan effort. There has been a lot of effort by Democrats and Republicans in the committee, and we have seen it on the floor time after time after time.

And finally Mr. President, this morning I want to pay special tribute to my old Finance Committee copilot and good friend, RUSSELL LONG. This will be the last big tax bill for Senator LONG, the capstone of what can only be characterized as an illustrious career in the field of tax legislation.

Mr. President, Senator LONG was first elected in 1948 and was chairman of the Finance Committee for 15 years. Politics in America describes his leadership this way: "He had an almost uncanny ability to spot a nascent consensus in the Senate's maelstrom of conflicting views on any given issue, locate a center that would hold, and occupy it at precisely the right moment."

That is how I think most of us would describe Senator LONG and his efforts.

I do not know what else you can say about the legislator. I do know that during the 4 years that I chaired the Finance Committee and for all the years I have served on the committee, I often turned to Senator LONG to reap the benefits of his collected wisdom in tax law as well as political strategy.

There is no one in the Senate today, nor probably has there ever been, who has a wider, more thorough knowledge of the Tax Code than Senator LONG.

I can recall a number of times in the committee when we would raise some amendment and he would say, "I do not think I know very much about that," but if you go back and check you would find maybe 10 years before he started the entire thing.

So he has a vast knowledge of the Tax Code.

I just want to thank him early today because this will be a very busy day.

Mr. President, I was chairman of that committee for 4 years and he had been chairman of that committee for 15 years. When I became chairman, obviously there was a change. People were wondering what would happen, will the committee function?

The committee functioned because Senator LONG never looked back, he never tried to undercut the new chairman. He cooperated every step of the way. Obviously, we had differences, maybe political differences or policy differences. But as far as moving ahead and making my job not only bearable, but very enjoyable most of the time, it was his cooperation that made it possible, and I believe that Senator PACKWOOD will say the same thing.

This may be the last tax bill that passes here, unless there is another one this year, which I doubt, that will have RUSSELL LONG's fingerprints all over it, and his fingerprints are all over this piece of legislation.

The legacy that Senator LONG will leave behind in the field of tax reform when he retires at the end of the year will benefit generations of Americans.

I just happen to believe that if you go back to the Tax Code and look at all the provisions that are there and find out who they came from, who they benefited, you will find that a great number were initiated by this distinguished Senator from Louisiana, the former chairman, Senator LONG.

The beneficiaries by and large are not the rich, not those with power, not those with influence, but they are Americans who experienced the benefit of the earned income tax credit, for example, and many, many other provisions.

In other words, low-income Americans, middle-income Americans, Americans who were trying to make it work. They may never know it, but they owe a great deal to this distinguished Senator, RUSSELL LONG.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON). Under the previous order, the Democratic leader is recognized.

SENATOR RUSSELL B. LONG

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I, too, want to express my fondness for RUSSELL LONG. I shall miss him. I shall miss his friendship and I shall miss his guidance on tax matters as well as many other matters that come before the Senate from time to time which involve the Senate Committee on Finance, a committee which Senator LONG chaired for so many years and more recently on which he has served as the ranking member.

□ 0910

Mr. LONG will be especially remembered with fondness in West Virginia because of his having fathered the ESOP legislation, the employee stock ownership plan. That legislation enabled the workers and management at Weirton Steel in Weirton, WV, to save the plant from being closed down in 1982. It has preserved the jobs of 8,500 employees, and that plant has resulted in 9 consecutive quarters of profits for the company and its employees.

We shall miss RUSSELL LONG. He is a brilliant Senator. He is liked by all Senators. I especially will miss him. I join with the majority leader in saying we will miss RUSSELL and Carolyn when they no longer are with us.

A TAX REFORM BILL THAT RESTORES CONFIDENCE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I join with the majority leader in expressing the hope that the overwhelming majority of the Senate will support the monumental tax bill that will pass the Senate today. It closes down tax shelters for the rich, it eliminates the corporate loophole goodies, and it strengthens the minimum tax so that profitable corporations and the very-high-income people will pay their share.

Beyond these monumental accomplishments in this bill for Americans in every income category, we have achieved something else which may not be so readily apparent as we celebrate real tax reform today. We have addressed the skepticism which has been on the increase in recent years about the ability of the Government to hear the people's voice, to address the people's concerns, and to enact the fundamental changes in the Tax Code that we will witness on the passage of this bill. Our action today, in full view of the country, on a matter that is so near and so dear to the heart and pocketbook and family of every American, will not only reverse the cynicism about the fairness of the tax system but should also go a long way toward helping to restore some of the lost confidence in, and support for, our system of government in general.

I shall cast my vote today in belief that this amazing response to the needs and the wishes of the people promotes the kind of confidence that is so essential to a representative democarcy in a challenging and changing world.

Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin the remainder of my time should he have need for it.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 9:30 a.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I thank my good friend, the minority leader, for so graciously yielding me part of his time. I deeply appreciate it.

WHAT IF GORBACHEV IGNORED STAR WARS AND NEGOTIATED AN OFFENSIVE NUCLEAR REDUCTION?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, yesterday, I spoke on the prospect that the Secretary General of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union may surprise us and agree to an arms control treaty.

What happens if the Soviet Union surprises everyone? Suppose it agrees to a mutual reduction of 50 percent in offensive nuclear arsenals without any precondition on compliance with the ABM Treaty. As of this time, Secretary Gorbachev has agreed to negotiate the reduction provided the U.S. Government will promise full compliance with the ABM Treaty for 15 years. Why the condition? Because Gorbachev is concerned that star wars might destroy the credibility of its nuclear deterrent. After all, the United States has made star wars or SDI its top military priority. Obviously, production and deployment of antimissile—that is star wars—hardware would constitute a direct frontal repudiation of the antimissile treaty.

Consider what was the purpose of the ABM Treaty? Its purpose was to stop a race between the two superpowers to develop an antimissile system. Why was it so important to end a purely defensive missile system? Because such a system could—if it worked—destroy the deterrent effect of the adversary's nuclear arsenal.

When President Johnson and President Nixon directed the negotiation on the ABM Treaty, they were concerned that the Soviets would deploy their own star wars or antimissile capability that might destroy this country's nuclear offensive capability and would therefore mandate and all-out effort by the United States to build the offensive nuclear penetration capability that would overcome the Soviet's defense.

If our President thought the Soviet system would work, he would have had no choice. It would have been either build or give up. Arms control would be dead. And what would follow? The arms race—offensive and defensive—would be a certain fact of life. The cost for both countries would be enormous. Nuclear instability would greatly increase. The risk of a cataclysmic nuclear war would be much greater. So the antiballistic missile treaty was drafted for the express purpose of stopping the Russian star wars. This body, the United States Senate, was so convinced of the threat of the Soviet star wars that it ratified the ABM Treaty by an overwhelming bipartisan majority of 89 to 2 in 1972.

Now, Mr. President, we have one of the most ironic reversals in political history. Here is a treaty the United States vigorously pressed on a very reluctant Soviet Union. It was an American arms control treaty in the best sense. It would stop an arms race in space. It would preserve the credibility of the United States and the Soviet nuclear deterrent that had kept the peace. And it would make it practical and possible for the superpowers to negotiate a reduction in their offensive nuclear arms in the confident knowledge that they could do so and still retain a sufficient deterrent to prevent any preemptive nuclear attack by the other side.

What would have been the United States strategy if the Soviet Union had refused to agree to the ABM Treaty? Defense Secretary McNamara and his successors made this crystal clear: This country would have gone all-out, sled-length in a buildup of our offensive nuclear force.

Now, Mr. President, the irony is that the shoe is on the other foot. It is the United States that is disregarding all its own arguments. It is the United States that is making its top military priority an antimissile program that would destroy the treaty negotiated so painstakingly by Republican as well as Democratic administrations and ratified overwhelmingly by Republican as well as Democratic Senators. What has changed in the past 14 years to make the smashing bipartisan majority that ratified the ABM Treaty wrong? Is it not still just as likely that the building and deployment of the antimissile star wars system by the United States today will provoke a Soviet offensive nuclear buildup as it was sure and obvious to all in 1972 that a Soviet antimissile star wars might provoke a United States offensive buildup? It certainly seems that way.

But just a minute, Mr. President. Nothing is sure in international negotiations. Secretary Gorbachev just might surprise all of us. He might suddenly ignore our star wars project. He might agree to a substantial cut in offensive nuclear arms in both sides. Frankly, if this Senator were in Gorbachev's shoes, I would do precisely that.

It would be a wise move from the Soviet standpoint. It would permit the Soviet Union to concentrate its far more limited resources on building up the basic foundation of its long-term military strength—its economy. It could focus its more limited technological resources on a more conventional military strengthening.

The Soviets could do this with confidence that the star wars defense would almost certainly not work. That is the overwhelming consensus of America's top scientists and physicists. And most important, even if through a series of technological miracles it could work, no President and no Congress could ever have genuine confidence that it would.

Why is that? Because the only way star wars could be effectively tested would be through an actual nuclear strike. And then this most complex technological system in human history would have to work perfectly that very first time. Why perfectly? Because our most prestigious scientific organization, the National Academy of Sciences, has told us that if only 1 percent of the Soviet arsenal strikes American cities, between 35 million and 55 million Americans would die instantly. This country would cease to exist as an organized society.

Mr. President, would any President ever have confidence that any weapon system, and especially one as infinitely complex and widely challenged by competent experts as star wars, would work with better than 99 percent efficiency the one and only time it was ever challenged or tested? The answer, Mr. President, is, of course, not.

But would not star wars add to our deterrence? Would it not increase the uncertainty of the Soviets that they could destroy our retaliatory force? The answer to that one, Mr. President, is simple and emphatic: Star wars adds nothing to our deterrent. Here's why: One-half of our enormous nuclear deterrent is deployed in submarines at sea or able to be at sea in minutes. Another 25 percent is deployed in bombers—in the air or able to take off in a very few minutes. We do not need star wars to protect our deterrent. The U.S. nuclear deterrent is largely invulnerable right now. It will continue to be without star wars and the Soviets know it.

So Secretary Gorbachev just may suddenly change his tune. He may agree with star wars or no star wars; he will negotiate a mutual reduction of the offensive nuclear arsenal of both sides with confidence that in star wars, the United States is wasting much of its economic, technological, and military resources on a gigantic turkey.

MYTH OF THE DAY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, my myth of the day is that real wages in the United States have been increasing in the past 2 years and are now higher than they were in 1979.

The facts are that from 1983 until now, real average hourly earnings for nonsupervisory workers fell by 1.7 percent. Real wages and salaries per household as well as average adult income are below their peak levels achieved in 1979.

What accounts for this shocking result?

First of all, in the early 1980's, the twin blows of double-digit inflation and deep recession combined to devastate labor markets and real wages growth. In 1980, our economy registered a pitiful decline in real average hourly earnings of 4 percent. While some recovery was made in 1982 and 1983, the trend has been negative ever since.

The recent downward trend is a consequence of our losing many high-paying jobs in the goods-producing sector to foreign competition and replacing them with relatively low-paying jobs in the service sector.

Finally, real wages have suffered from the lack of growth in productivity. Output per hour in the first quarter of 1986 was no higher than it was in 1984. As anyone who has studied basic economics can tell you, in the long run, real wages can only rise in tandem with higher productivity.

Mr. President, the consequences of the continued slump in real wages are ominous for our economy and society. If we are to provide a healthy economy, more and better jobs, and a higher standard of living to this and future generations of Americans, we must see a return to the enviable record of 2 to 3 percent annual growth in real wages which marked the accomplishments of our economy during the quarter century between 1950 and 1975.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR EXON

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD). Under the previous order, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

TAX REFORM

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the Senate today will approve the most sweeping overhaul of the Tax Code in decades. I commend the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator PACKWOOD, and the ranking Democratic member, Senator LONG, for their efforts over the last 6 months to keep the tax reform movement alive. They have done that. I also commend Senator BILL BRADLEY, the Senator who, more than any other, originated this historic tax reform bill which we will pass today.

On balance, this bill is a vast improvement over the current Tax Code and the tax bill passed by the House of Representatives. It lowers the basic tax rates for both individuals and corporations. It closes a number of tax shelters, so that business decisions for a change will be made for economic reasons, rather than tax reasons. It also strengthens the minimum corporate tax, so that profitable corporations will start paying their fair share of the tax burden.

Particularly pleasing is the positive impact that this tax bill will have on agriculture. It will permit farmers and other self-employed workers to deduct up to one-half of their health insurance costs. It attacks the tax shelters which have encouraged nonfarmers to farm the Tax Code. For example, the depreciation period for single purpose agricultural structures would be doubled to 10 years. The bill greatly restricts the tax losses that can be written-off by those not earning their living primarily from agriculture.

One major disappointment with the Senate tax reform bill is the essential elimination of most individual retirement accounts. I think that is a mistake. Congress made the right decision in 1981 when we made IRA's available to all working Americans. The Senate bill would turn the clock back and penalize the 20 million Americans who took Congress at its word in 1981 and opened IRA's. With the strains on the Social Security System, the Congress should be looking for ways to encourage retirement savings and capital formation, rather than discouraging it. I am convinced that the conferees on this bill will protect at least a partial IRA benefit for all taxpayers, which has always been my goal. If this happens, it will not be because of Senate leadership. This body has, by its shortsighted vote against a reasonable compromise by a three-vote margin, turned IRA continuance over to the House of Representatives.

I am pleased that the Senate has approved our amendment to restore income averaging for those engaged in agriculture. Due to the uncertainties of weather, market prices and other factors beyond their control, the income of farmers and ranchers can vary greatly from year to year. As a result, income averaging is important to many in the agricultural sector and I am pleased that the Senate has restored that provision.

Finally, for the farmer or rancher fortunate enough to work out an arrangement with his lender to reduce his debt, the Senate incorporated our suggestion of protection from taxation on the amount of debt forgiven.

In closing, Mr. President, as a member of the Senate Budget Committee, I am concerned about the drastic yearly revenue swings that result from this bill. While the bill is revenue neutral over 5 years, the great swings each year could pose significant problems for the budget process and the economy. I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Budget Committee and others to address this problem.

This is not a perfect bill. Seldom does one pass here. Changes are necessary, and I am supporting this measure on hopes that the Senate-House conference can work out any shortcomings and necessary changes and report back a bill that will have universal support.

Mr. President, this bill will begin the process which will simplify the Tax Code and make it fairer and more efficient.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR MELCHER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

COMMENTS ON THE TAX BILL

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, in a few minutes, at 10 o'clock, we will be voting on an amendment that I and Senator HEFLIN, Senator ZORINSKY, and Senator NUNN have sponsored to do a little justice, to render partially to farmers and ranchers and agriculture throughout the country, and to woodlot owners, that is, small, private owners of woodlots, a little justice in this tax bill by giving them a part of the capital gains provisions that we have in the present law. Instead of repealing all capital gains provisions for them, we would retain a portion of it for those who make $100,000 or less in net income. It would cost $600 million, and we would get it by closing the big loophole of carryback provisions for corporations which, under present law and under this bill, can get a check out of the U.S. Treasury if they had a year's loss but have had a previous good year.

□ 0930

If that is adopted, it will help this bill, but this bill needs a lot of help. It is a well-intentioned bill. It eliminates taxes for people who are very poor. Six million of the poorest Americans will not have to file an income tax return if this bill becomes law as it is written now, and that is good. It closes the biggest loophole on corporations that are profitable, by some provisions for a minimum tax on those corporations that have been escaping paying any Federal income tax or very small amounts of Federal income tax.

So much for those points. The bill, while well-intentioned, fails on many points.

First of all, all taxpayers get an increase in 1987, next year, and then the middle-income taxpayers, close to half of them—somewhere between 35 and 40 percent—will get a tax increase forever, until it is changed—in 1987, 1988, 1989, and on.

Then there is double taxation for retirees who have contributed to their retirement funds—State, local, municipal, county, and Federal workers. Why? It does not make any sense. They will be shocked to find out, when they retire, that they can be double taxed on contributions already taxed when they set up their retirement funds.

Then, of course, if we pass this bill, we discourage savings by canceling IRA's.

I do not believe these points are wise at all. But the most telling point against this bill, in my judgment, is how it affects us in Montana and States like Montana, where we depend on the basic industries of agriculture and forest products. And mining, too—do not forget them. We depend on those industries in my State of Montana, and they are the backbone of this country. The economy is built on those basic industries, and their taxes are going to be increased.

In effect, although they are not making much money now, if they start to make money and have some recovery, then agriculture, mining, and forest products will be clobbered with increased taxes. I do not think that is wise. I do not think it is fair. I do not think it is equity. If we are thinking about how we can get this economy built on a strong basis, we will reject those provisions in this bill and not resign ourselves to letting it escape from the Senate until it is corrected.

Mr. President, on balance, I will vote against the bill, for all these reasons and others which I will outline later today. But, on balance, this is a bad bill for rural America, because it clobbers basic industries of agriculture, forest products, and mining.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the unfinished business.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3838) to reform the internal revenue laws of the United States.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Pending:

(1) Melcher-Zorinsky Amendment No. 2156, to allow a 30-percent capital gains exclusion for the sale of property by an individual actively engaged in the trade or business of farming or woodlot operations, and to limit net operating loss carrybacks.

(2) Mattingly Amendment No. 2133, to express the sense of the Congress that tax reform legislation remain unchanged for a period of at least 5 years from date of enactment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 0940

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2156

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, in a few moments we will start the procedure of voting this morning on the amendment that I offered on behalf of myself, Senator HEFLIN, Senator ZORINSKY, and Senator NUNN.

We seek to save for those engaged in agriculture whose incomes are $100,000 or less the current law on capital gains.

□ 0950

Now, in my book, capital gains is a good part of our Tax Code, but this bill repeals it. In my judgment, capital gains has been part of our tax policy for several decades because it is wise tax policy, but this bill repeals it.

If it is going to repeal it, it should not be repealed for those in agriculture, at least up to the amounts of income that I have mentioned and that is in the amendment; and if it is going to be repealed, it should not be repealed for woodlot owners. Now, woodlot owners are private individuals. They are active. They are not passive. Farmers are active; they are not passive. We do not have any big loopholes here. We have a situation where the capital gains retention is wise. And that is what our amendment seeks to do.

Over 70 percent of the forests in the United States is owned privately and a majority of that, a big majority of that 70 percent that is privately owned, is owned by small woodlot operators. And capital gains is very significant. Indeed, the Society of American Foresters wrote to all of us, every one of us, and said that this was the most critical point of woodlot owners—retention of capital gains for them. For farmers who are losing money—and, believe me, almost all of them are losing money now—retention of capital gains is only fair and equitable. And so we seek to do that.

Now, it is offset by closing a loophole or a glitch or an unintended big gaping hole in this bill for carryback provisions of corporations. Under current law, present law, the corporations can offset, and that means getting a checkout of the U.S. Treasury, if they have a losing year, offset the losing year against going back 3 years if they were profitable and get the money back out of the Treasury, a Treasury check. And the loophole is that the corporate rate up until now was 46 percent, including this year, and when the bill is fully effective would only be 33 percent. So instead of giving them 46 percent back in the check from the U.S. Treasury, it would be limited to 33 percent. And that I believe is what the Senate intends on that particular provision.

What is needed in offset for the capital gains provision for agriculture and woodlot operators? Six hundred million dollars. And like everybody else on this floor, when we look to see what were the accurate figures, we go to the Joint Tax Committee and ask them what are the costs of this type of an amendment. They wrote back to us and said $600 million. And, in a few minutes, we are going to be told by the chairman of the Finance Committee that the Joint Taxation Committee was wrong, was $10 million off, was 1½ percent wrong. And who is the source of this information? The Budget Committee.

So the people that figure the revenue on the Joint Taxation Committee are going to find out that they are not as accurate as the Budget Committee. And based on that, the chairman of the Finance Committee is going to make a point of order against the amendment of myself and Senator HEFLIN and Senator ZORINSKY, and Senator NUNN. On that technicality of the Budget Committee supposedly being accurate and the Joint Taxation Committee being inaccurate, he is going to do what has not been done on this Senate floor during all of the debate on this bill. He is going to make a point of order and say it is off by $10 million, off 1½ percent.

When he does that, of course, the amendment is supposed to fall. And then I will move that we waive section 303 and we will vote on that, supposedly. Only the chairman of the Finance Committee has been kind enough to inform me that he will move to table that, too. But at least we will have a vote. At least we will have a vote and let everyone know that the Joint Taxation Committee may be wrong and the Budget Committee may be right. And they may be more accurate, but, so what? The question, really, is what are the merits of the amendment.

So I ask you, I ask you to stand with the amendment if you believe it is meritorious. I do not know who could doubt that it is a meritorious amendment and that it would improve this bill if it were adopted. I ask all of you, in fairness, to consider the merits. Do not go on this very strange expedition of saying, "Well, it is a technicality, but so what? The Joint Taxation Committee's figures are not the revenue figures. The Budget Committee's figures are the revenue figures."

No matter how you slice it, the fact of the matter is that capital gains for agriculture and woodlot operators, to the extent we would allow it under this amendment, is absolutely sound. It is good tax policy. It is just, right, and equitable. I hope you can vote with us.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT TO RESTORE A 30-PERCENT CAPITAL GAINS EXCLUSION FOR FARMERS

Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment to restore a 30-percent capital gains exclusion for farmers, ranchers, and woodlot owners. This is a much-needed change in the tax bill for the agricultural community, and I am proud to associate myself with it.

The amendment will permit a 30-percent exclusion for the capital gains of noncorporate, active farmers and woodlot owners who have net incomes of no more than $100,000 a year. The amendment does not restore the full 60-percent exclusion as under current law. However, I believe that the lower overall rates contained in the Senate bill will ameliorate that difference.

Mr. President, farmers from all across the United States have called me on this issue. Under the bill as it now stands, many will suffer dramatic increases in their taxes without the capital gains exclusion. This is unnecessary and unwarranted. There are too many loopholes remaining in the bill for us to deny the farmers the capital gains exclusion that they so desperately need. Our offset is just one example of these remaining loopholes.

The amendment is targeted so that the benefits accrue to those who can least afford to do without the exclusion. Such targeting should be the hallmark of Federal agricultural policies.

I urge the Senate to join me in restoring this element of fairness to the bill.

FAIRNESS FOR TIMBER PRODUCERS

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I strongly support retaining a capital gains differential for all timber producers. this tax reform retains a capital gains differential for incorporated timber producers and it is unfair not to do so for noncorporate timber producers as well. All timber producers deserve the same tax treatment on capital gains.

Capital gains is justified for timber producers because they take real long-term risks, unlike the investor who simply buys stock in IBM and holds that stock for 6 months. Timber producers must maintain their investments for several decades before they see a return. This is precisely the type of risktaking that the capital gains exclusion should reward.

Timber producers, both corporate and noncorporate, will receive the benefits of lower tax rates, but they lose the benefits of the investment tax credit. For some timber producers, the reductions in tax rates will not offset the value of the ITC if there is no capital gains exclusion.

The U.S. timber industry is suffering already from unfair, subsidized foreign competitors. I am hopeful that the administration will reverse its position on Canadian Government timber subsidies and that this issue can be resolved long before the current negotiations on a United States-Canadian free trade zone are concluded. But we can at least ensure that this tax reform bill does not aggravate the plight of the U.S. timber industry.

I am distressed that the Senate will not have an opportunity to vote directly on the capital gains issue. The parliamentary rules of the Senate have been manipulated to prevent a direct vote on timber capital gains. This doubles the unfairness for those of us who support the efforts of timber producers to be competitive and prosperous.●

TAX BILL AND AGRICULTURE FAIRNESS TO FARMERS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, this Tax Reform Act helps restore some fairness to the tax system for our farmers and their families. Too often farmers have been the victims of tax policies and treated as second class citizens. The Tax Reform Act, as it was passed out of the Finance Committee, goes a long way toward dealing with these inequities.

One of the most significant provisions of this bill, and one which I sponsored, allows self-employed farmers and small business persons to deduct 50 percent of their health insurance premiums as a business expense. In the past farmers were not allowed to do this.

As a result they were at a disadvantage in relation to people whose premiums where paid by their place of employment. There is no legitimate reason why farmers and small businessmen should be treated any differently than their cousins and neighbors who are working for someone else. After all they both have the same goal of trying to protect themselves and their family from the high costs of health care.

Mr. President, we are currently experiencing a "brain drain" in agriculture. Many of our young progressive farmers are not able to start farming because credit is tight or they cannot afford the high interest rates being charged today. Many others have started farming only to be caught by the worst agricultural depression in 40 years and we are struggling to survive. I believe this trend is dangerous. We need aggressive young people in agriculture pursuing higher levels of efficiency and for competing on a world market. In order to help young people get started in farming we have extended the availability of Aggie bonds from 1986 to 1988. In addition, we have expanded the use of proceeds for the purchasing of used equipment. I believe these steps are important. Without taking steps to get and keep these young people in farming we could wake up in a few years and find that we have lost the fight for world markets simply because we don't have the troops to man our farms.

Earlier this year Congress passed a change in the tax laws that freed farmers from tax liabilities resulting from a forced sale. This was extremely important in not permanently tying farmers down with overwhelming tax debts because their lender forced them to sell. Although this bill was important it was one step too late. Our objective should be to encourage lenders to work with farmers before a forced sale.

In order to reach this goal I am happy to report that this tax bill eliminates tax consequences of a "write-down" of a farmer's principal. Under existing laws, even if a farmer and lender can agree to write-down a debt, Uncle Sam comes by and discourages that action by taxing the forgiven debt. Fortunately, this tax bill helps solve this problem and encourages negotiation rather than foreclosure or bankruptcy.

Mr. President, I believe this bill is going a long way toward helping our farmers and restoring fairness to our tax system. We must be very careful to not weaken this bill through too many amendments that change the direction this bill is taking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. ARMSTRONG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, if I could have the attention of the chairman of the Finance Committee. At 10 o'clock, we are scheduled to have a vote and begin a series of actions. I am wondering if the chairman and others would be disposed to grant unanimous consent to let me offer my little subchapter M amendment, which I believe we can dispose of prior to 10 o'clock.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes, I am perfectly receptive. I know it is acceptable. We have got about 120 seconds.

AMENDMENT NO. 2161

Purpose: To modernize certain provisions of subchapter M of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I am not one of those that thinks important matters have to take a long time, and so I do ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to offer this amendment at this time and I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] proposes an amendment numbered 2161.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(b) The amendments made by section 1454 shall apply to summonses served after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, this amendment makes four modest but, nonetheless, worthy changes in the law relating to subchapter M of the Internal Revenue Code that regulates mutual funds.

The desire of the industry, which is supported, I think, without controversy or objection and enjoys the support of the Treasury Department, is to permit the mutual fund industry to make better use of income from stock options, futures contracts and options on stock industries, options and futures of foreign currencies, and foreign currency transactions.

□ 1000

At the present time, these mutual funds are required to have at least 90 percent of their income from dividend and interest. So this amendment would include in the 90-percent requirement the items I have just mentioned: stock options, futures contracts, options on stock indices, and foreign currency transactions.

Second, this provides that where there are a series of funds which are subject to the 90-percent rule, and also the existing so-called short test, that each of the funds in the series has to qualify individually.

Finally, current law requires mutal funds to mail certain dividend income and capital gains information to shareholders within 45 days after the close of the funds' taxable year.

This amendment extends that period to 60 days.

Mr. President, with that word of explanation I believe the amendment is acceptable on both sides. I ask for its adoption.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed for 1 more minute on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment (No. 2161) was agreed to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2156

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 10 o'clock having arrived, under the previous order, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I make a point of order that the pending amendment affects revenues for fiscal year 1987, the budget resolution for fiscal 1987 is not yet in place, and that the amendment therefore violates section 303 of the Budget Act.

Mr. MELCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I move to waive section 303, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

Mr. MELCHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMPSON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I understand there is a little time problem right now, and I would like to take just a few minutes prior to this vote to express my views of this tax bill that is before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will take unanimous consent for any debate at this point.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that the vote which was to occur at 10 o'clock occur at 10:20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DECONCINI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. President, we are about to vote on probably one of the most far-reaching tax proposals in the 10 years that I have been in the U.S. Senate. Like many of my colleagues, I have some serious doubts about this bill and particular concerns about what might happen to this bill in conference.

As I have said several times on the floor, my compliments go out to the distinguished chairman, Mr. PACKWOOD, of the Finance Committee, and the ranking member, Mr. LONG, and every one of the members on that committee for putting together such comprehensive tax reform legislation.

Whether or not this bill is real reform is going to depend a lot on what happens in the conference. For 10 years I have advocated a simple tax system. That system is not my innovation but belongs to Professors Hall and Rabushka, of the Hoover Institute at Stanford University. They have worked for years compiling a flat, simple tax system that eliminates all deductions and would have one basic rate. Recently they adjusted it, so that it has two rates, 24 and 17 percent with virtual elimination of almost every deduction, with a very generous $12,600 exemption for each family of four, and for a single taxpayer of roughly $9,000.

So I applaud the dramatic effort made in this bill to get two rates. It is a quite significant improvement we are making. I hope that the conference committee will keep these rates, and it is very, very important that we do not let these rates slip up. If anything, they should come down.

I offered an amendment that would reduce the 27-percent rate to 26 percent, and that would raise the break points for the top rate by 20 percent. Under the Finance Committee rule, $17,600 would be in the 15-percent bracket. Under the DeConcini amendment it would have been $21,120. A joint filer under the Finance Committee bill would file at 15 percent if they made $29,300 or less, under the amendment that I offered that figure would have been $35,160. For heads of households, it would have been $23,500 under the Finance bill for 15 percent, and under my amendment it would have been $28,200. For married filing separately, it would have been $14,650, under the Finance bill, and under the DeConcini amendment it would have been $17,580.

To me the important part of this bill, or any major tax reform is to give relief to the middle and lower income. This bill attempts to do that. It does not go quite far enough in my judgment but it attempts to do that.

Second, any real reform has to lower rates substantially. This bill does that. A top rate of 27 percent is a substantial improvement over what we have had. And in fact, it will be an incentive for investment.

So I applaud these elements of the bill. Everyone can put their little twist on it and maybe make it a little bit better or perhaps a little worse.

I believe this effort is good basic tax reform. The third part of this bill is so important—that is, a tough minimum tax of 20 percent on individuals and corporations—with literally no loophole except if your income happens to be totally from tax-exempt bonds. Otherwise everyone is going to pay tax. We have heard the gory stories about General Dynamics and other industries here that pay no tax. We have heard the stories about thousands of Americans who legitimately make over $1 million a year and pay no tax. That time is coming to an end. This bill will do that.

Despite some of these positive points, this bill is by no means perfect. On the individual side, the denial of the deductibility of State and local sales tax is certainly not fair when you consider that this bill permits the deduction of income tax and property taxes paid in the State.

I worked to amend this, and there was a slight improvement in the bill but it does not go near as far as equity demands.

It goes against the American tradition of fair play to unduly penalize individuals with retroactive implementation of new tax provisions. This is a horrendous problem with this bill. Unless it is corrected in conference, I will not be able to support the conference report. These new rates are not going to take effect until mid-1987, but you are going to do away with the deductions at the begining of 1987.

□ 1010

This is not fair. To me, it is going to cause a horrendous problem and will cause this Senator to look at this bill closely when it comes from the conference.

I also am concerned about the potential giveaways in the bill. We have had a number of debates here with the Senator from Ohio, Senator METZENBAUM, who has gone out of his way to explain some of the special privileges that are in this bill. Some effort was made to eradicate those and extract them from the bill with only minor success.

I am again concerned what will happen in the conference. I understand the conference and the processes, of course, and the give and take that has to go on. But Members of the House will have their special interests and areas of legitimate concern to them. We all try to take care of our special interests. But today, as we vote on this bill and in the next few weeks during conference, the time is right to take care of the interests of the American taxpayer. That means low rates and a minimum amount of special interests and deductions in the bill.

The transition rules in this bill really trouble me a great deal. There are 174 so-called transition rules. Many of them are really old-fashioned boondoggles. I cannot say that I would not like to have some more in there for the State of Arizona. But that is not the way to make good tax laws. I would gladly give them all up if everybody would join me.

Some of them are outrageous. I cannot help but remind this body about the one that provides for a half billion dollar tax writeoff for the steel industry. It does not belong there and it is not fair.

Certainly, it is not fair when copper in the State of Arizona has suffered as much as steel over the last 4 or 5 years, and yet there is little or no provision in the bill to assist that industry.

Also, I think it is important to say that this bill indeed takes on the real estate development business. Congress for a long time encouraged people to invest in real estate, particularly housing. It gave them special incentives, special writeoffs, special carryover for losses. This bill eliminates almost all of that.

And so be it, if that is what we have to do. Yet the bill preserves the same type of tax breaks for the oil and gas industry that were denied other industries. Is that fair? I think it is clear that it is not fair.

Will it be corrected in the House conference committee? I do not know. But I hope that someone is listening who is on that conference committee. Maybe one vote is not going to make any difference in final passage when it comes back from conference, but this Senator is going to look carefully at the equalizing areas of fairness and equity.

In recent days, the newspapers have been full of articles detailing the efforts of special interests lobbying and undermining this bill, even before the Senate has completed it. We have an opportunity today, and this Senator will vote for this bill, with the objections and qualifications I have stated.

Mr. President, this is important legislation. There are those who will decide to vote against it. That is certainly their privilege and I have great respect for them.

I do agree with the Senator from Montana, Senator MELCHER, there are many additional things we should be spending our time on, such as balancing the budget or some of our defense concerns. But that is not what we are doing today or the last couple of weeks. We are on tax reform. Indeed, this Senate bill is a tax reform bill. As I said to begin with, it can be improved. The burden will fall heavily on those in the conference committee to insist on low rates, a tough minimum tax on individuals and corporations, and to insist on no additional boondoggles and special interests. I hope they will have the courage to take some of these give-aways out.

With that, Mr. President, I again thank the committee chairman, ranking member, and the committee staff. I wish to thank Laurie Sedlmayr of my staff for the great assistance she has given me in preparation so that I can reach a judgment on this bill that I think is best for the people of Arizona and the people of this country.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I wonder if I might inquire of the minority leader, will we be able to vote at 10:20.

Mr. BYRD. I will have to ask some of my staff to determine that information, if the distinguished Senator will forebear.

Mr. PACKWOOD. The time has been set for 4 days and I hate to see it drag on.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has been very patient and forebearing. There is a tieup on the Rock Creek Parkway, as I understand it. We are doing our best to learn of the situation there. Senators who are in that tieup have no telephones in their cars and we cannot establish information on that problem.

May I say to the distinguished Senator, I will try to get back to him very quickly.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I would appreciate that.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1020

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, is the pending business the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER], on which I have raised a point of order and he has appealed the ruling of the Chair? Is that where we are? I cannot remember.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a pending motion to waive the point of order.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I have checked with the minority leader and he said at 10:20, it would be all right for the vote to proceed. I warn people that—well, we are at 10:20 now.

I move to lay that motion on the table. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, what is the distinguished Senator moving to lay on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to waive is what the Senator is moving to lay on the table.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the chairman. I thank the Senator. I also thank the Senator from Oregon for his patience in delaying the motion.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MELCHER. Is what we are voting on the discrepancy between the Joint Taxation Committee saying that the amendment is revenue-neutral but the Budget Committee saying it is $10 million off? So we are merely voting on which committee's figures to accept?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to waive. The yeas and nays have been asked for.

Mr. MELCHER. A further parliamentary inquiry: What I said is the situation, that we are going to vote on the $10 million.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not interpret that in that fashion.

Mr. MELCHER. What is the point of order on, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Simply the motion to table the motion to waive.

Mr. MELCHER. A parliamentary inquiry: What is the original point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the amendment violated section 303 of the Budget Act. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to waive. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. McCLURE], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PRESSLER], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER] are necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 39—as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 146 Leg.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well-taken, and the amendment falls.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to table was agreed to.

Mr. D'AMATO. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2133

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the Mattingly amendment.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, the pending business is amendment No. 2133. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the names of Senators WILSON, QUAYLE, NICKLES, ZORINSKY, LAXALT, PELL, BOSCHWITZ, STEVENS, and GRAMM be added as cosponsors of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, we have had a long and intensive debate on the tax reform bill. There have been a few minor changes, but basically the legislation is unchanged from what passed out of the Finance Committee.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate? We cannot hear the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, the amendment that is pending is a sense of the Congress resolution stating that there be no changes in the Tax Code for the next 5 years, once it is signed into law.

As I said, there have been very few changes in this tax reform bill, and basically the legislation is unchanged from what was passed by the Senate Finance Committee. This is a tribute to the leadership of both the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator PACKWOOD, and the ranking Democratic member, Senator LONG.

Over the past few weeks, I believe the Senator from Oregon has performed a miracle—a major political miracle.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. May we have order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, referring to the tax bill that has been voted out of the Senate Finance Committee by a 20-to-0 vote, I think that vote demonstrates the bipartisan aspect of tax reform.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATTINGLY. I yield.

Mr. DOLE. I wonder whether it might be possible to get a 30-minute time agreement on this amendment, equally divided.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I object to that at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DOLE. How much time does the Senator need?

Mr. MATTINGLY. I am not certain how many other Members wish to speak on the amendment. I hope to complete it as soon as possible.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MATTINGLY. I yield.

Mr. BUMPERS. Is it anticipated that the amendment will require a rollcall vote?

Mr. MATTINGLY. Yes.

Mr. President, I think the 20-to-0 vote demonstrated a bipartisan aspect of the tax reform movement. There were heroes aplenty on both sides of this tax reform movement.

It was not very long ago when the only person in this country who seemed very interested in tax reform was the President of the United States. I think many members of the press and Congress laughed at the President's attempt to stir up public interest on tax reform. I think he now deserves great credit for continuing to press for tax reform.

There are Members of the Senate and people in the private sector who have spent years working on tax reform. I might add that of the many speeches on tax reform during this debate, none was more eloquent and persuasive than the speech given by Senator BRADLEY on June 4.

This will be one of the most significant pieces of legislation we will ever vote on during our years in the Senate, and to say that it is historic is an understatement. We have had Federal Tax Code changes all along, almost as long as anbody can remember, it has kept the printers, the CPA's, the accountants, and the tax lawyers happy and prosperous. Finally, at long last, we have a tax bill that is doing more than just shuffling the loopholes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Chair asks the staff who are active to please retire from the Chamber.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I do not see order in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, there are those who criticize the top rate of 27 percent. Some would like to have it at 38 percent, or 35 percent. Personally, I would like to have a flat rate tax of 10 percent, but that is not going happen.

Some people just yearn for the old days when the top rate was 90 percent.

The truth is that most of the rich people in this country, as well as the rich corporations, will pay more in actual dollars under this bill than they ever paid when the rate was 50 percent or 70 percent. Rates do not matter when you have thousands of pages of loopholes. It is better for us to have a 27-percent rate and collect it than to have a 50-percent rate and collect only 10 percent of the dollars.

So there is for the first time a minimum tax so everyone will be paying a fair share of the tax burden. No longer will we read about multibillion-dollar corporations avoiding any tax payment. Six million of the working poor will be taken off the tax rolls and this is only right. In some cases, the tax burden they currently face is enough to force them to use food stamps in order to make ends meet. Let those people keep their entire paychecks. The rates are simplified. This bill has just two rates, 15 and 27 percent, and one for the corporations of 33 percent. The low rate is the driving force behind this tax reform and the right stuff, so to speak, that makes it a great bill.

Certainly there are going to be changes in this bill when it goes to conference. Many Senators want to see the bill restore the full IRA. I for one hope that it will be restored, but this is a very fragile compromise. If we tinker with the rates, tax reform will lose support. It will edge back to the very complexity that we are trying to end. Everyone in the country understands 15-27-33, cutting away the brackets and making the Tax Code simpler and fairer. Everyone understands having 80 percent of the taxpayers at the 15-percent rate. Everyone understands the unfair loopholes. Everyone understands having a minimum tax. It is not complicated.

People understand and support this legislation. But after we finish with tax reform, we need tax stability. After the conference committee finishes its work, Congress votes on the final legislation, and it goes down to the White House where they will have a great signing ceremony, the drum rolls, giving all the accolades to the heroes in Congress, then Congress needs to stay out of the tax reform or tax change business for at least 5 years.

Once we make these reforms we, the Congress, should step aside and let the private sector get to work and stop worrying about what the tax laws are going to be next year. If Congress just gets off their back and out of their way, the private sector will produce. It will create jobs. It will lead us into a new, stronger period of economic growth.

The amendment I am offering is a sense of the Congress resolution that calls for no major changes in the Tax Code for a minimum of 5 years after the tax reform bill is signed into law.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. May we have order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is not in order. The Senator from Minnesota is correct. The Senate will be in order.

The Senate is now in order.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, would the Senator add the Senator from Idaho as a cosponsor to his amendment? I compliment him for offering it.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I so ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, Americans cannot have long-term uninterrupted economic growth with constantly changing and unreliable tax laws. The tinkering and the meddling of Congress must stop. Constant changing of the rules in the tax laws creates unstability for decision making in industry, in business, and in individuals. A nonchanging Tax Code offers stability for the decisionmakers of America.

We need to frustrate the tax increasers. We need to frustrate the Tax Code changers and encourage stability.

We are creating in this bill the opportunity for greater savings, rewards, incentives, investments, fairness, equity, capital formation, entrepreneurship, job creation, and trade. But how long is it going to last? Is it going to last 6 months, 1 year, 2 years? We need to give this new law a chance, secure it from the spur-of-the-moment knee-jerk congressional changes.

We have all listened to the questions and the concerns registered here in Congress, back in our States and across the United States. But I would wager to say that the last question or statement made by any individual or group was, "All right, Senator, I can and I will live with the law and the new tax rates, but please, please don't change the rules later on."

Stability, permanency and, reliability, is now needed as a final touch to this tax reform bill.

Who can run America best? Not the Government. But instead the American people can provided they are left alone.

Senator PACKWOOD and Senator LONG have asked us throughout this debate to keep the bill intact. I agree. After 4 p.m. today, when we vote on final passage, after the conference committees meet and come up with the final bill, after it is ratified by both the House and Senate, and after the signing ceremony at the White House, then it is America's turn. Let us give it to America and then back off for at least 5 years.

If the bill is good, and it is, let us take it one step further. Let us guarantee certainty. Let us crown this bill with a resolution of fairness and stability, Mr. President.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATTINGLY. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator is trying to do and what his objective is, but let me tell you, any time you pass a piece of tax legislation of this magnitude you are going to find an incredible number of things that are going to have to be fixed, have to be modified and have to be changed.

I will vote with the Senator in the spirit of what he is trying to achieve. But with 2,000 pages of legislation, we are going to see quite a number of things that have to be corrected next year.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Let me respond to the Senator from Texas. I certainly appreciate his concern. I think we are all aware of how massive and sweeping this tax reform legislation is and how it reaches every aspect of the tax system.

I understand there are going to be some areas that need further work. I call it, as the Senator would, fine tuning, to assure that those areas conform to the bill's real goals of fairness and equity in the Tax Code.

I think that is a reality that can be expected, and this amendment does not obstruct those types of efforts.

However, the amendment does express the concern of the taxpayers in the Senator's State, in my State, and across the United States, that Congress changes the laws too often and taxpayers have said time and time again, "Please quit changing the rules of the game on us."

So the intent of the sense of the Congress is to get Congress on record to say that this is a good bill, so let us not tamper with it.

Mr. BENTSEN. I say to my good friend, I applaud the objective and I think it is great objective, and certainly the American people and the American businesses want some continuity and stability in the tax laws they have ahead. Here we are seeing a dramatic change in direction in this bill. I hope it achieves the goals we are seeking. But there is some risk in this kind of a change, where we have taken away some of the tax incentives that we would normally think are absolutely necessary for the competitiveness of our economy as we try to meet competition from abroad. We are going to have to measure that and see how it works. On balance, I decided to vote for the bill, and support it, but there are some unknowns.

I do hope that we do not have further major changes, but I do not rule them out, frankly. If we get ourselves in a recession and we find the balance of trade worsening, we may rethink the question of having some additional tax incentives for buying new machinery and equipment in this country.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I have been in the Senate 5½ years, so I recall what it was like in the private sector.

What I recall is very clearly pointed out in the letter from the National Federation of Independent Business, a letter that I will enter into the RECORD, which states there were 2,600 separate changes to the Tax Code between 1978 and 1984.

I was back there in the private sector. I remember all those changes. They were very difficult to live with. If you do not know the rules of the game it is hard to play the game.

In addition, respected economist Paul Craig Roberts has commented, in an article that appeared in the June 19, 1986 edition of Business Week, on the need for stability.

The National Federation of Independent Business has endorsed my amendment in a letter sent to all Senators.

Finally, Mr. President, in yesterday's Wall Street Journal, there was a story by Kenneth Bacon in which he noted the boost that would be given to the U.S. competitive position by adoption of such an amendment as I propose.

I ask unanimous consent that these materials be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS,
June 17, 1986.

Hon. MACK MATTINGLY,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MACK: The National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB), representing more than 500,000 small firms, commends the efforts of the Senate to shape true tax reform legislation. At the heart of these efforts has been the precept that simplicity is a virtue where the tax code is concerned. However, the Senate will soon have an opportunity to strike a stronger blow for simplicity when Senator Mattingly offers his amendment pledging the Senate to no new substantive changes in the tax code for five years. NFIB strongly supports this amendment and urges you to vote for it.

In the period between 1978 and 1984 over 2,600 separate changes were made to the tax laws, not counting all the additional IRS regulations that were necessary to interrupt and implement these changes. This virtually constant change of tax rules has placed a tremendous burden on all taxpayers, especially small firms.

Government estimates indicate that 68% of the small business paperwork burden is generated by IRS. In simple terms, the frequency and complexity of tax law changes has placed a huge burden on American economic productivity. Managing tax changes reduces the productive time of entrepreneurs, inhibits plans to hire new employees, and makes investment planning a nightmare.

Small firms across the nation want a respite from change after the tax reform bill has passed. This sentiment is clearly expressed by the 23 states that have passed resolutions in preparation for the upcoming White House Conference on Small Business calling for a 3 to 5 years moratorium on tax law changes.

NFIB urges you to crown the tax reform bill with a final act of fairness: put yourself on record as supporting a five year moratorium on substantive tax law changes once tax reform has become law. Senator Mattingly will be offering an amendment framing a sense of the Senate resolution that such a moratorium should be honored. On behalf of NFIB's membership, I urge your support on this Key Small Business vote.

Sincerely,

JOHN J. MOTLEY III,
Director of Federal Legislation.

A TAX BILL THAT'S UNASHAMEDLY CAPITALIST

(By Paul Craig Roberts)

When the tax cut passed in August, 1981, reporters called my office at the Treasury Dept. to inquire what would occupy us for the remaining three-and-a-half years of the President's term. I told them that the next item on the supply-side agenda was a fundamental reform of the tax system that would substitute a low, flat-rate tax for what was still, despite the tax cut, a high-rate, progressive system.

When my remarks were reported, they caused grumbling from White House aides. After only six months, they were already tired of the supply-side dominance of economic policy. The rivalry played into David A. Stockman's hands, and he skillfully used deficit hysteria to crowd out other economic policy issues. It wasn't until late 1984 that Treasury's tax reform plan was drafted.

MIXED BAGS

The tax bill that emerged was the kind of political compromise that tries to meld incompatible ideas into a single package. It was supply-side in calling for lower tax rates. But the bill also contained provisions traceable to an older generation of tax reformers whose main goal was to close loopholes for distributional reasons—regardless of their economic effects. These reformers wanted to make the rich pay with a vengeance, and they showed little concern for the adverse effects on economic opportunity caused by the multiple taxation of investment income. In their minds, the poor would be provided for by the government once the rich could be made to pay their fair share. The idea that the private economy could create opportunities for the poor, if the tax system didn't price labor and capital out of the market, wasn't part of their calculus.

The 1978 Carter tax reform plan was the last hurrah of the older generation of reformers. As a loophole-closing measure that left tax rates high, it was already an outdated approach, and Congress largely rejected it. Two years earlier, Treasury Secretary William E. Simon had proposed in Blueprints for Basic Tax Reform a choice of two fundamental reforms. One integrated the corporate and personal income taxes, thereby eliminating the double taxation of dividend income and reducing the tax bias against saving. It broadened the tax base by closing loopholes and dropped the top rate from 70% to 38%.

The second proposal was a cash-flow tax, or a consumption-based income tax, that excluded savings from the tax base and dropped the top rate to 40%. This reform would have eliminated the bias against saving that suppresses investment and productivity in the U.S.

Simon's proposals represented a fundamental change in thinking about taxation. Concern with incentives and economic performance clearly took precedence over income redistribution indicating that opportunity was beginning to shove aside envy as the focus of politics. Had either been enacted, U.S. industry today would be more competitive in world markets.

The tax-reform proposals that came out of the Reagan Administration were a far cry from the Simon Blueprints. Stockman's claim in The Atlantic magazine that the 1981 tax cut was a "Trojan horse"—a trick to cut taxes for the rich—made the Administration uneasy about any reform that further reduced tax rates on business and "the rich." The distributional issue was resurrected, and to deal with it, the Administration's proposal shifted the tax burden from individuals to business in a way that raised taxes on new investments and worsened the outlook for the economy.

House Democrats took their cue from the Administration and cut tax rates with one hand while raising the cost of capital with the other, which would further erode the competitiveness of U.S. industry. The Senate Finance Committee, sensitive to the trade issue, was in a quandry and floundered around until it found the courage to cut the tax rate to 27%. This was enough to compensate for the loss of investment incentives, putting tax reform back on track.

NO MORE HYPOCRISY

The Finance bill, though not as well crafted as the Simon proposals or that of Representative Jack F. Kemp (R-N.Y.) and Senator Robert W. Kasten, Jr. (R-Wis.), is a positive achievement and worthy of support. It signals that American politics is moving away from the crippling hypocrisy that has saddled capitalism with high tax rates and destructive disincentives for most of this century. During a period when the U.S. was determinedly anti-communist, our high tax rates made it clear that we didn't really believe in our own system, either. At long last we have gained the political maturity and confidence to stop feeling guilty about capitalism.

The 27% rate may yet elude us. A pitfall in the bill is an unevenness of the revenue flows that adds $22 billion the first year and loses $20 billion the second, for a negative swing of $42 billion. If Congress uses the initial revenue gain to reduce the deficit without reducing spending, it may close the gap the following year by taking back some of the rate reductions. This possibility has prompted Senator Mack Mattingly (R-Ga.) to sponsor a resolution that mandates no changes in the tax laws for five years after the bill's passage. The battle, it seems, will continue.

[From the Wall Street Journal, June 23, 1986]

THE OUTLOOK—U.S. COMPETITIVENESS AND TAX REVISION

(By Kenneth H. Bacon)

WASHINGTON.—Over the last few years Congress has searched for ways to make U.S. industry more competitive in world markets. In 1981 it accelerated business depreciation write-offs to encourage investment and modernization. Then the Democrats tried to craft an industrial policy to support growth companies while cushioning the decline of ailing industries. When that effort failed Congress began to worry about trade policy. Last month the House passed a trade bill that would attack barriers to U.S. exports and establish an "industrial competitiveness council" designed to strengthen U.S. business.

But the House and Senate tax bills turn away from the quest for new policies or incentives to help American business compete. Both measures, and particularly the Senate bill, reject the notion that the tax system should favor certain types of investment or industries. By lowering tax rates they attempt to reduce the role of taxes in business planning, leaving resource allocation more to market forces.

The bills reflect a decision "not to use the tax system as a tool of industrial policy," says John Makin of the American Enterprise Institute. "That's a major change."

Compared to the 1981 tax law, which combined rapid depreciation with the investment tax credit to encourage new investment in equipment, the current bills almost look like deindustrialization measures. Because the plans would scrap the investment tax credit, they have "negative consequences for basic industry and capital goods companies," according to an analysis by Merrill Lynch & Co., which adds that "tax law changes are likely to hasten the demise of marginal competitors in heavy industries" by raising the cost of investment in new equipment.

Even if the dollar continues to fall. U.S. manufacturers—particularly in heavy industries—face challenges from highly productive, low-wage foreign producers that the tax advantages can't cure. The capacity of American steel producers has fallen to about 105 million tons today from 140 million in the late 1970s and will continue to decline to some 60 million or 70 million tons by the late 1990s, says Robert Crandall of the Brookings Institution. Steel industry employment, which dropped to 304,900 last year from 570,500 in 1979, will likely tumble further, aggravating pain in the Rust Belt.

The best way to reduce the stress of economic restructuring and the impact of foreign competition is to maintain a growing economy at home. The House and the Senate bills assume that lower tax rates are the key to economic growth, innovation and flexibility. "Lower rates are going to free up capital and they are going to help route it to the areas where it will be more productive," contends Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a Texas Democrat.

The top personal tax rate would fall to 27% from the current 50% under the Senate plan and to 38% under the House plan. To help compensate for the proposed repeal of the investment tax credit, the top corporate rate would fall to 33% from 46% in the Senate version and to 36% in the House. Corporations strongly support the less onerous Senate bill over the House plan. "Business would become more efficient because tax considerations would play a smaller role in decisions," the Merrill Lynch analysis explains. Both plans increase the corporate tax burden to help pay for reductions in personal taxes and trim tax deductions to help finance lower rates.

The Senate bill is so radical that "I don't think anybody knows the effect it will have on near-term economic growth prospects," says Jerry Jasinowski, chief economist at the National Association of Manufacturers. "It's a major gamble . . . a major shift toward consumption" because of the lower rates, he says. "Over the long term it's got to be somewhat harmful to our international competitiveness because of the shift to consumption, which will decrease investment and suck in imports."

But Mr. Makin at AEI sees lasting advantages from the Senate bill: It would hold down interest rates and thus help control inflation, boost economic efficiency and encourage a reduction in debt, all of which will contribute to U.S. economic strength.

Lower tax rates increase the after-tax return from saving and boost the after-tax cost of borrowing. The Senate plan, which disallows individual deductions for most nonmortgage interest costs, would also reduce personal borrowing and restrain interest rates.

"With the advantage of lower rates and lower inflation rates, investment in unproductive capital will no longer be encouraged," an AEI report says. "Under current law, it was often profitable to invest in assets which returned to the economy less in value of output than their actual cost."

For corporations, "tax reform should encourage equity financing and may help to dampen the unsustainable tendency for debt to rise relative to national income." AEI states, adding that "equity financing helps spread risks, where debt financing often multiplies risk."

But if Congress really wants to help U.S. industry meet foreign competition, Mr. Makin says, it should pass the Senate bill and then stop tinkering with the tax laws, giving corporations the first chance in years to adjust and lay long-range plans. The U.S. would benefit from studying the Japanese tax system; "its major feature is its stability," Mr. Makin says.●

□ 1100

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, at this time, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAFEE). Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I would like to say that I totally agree with the objectives set forth in the proposal by the Senator from Georgia. I agree wholeheartedly with all the whereas clauses. Plainly, the uncertainty about the tax laws, the constant changes that are occurring, are a great inhibition on investment. They hold back the economy. They hold down the economy. They prevent entrepreneurial and profit opportunities and they prevent businesses from developing.

Therefore, I think I probably will vote for the proposal by the Senator from Georgia. My only concern reflects the same concerns of the Senator from Texas just now expressed. Plainly, we may find it necessary to make some changes. First, because there may be some unknown bugs in this bill that develop after it becomes law or after the conference that will require some changes. Some adjustments in fairness, some adjustments to deal with unforeseen problems may prove necessary. It may also prove necessary for some reason to increase revenues or to decrease revenues before 5 years are over, and we plainly need to have the opportunity to do that if it becomes necessary.

Furthermore, we are dealing with a bill that has been virtually unamendable in the Senate due to a rather unprecedented situation. Some changes, I believe, are in order in this bill—I hope that they will occur in the conference—such as keeping the capital gains differential, such as keeping IRA's available to all people who wish them, such as a greater tax break for people in the middle-income brackets and a lesser tax break for people in the highest-income brackets. Those changes may come and, therefore, those reasons for seeking change may not be necessary by the time the bill becomes law.

Since what the Senator has offered is obviously a sense-of-the-Senate or sense-of-the-Congress resolution, it is not binding. It, therefore, does not put us into a totally inflexible situation. I think with the general principle that there should not be fundamental and sweeping overhauls of the tax laws again for at least 5 years, but changes only made if absolutely necessary for very obvious reasons, that it is wise to try to give assurances to the investing world and to the economic world in our country and to all concerned about their taxes that we are generally expressing the view that we do not intend to make any significant changes unless we have to.

For this reason, I am very inclined to support the Senator's proposal. I do want to hear what other Senators have to say before the vote comes.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from California. I would say that the reason I asked for the yeas and nays was so the Senate can be on record. Let us not create for ourselves too big a barn door through which we can escape the real intent of the resolution for those who may want to raise taxes.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I say to my friend from California that a reading of the resolution points out that it is the sense of the Congress that provisions that are changed in this act shall remain unchanged for at least 5 years, not other parts of the Internal Revenue Code. So we are not tying our hands. And, as the Senator knows, if we get 50 votes or 51 votes, we can make changes hereafter.

This really expresses the sense of the Senate that the policy changes that are made by this bill should remain untouched for 5 years. And there is no question in my mind that this is a good amendment. My taxpayers, and I am sure yours are as well, and I know the Senator from Georgia's taxpayers, are really reeling.

I asked the Congressional Research Service to look at how many bills we have passed that have affected the Internal Revenue Code since 1976. I know that the Senator from Georgia has referred to the fact that the NFIB, (the National Federation of Independent Businesses) has said that we have impacted 2,600 sections of provisions of the Internal Revenue Code in that period of time.

Well, the Congressional Research Service points out that in 1976, there were 21 bills that affected the Internal Revenue Code; from 1977 to 1979, 34 bills were enacted affecting the Internal Revenue Code; from 1980–81, 33 bills; in 1982, 15 bills; and from 1983–84, 21 bills. So there has been constant change.

It is an effort on the part of the Senator from Georgia—and I join him in that effort, as I know other Senators do—to give taxpayers the ability to plan, give taxpayers who really are reeling from all these changes the ability to have some sense of security that the major provisions and that the major philosophical approaches of this tax bill are going to remain unchanged.

I quite understand that we might have to raise revenues. I quite understand that there may be some technical corrections that the Senator from Texas spoke about, and that they will have to be made. But it would be my hope that this amendment sets in the minds of the Members of the Senate that the major provisions, the major thrusts of this bill, this historic bill that makes taxpayers out of all Americans, will remain unchanged for a 5-year period. The taxpayers and my constituents tell me. "Change the rules, that is fine, but leave them alone for a while." Or, "Just tell us what the rules are and we will work within them but leave them alone for a while." So I am very enthusiastic in my support of the Senator from Georgia.

It even occurs that, if real major changes are attempted in the provisions of this bill in the future, I and others may decide that we will require a 60-percent vote to make those changes. Of course, that is within the rules of the Senate to make such a requirement through the idea of extended debate.

It is important that we pass a bill, that the taxpayers have a sense that we are going to continue with the philosophy of this bill for a period of years so that they can plan and that the American economy can go forward. Clearly, the American economy cannot go forward in the same forceful way as it can if it feels that is has a tax law that it can rely upon.

So I am very much in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia and I thank him for bringing it to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. CRANSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I would just like to say that I think the Senator has made a fine further statement of the reasons for not tampering with the Tax Code for some time, but plainly pointing out that we have the flexibility that we need, if it becomes mandatory to do so for technical or for other reasons. I think the summary the Senator laid out of all the changes proposed and effectuated in tax laws in recent years bolsters the case for taking this position.

I neglected to mention one more change I hope will occur in conference, among several others, and that is the fairest possible transition rules and the fairest possible situation in regard to retroactivity. I do not think we have dealt with all of that yet as well as we should, and I hope that will be accomplished in conference.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. I thank the Senator from California.

I would say to my friend from Texas, who spoke about the necessity of making the changes now and again, that, very frankly, I believe that we make changes in tax law before we give the preceding law a chance to work or to feel its effect and that we respond too rapidly to demands of the constituency. So the idea of leaving the tax law and the vital provisions and the basic provisions of the tax law in place for a period of years is very appealing to me.

And, as the Senator from California pointed out, I did indeed point out that one of the remedies that Members of this body have is to prevent such changes from occurring without having a 60-percent vote. And some of us will feel very strongly about doing just that if basic changes are attempted in this tax bill after it is passed. I thank the Chair.

Mr. MELCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, whenever I talk to my accountant or a whole bunch of taxpayers from Montana, one of the things that comes up on tax matters is: "Is Congress going to change the rules and the law every year affecting the Tax Code?"

□ 1110

And so in answer to my accountant, and to my constituents' accountants, and to my constituents who ask this question, I am going to say that what the Senator from Georgia has offered as a sense-of-the-Congress resolution is a sense of a whole lot of taxpayers out across the country. They would like to see what they knew was in the Tax Code remain there. Having said that, I am going to vote for it because it is a sense of the Congress, a sense that it is common sense not to always be changing the rules on taxes. But I full well know that Congress will be looking at where the flaws are in the Tax Code, flaws in this particular bill, and it will probably be necessary, indeed prudent, to change some of the provisions in this bill itself.

But nevertheless, the sense of people out across the country is to keep it uniform as much as you can year after year so we know where we are and know what we should be planning on. On that basis, it is a proper amendment. It is a proper amendment in terms of the sense-of-the-Congress resolution. I shall vote for it.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, this is a very interesting sense-of-the-Senate resolution to be added to this bill on no changes. I am going to vote for it. But I want to predict without any question that the very people who will vote for it today and those who are the cosponsors of it will themselves be back here within 5 years asking for special changes in the tax laws. And as further evidence of that, I will guess that some who are cosponsors will come to the floor yet today asking for changes in this tax bill.

My own view is that the tax bill ought to be passed without any further amendments. My own view is that maybe there ought not to be any changes in 5 years, but the reality is that you will be back, others will be back, and they will say "But this is a special situation that we need to make a change." Go forward with your sense-of-the-Senate resolution, but I am certain my prediction will be a very accurate one.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator LEAHY be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MATTINGLY. In answer to the statement of my friend from Ohio, I want him to know that if I were an advocate of one of the Tax Code changes, I do not think I would vote for this resolution. I was talking about making technical changes as one thing. But if someone wants to make major policy changes, they should not support this sense-of-the-Congress resolution because they are going to be on record.

If I were a constituent and you voted in support of it, and turned around and tried to make some change in the rules of game, I would be looking at you. This would be playing football. You have four downs. You are out on the field. All of a sudden they change the rules in the middle of the game, and are only going to give you three downs. So the spectators might look down onto the field and want to know what is going on.

With that, I say the sense of the Congress does something. It puts this Congress on record. If there are any technical changes in the bill, which I am certain there will be, that is one thing. If there are major policy changes in this bill, then the Congress is going to have to answer to the private sector—the sector that makes America grow.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATTINGLY. I yield to the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. I congratulate the Senator from Georgia for his initiative. But would he not agree if there are 60 votes now on this resolution that it is a tremendous symbol insofar as the enforcement of the sense of the Senate in this amendment?

Mr. MATTINGLY. Yes; I do. I know my distinguished colleague from Alaska has been an advocate, as have I, of a statute change requiring a supermajority of 60 votes to change the Tax Code. I think this is the direction we need to be headed in this Congress, so that it would take a major move by Congress to really alter anything in this Tax Code.

I hope that we can join together in passing it some time in the future.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Could I ask my good friend from Georgia this question: Can I expect—I realize it is a sense of the Congress, it is not a law—that those who vote for this over the next 5 years will not be coming to the Ways and Means or Finance Committee asking for transition rules or changes in the law or things that might have some effect in their State if they vote for this resolution?

Mr. MATTINGLY. I guess you would have to get each one of them, line them up in the well, and get a pledge from each of them. I cannot speak for the others. But I know that the private sector, whether you are talking about agriculture, industry, small business, or whatever, is fed up with the changes that Congress makes in the Tax Code. I think they want some stability.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am absolutely delighted. I will vote for this. I am delighted. But I have way down deep in my sense a feeling when we get to reconciliation this year many of the Members who vote for this resolution are going to be coming to us asking for changes that affect their State, whether it be cooperatives, or whether it be a private venture. They may say, gentlemen, I thought you wanted this sense-of-the-Congress resolution.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I say to my colleague, there may be a real flaw in this bill, for there is no bill that passes through this Chamber that does not have a flaw in it. That is the reason we have committees, the reason why Members come to them and say that this was not exactly right, and we think we would like to have a correction. I think the chairman of the Finance Committee, and Senator BENTSEN, need to do everything they can to make sure that the private sector in this country works and works efficiently.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, may I respond to that?

Mr. MATTINGLY. Yes.

Mr. BENTSEN. I well understand. I understand how tired people and businesses are of changes in the tax law, and of not being able to plan and make the kind of capital investment they have to. I think this is a fine objective that the Senator from Georgia is talking about. But I also understand the realities of the situation. When you have hundreds and hundreds of pages in a new tax bill, and then we have to go to the conference and try to resolve differences with the House, then come back and vote on it, there are going to be many things that happen in this tax bill that will have unanticipated consequences.

The other problem that we could well run into is a situation where we have a recession in the country. We could well be in the situation where we are not able to turn around what is happening. We may want to avoid the tax laws for good and legitimate reasons. And the realities are that we will.

I am going to vote for your legislation, but only because I think it is an overall objective that we want to work toward.

Mr. MATTINGLY. First, let me say, this is not a sense of the Senate. This is a sense of the Congress. I am not talking about changes you take to the House-Senate conference. We all know there are going to be changes there. But this amendment works because, if there were no resolutions on the sense of the Congress, there would probably not be any conscience, either. It is the conscience of the Congress to say that we have a resolution stating that we do not want any major policy changes in the Tax Code. We want to make certain that the free enterprise system is able to work, and individuals will have some stability in their lives. I think this would be a welcome change. Therefore, when the Congress comes to look at changes, it will remember that it passed a resolution which was a sense of the Congress that said think about it before we take any precipitous action.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I say to the distinguished Senator from Georgia that he has been persistent in his pursuit of this amendment. I respect that. I respect what he is attempting to do. I think the people want stability out there. I think if we pass this bill this year there could be some changes next year. He has said his amendment would not prevent it from making those changes.

Frankly, I will probably have to be one of the few in the Chamber to vote against the amendment because I would like to preserve the opportunity in the next 5 years to give additional tax cuts to the American people. I view this amendment as being the amendment to argue not to change the law.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I say to my colleague from New Jersey, if he wants to cut tax rates, I will be standing right beside him.

Finally, we have gotten the attention of Congress; that the lower the rates, the less exemptions that are needed. And we should keep moving in that direction.

□ 1120

I would be happy to abrogate this sense-of-the-Congress resolution for that. I am certain the private sector would join us.

Mr. MELCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, before we have a vote on this sense-of-the-Congress amendment, I want to review a couple of points that we have to measure every amendment against.

This amendment will not cost any money. But every amendment that is proposed here that will touch the substance of the bill and change it has to become revenue neutral. That is, if we are going to have an amendment that changes some feature of the bill and there is not the same amount of revenue, then somewhere else in the bill we have to pick up that revenue.

Before this becomes ancient history, I want to describe exactly what occurred on the last amendment so that everybody can understand it.

The amendment was offered on the basis that it was revenue neutral. That is, we were going to reduce the tax revenue that would have been otherwise collected from people in agriculture, pertaining to the capital gains, and that was offset by revenue of a different nature, under the carryback procedures, where the corporations that have a loss can go back 3 years and pick up a check from Uncle Sam, from the Treasury, to reimburse them.

Who said it was revenue neutral?

The Joint Tax Committee said it was revenue neutral. They said what it would cost. It was agreed upon that it would be a wash.

The point of order that was raised by the chairman of the Finance Committee was a point of order that was not going to be raised, has not been raised during the consideration of this bill, and was not going to be raised, because the Joint Tax Committee, to be honest about it, said "If you are going to hold us to the absolute dollar of 1987 in revenue loss or revenue gain, we do not know whether we can do that in less than 60 days on every amendment that might be proposed."

Who disagreed? On what basis did the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee make the motion there was $10 million difference from what the Joint Tax Committee said it would be?

It was on the basis of the Budget Committee. They have estimators, too.

All during the consideration of this bill, as late as last Friday, he stated that he would not raise a point of order on differing figures that the Budget Committee found for 1987 as compared to the Joint Committee on Taxation, what they found for 1987 and for the life of the bill.

On that technicality the point of order was made. It was not improper, but what it means is if we would consistently follow that, every amendment would have to be cleared by the Budget Committee and by the Joint Tax Committee, to see that they were in agreement.

It is very confusing, I suppose, to the people of this country, our constituents, but, nevertheless, that is the situation.

I regret that it was raised on my amendment. I regret that it was raised only on my amendment. I do not think it should have been raised on any amendment because, after all, we are here trying to operate in the public interest, and whether something over 5 years in $10 million one way or the other, whose computer is accurate? I do not know. But I dare say that if you ask time after time the Joint Tax Committee and the Budget Committee to come up with figures, unless they doublecheck with each other, they are going to get different figures.

On the basis, the point of order prevailed. I wish we had voted on the merit of the amendment. The amendment certainly has merit. I just regret that we lost on the point of order. I would have liked to have won on the point of order. I would have liked to have voted on the merit; I would have liked to have won on that.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I can understand the need for stability in the Tax Code. That is one reason why I am deeply concerned by the many retroactive features in the tax bill which is before us now. We should avoid changing the rules in the middle of the game.

But this amendment goes beyond that. By expressing the sense of the Congress that the parts of the Tax Code which are changed in this bill should not be changed for the next 5 years, this resolution would prohibit even totally prospective changes in the Tax Code. Therefore, changes which would apply to activities not yet even undertaken would be prohibited.

This amendment is troubling for two other reasons. First, it is misleading the very people we are striving to assist. There will be changes in the Tax Code over the next 5 years. The debate on this bill and on this amendment makes that clear. We should not pretend otherwise or ask people to put trust in our pretense.

Second, if we rule the income Tax Code off limits as a way to raise revenues, then we will only be left with excise taxes as a means to help achieve our deficit reduction goals. This would make a shift in the tax burden from income taxes to regressive excise taxes inevitable. The working poor, one of the groups which the authors of this tax reform bill most seek to assist, will bear the heaviest burden.●

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

So the amendment (No. 2133) was agreed to.

□ 1150

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I have been asked about further votes, at least for the next hour or so.

Senator DURENBERGER has an amendment which has been cleared on both sides, and we are prepared to accept it.

Senator CHILES has a sense-of-the-Senate resolution which I think he will offer but not ask for a vote on it. I do not know whether he will pursue it.

Those are two amendments we can get out of the way. Two more amendments have been withdrawn. So I think we have a good chance of finishing the amendments, with luck, perhaps by 3 o'clock, with no more than three or four votes.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we have a matter we need to pass very quickly to get to the House. It will take about 1 minute. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZING CHANGES IN ENROLLMENT OF S. 2414

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution on behalf of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], and I ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 152) authorizing changes in the enrollment of S. 2414.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution on this side.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, this is a concurrent resolution to authorize a change in the enrollment of S. 2414, amendments to S. 49, the Firearms Owners' Protection Act. As Senators will recall, both S. 49 and S. 2414 passed the Senate by unanimous voice vote on May 6, 1986.

This resolution will do nothing more than add language to S. 2414 that signifies the clear understanding reached by all relevant parties prior to its passage. I offer this concurrent resolution to express our agreement that the provisions of S. 2414 were offered to amend three sections of S. 49, the Firearm Owners' Protection Act.

By offering this concurrent resolution, any perceived confusion as to the effect of S. 2414 should be resolved.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I have a concern regarding the use of the word "carry" in the amendments to section 926A in S. 2414. The phrase reads "any person who is not otherwise prohibited by this chapter from transporting, shipping, or receiving a firearm shall be entitled to transport a firearm for any lawful purpose from any place where he may lawfully possess and carry such firearm." As the sponsor of S. 2414, what is the intent of the Senator from South Carolina in using the word "carry" in the provision?

Mr. THURMOND. I say to the Senator that I am pleased to clarify the proper interpretation of the word "carry." The first part of the provision, "any person who is not otherwise prohibited by this chapter from transporting, shipping, or receiving a firearm shall be entitled to transport a firearm for any lawful purpose" means that only persons able to lawfully possess firearms under Federal law can rely upon the safe harbor provisions in 926A to transport firearms in interstate commerce for lawful purposes. The phrase that follows, "possess and carry," also requires that persons must be allowed to transport such firearms under relevant State law. It is clear that the term "carry" in this instance is intended to mean the ability to put the firearm in a vehicle and transport it to the place of destination.

The use of the word "carry" is not intended to mean and does not mean that a State license to carry a concealed weapon is a predicate to valid use of the safe harbor provision in section 926A. Of course, wherever a permit to carry a concealed firearm is a prerequisite of State or local law, to legal transportation of an unloaded, inaccessible firearm, the safe harbor provisions does not modify such laws. However, once again, the use of the term "carry" in my bill does not in any way incorporate such a prerequisite into section 926A. I hope this addresses the concern of the Senator.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the Senator. His intent and interpretation are consistent with my understanding that the word "carry," as it is used, means "transport."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 152) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 2414), to amend title 18 of the United States Code, shall make the following chance:

At the end of the bill add the following:

This Act and the amendments made by this Act, intended to amend the Firearms Owners' Protection Act, shall become effective on the date on which the section they are intended to amend in such Firearms Owners' Protection Act becomes effective and shall apply to the amendments to title 18, United States Code, made by such Act.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I thank my colleagues.

This has been referred to as a sort of "son-of-a-gun" amendment. That explains it for many people who have an interest in it. That is how it came out of the committee.

TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986

AMENDMENT NO. 2162

(Purpose: To treat certain entities as trusts for tax purposes)

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follow:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] proposes an amendment numbered 2162.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of subtitle P, of title XVI, insert the following new section:

SEC. . TREATMENT OF CERTAIN ENTITIES AS TRUSTS FOR TAX PURPOSES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, if the entity described in subsection (b) makes an election under subsection (c), such entity shall be treated as a trust to which subpart E of part 1 of subchapter J of chapter 1 of such Code applies.

(A) shall be made by the board of trustees of the entity, and

(B) shall not be valid unless accompanied by an agreement described in paragraph (2).

(2) AGREEMENT.—The agreement described in this paragraph is a written agreement signed by the board of trustees of the entity which provides that the entity will not—

(A) sell any trust property,

(B) purchase any additional trust properties, or

(C) receive any income other than—

(ii) interest or other income attributable to ordinary and necessary reserves of the entity.

(3) PERIOD FOR WHICH ELECTION IS IN EFFECT.—An election under this subsection shall be in effect during the period—

(A) beginning on the first day of the first taxable year following the taxable year in which the election is made, and

(4) MANNER OF ELECTION.—Any election under this subsection shall be made in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate may prescribe.

(d) SPECIAL RULES FOR TAXATION OF TRUST.—

(1) ELECTION TREATED AS A LIQUIDATION.—If an election is made under subsection (c) with respect to any entity—

(B) any person holding an interest in the property held by such entity as of such time shall be treated as a qualified electing shareholder for purposes of section 333 of such Code.

(2) TERMINATION OF ELECTION.—If an entity ceases to be described in subsection (b) or violates any term of the agreement described in subsection (c)(2), then the tax imposed on such entity for the taxable year in which such cessation or violation occurs shall be increased by the sum of—

(A) the amount of taxes which would have been imposed on such entity during any taxable year with respect to which an election under subsection (c) was in effect if such election had not been in effect, plus

(B) interest determined for the period—

(i) beginning on the due date for any such taxable year, and

(ii) ending on the due date for the taxable year in which such cessation or violation occurs, by using the rates and method applicable under section 6621 for underpayments of tax for such period.

(3) TRUST CEASING TO EXIST.—Paragraph (2) shall not apply if the trust ceases to be described in subsection (b) or violates the agreement in subsection (c)(2) because the trust ceases to exist.

(e) The election described in Subsection (c) shall be effective for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment of this legislation. The election shall terminate five years from the date of enactment of this legislation unless the Trust petitions a court of competent jurisdiction and the court acts to remove from the trust instrument any powers deemed by the court to be inconsistent with the operation of the entity as a trust for tax purposes as described in the Internal Revenue Ruling dated November 1, 1983.

At the end of title VI, insert:

SEC. 637. MODIFICATION OF DEFINITION OF RELATED PARTY.

(i) by striking out "80 percent or more in value" in subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "more than 50 percent of the value",

(ii) by striking out "80 percent or more" in subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "more than 50 percent", and

(iii) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (A), by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting ", and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(C) any entity which is a related person to such person under paragraph (3), (10), (11), or (12) of section 267(b)."

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1239(c)(1) is amended by striking out "88-percent owned entity" in the heading thereof and in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "controlled entity",

(3) CONSTRUCTIVE OWNERSHIP.—Section 1239(c) is amended by striking out paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) CONSTRUCTIVE OWNERSHIP.—For purposes of this section, ownership shall be determined in accordance with rules similar to the rules under section 267(c) (other than paragraph (3) thereof)."

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, the amendment before the Senate is a very narrowly drafted amendment which would rectify the unjust tax treatment of an iron ore trust in the State of Minnesota.

I intended to offer this amendment last evening, but concern was expressed that the amendment as drafted would have penalized the trust because of inadvertent actions in the future by the trustees of the trust. I believe we have addressed this problem by requiring the trust to go into court and seek the removal of any of its business power.

I thank in particular the Senator from Ohio for suggesting that change to us. As I understand it, the change would require the trustees to petition a court in the next 5 years to have the business powers contained in the trust instrument removed. According to the terms of the amendment, the trustees are not to exercise the business powers. If they do, they lose the tax status that is proffered them in this amendment.

So I appreciate the addition to this amendment by the Senator from Ohio. It helps us to accomplish the ends which we sought to accomplish by the amendment as originally drafted.

I have discussed this with the chairman of the committee and with the ranking minority member of the committee, and I believe there is no objection.

THE GREAT NORTHERN IRON ORE TRUST

Mr. President, the amendment I have offered today would rectify the unjust tax treatment of an iron ore trust that operates on the Mesabi Range in my State.

The Great Northern Iron Ore Trust was created in 1906, several years before the U.S. Constitution was amended to provide for an income tax. Great Northern's sole activity is receiving royalties from the long-term leasing of Minnesota Mesabi Range taconite lands and distributing the royalties to trust beneficiaries.

Although Great Northern is a trust created under Minnesota trust law and is subject to control and supervision by Minnesota courts in the same manner as other trusts, Great Northern has been ruled an "Association" taxable as a corporation by the IRS and in two Federal court decisions.

Because Great Northern was created before the Federal income tax was even in existence, it was created as an irrevocable trust with a separately owned reversionary interest. It therefore does not have the opportunity to model its trust agreement to fit the requirements of Treasury regulations.

Let me give you some of the history of Great Northern. Following passage of the first Tax Act, the IRS ruled that Great Northern was not an "Association" and should be taxed as a trust. However, in 1942, IRS revoked its prior ruling and ruled GNI taxable as an association. A court of appeals upheld the IRS ruling, finding that the trust instrument gives the trustees business powers and also because the trustees managed and directed the controlled corporations whose stock the trust owned.

In the 1950's and 1960's, many mineral corporations were liquidated, including the controlled corporations owned by the Great Northern trustees. For most corporate stockholders, this meant that there would no longer be corporate tax on the royalty income. However, since GNI was itself an "Association," it was unable to remove double taxation through liquidation of the controlled corporations.

In 1978, the Minnesota Supreme Court held that the Great Northern trustees are subject to the normal common law trust rules in regard to their management of the trust assets. The court ruled that the trustees do not actively conduct a mining operation but, "similar to any family trust, simply holds lands which they let under long-term royalty leases and collect the income for distribution to the certificate holders."

Because Great Northern is a common law trust created under a 1906 irrevocable trust instrument, it does not have the flexibility enjoyed by business corporations of reorganizing to fit either the requirements for fixed investment trusts, Treasury Regulation 301.7701-4(c) or the limited partnerships, Treasury Regulation 301.7701-3.

Great Northern has requested an advance ruling from the IRS that if the trust instrument were amended by order of a local court to remove its business powers, Great Northern would no longer be taxable as an association. The IRS turned down Great Northern's request because the Service found the trust instrument still appears to grant it business powers that would classify it as an association. This, despite the fact that the trust does not utilize these powers and has been classified under State law as a trust. Therefore, the trustees decided that it would be futile to ask a court to remove its business powers since the IRS, for reasons that appear completely arbitrary, refuses to reclassify Great Northern as a trust.

As a result, Great Northern appears to be the only mineral trust operating in America that is subject to double taxation. Because it is a flow through trust, double taxation occurs when the income is taxed at the trust level, and again when the income is distributed to income beneficiaries. Other mineral trusts, including Mesabi Trust, Apache Petroleum, Houston Oil Royalty Trust, Mesa Royalty Trust, all are taxed as trusts and, thus, not subject to double taxation.

Mr. President, the arbitary and unfair treatment of Great Northern is exacerbated by the fact that the Mesabi Trust, whose sole activity like Great Northern is to collect royalties from the long-term leasing of Minnesota taconite lands, was granted an IRS ruling that it is not an association. Mesabi operates in a fashion identical to Great Northern. But by a quirk of an IRS bureaucrat's decision, Mesabi is taxed at much lower rates than Great Northern.

As a result of arbitrary IRS decisionmaking, some Great Northern Trust beneficiaries receive only 30 cents of every dollar of trust income. That's because the income is taxed to the trust at a combined Federal and Minnesota corporate rate of 40 percent. Second, the after-tax balance available for distribution to the trust beneficiaries is taxed to them as dividend income at rates up to 50 percent. Thus, the total tax burden to Great Northern beneficiaries can be as high as 70 percent.

The amendment I am offering would remedy this unfair situation by allowing Great Northern to file an election with the IRS to be taken out of "Association" status and be taxed as a trust. By making the election, the trustees would surrender the right to exercise any business powers included in the trust instrument. And to ensure that Great Northern never exercises these business powers, Great Northern would agree that, if it violates the conditions of the election, it would be subject to an assessment for all back taxes at corporate rates, plus interest.

Under the election, Great Northern could not sell any trust property, purchase any additional trust properties, or receive any income other than income from long-term mineral leases, or interest or other income attributable to ordinary and necessary reserves of the trust.

Mr. President, this amendment will serve to promote fairness and tax equity for the beneficiaries of the Great Northern Trust. It would be wrong to further prolong the confiscatory tax burden that this one single trust must endure. It has shown a total and complete willingness to give up any conceivable residue of business powers that would classify it as an association. It doesn't use those powers, has not used those powers and does not intend to use those powers in the future. Arbitrary IRS decisionmaking should not stand in the way of promoting equity and fairness.

To offset the $8 million revenue cost associated with this amendment, the definition of "related party" for purposes of the installment sale rules would be modified to include a person and all entities more than 50 percent owned, directly or indirectly, with respect to that person. Related persons would also include entities more than 50 percent owned, directly or indirectly, by the same person. Under current rules, a related person includes a person and all entities that are 80 percent owned, directly or indirectly, with respect to that person.

As a result, installment sale treatment would not be available for transactions between related parties unless it is established to the satisfaction of the Internal Revenue Service that tax avoidance was not a principal purpose of the sale.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have looked at the amendment. I am not certain of any objection on this side of the aisle, and I urge that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota states the matter right on target. There were some concerns we had that the trust would be able to go back and forth and take advantage of the tax laws. The amendment has been changed in such a way to keep that from happening or making that possible.

The Senator from Minnesota has been very cooperative. I think the amendment is very fair in the manner in which it is presently drafted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2162) was agreed to.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

(Mrs. KASSEBAUM assumed the chair.)

Mr. PACKWOOD. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1210

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, last year Congress approved the Gramm/Rudman/Hollings deficit reduction law. It says—year-by-year—through 1991, we will reduce the deficit by specified amounts until we eliminate the deficit altogether.

The tax bill is called revenue neutral. The tax burden is rearranged, but the net effect is to neither add to or subtract from the deficit. And over the long-range path of the tax bill, that's just about the way it works.

The Finance Committee did its job very well. They did their work on income distribution and tax equity. The bottom line over 5 years is revenue neutrality. But when it comes to the job the Budget Committee has to do, the Finance Committee overlooked the fact that we have a deficit to fight on an annual basis.

In 1986 and in 1987, the tax bill actually produces an increase in revenues of nearly $31 billion. While it is true the tax bill gives a revenue windfall in 1986 and 1987, the picture for 1988 and 1989 changes drastically. In those 2 years, we actually lose a total of at least $42 billion.

If we use the tax windfall this year and next year, and rely on it for deficit reduction, it would give us what amounts to deficit reduction written in disappearing ink. And it will disappear in 1988 and 1989. We would have to wake up in 1988 and 1989 to what we gave away in 1986 and 1987.

The point I want to make is this. Let us not trick ourselves into thinking we can put deficit-reduction and tax reform together in a way where one drains the other dry. It cannot be done.

How can we avoid the problem? Actually, there are two ways, and we have to make sure we do both.

First, implement the fairshare, deficit-reduction revenues in the budget resolution. They are crucial to winning the fight against the deficit.

The second step which is also critical is to even out the fluctuations in the tax bill, so that we will not have windfalls 1 year, and dry wells the next.

The resolution that Senator DOMENICI and I are introducing today calls on the conferees to reduce the year-to-year revenue fluctuations that now exist in the tax reform bill.

The good work of the Finance Committee can be made even better if the revenue fluctuations are reduced. We would be able to proceed with the task of deficit reduction—free of the false windfall in 1987 and facing less of a challenge in 1988.

Let us be clear about what this resolution says. It calls on the conferees to achieve actual revenue smoothing by altering some of the provisions of the Finance Committee's bill.

We must focus on the actual cashflows to and from the Treasury. It is the actual revenue path that influences credit demands, interest rates and the economy.

The Domenici-Gramm scorekeeping amendment does not eliminate the need for the conferees to reduce the actual revenue fluctuations.

But their scorekeeping amendment and this one are complementary. We are saying that the fluctuations should be reduced. The Domenici-Gramm amendment tells us how to score the fluctuations that remain.

There is ample leeway to achieve a more stable revenue path. The Joint Committee on Taxation has provided us with estimates of the revenue smoothing that could be achieved by altering some of the effective dates and phasing in certain tax provisions. In addition, there are significant differences in the House and Senate base-broadening provisions—over $25 billion worth over 5 years—that provide plenty of room to iron out these large revenue swings.

We continue to believe that we can have both tax reform and deficit reduction. But having both will be far easier if our revenue path is more stable. I urge my colleagues to join in support of this resolution.

I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD estimates of some of the major options for reducing the revenue fluctuations.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 2163

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate that the year-to-year revenue fluctuations produced by the Committee on Finance amendment to H.R. 3838 should be reduced in conference)

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, at this time I send to the desk my amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr CHILES], proposes an amendment numbered 2163.

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the amendment, insert the following new section:

SEC. . SENSE OF THE SENATE ON REVENUE FLUCTUATIONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) the Committee on Finance amendment to H.R. 3838 (an Act to reform the internal revenue laws of the United States) produces revenues that—

(A) exceed current-law revenues (the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) revenue baseline) by—

(i) $7,000,000,000, in fiscal year 1986,

(ii) $23,000,000,000, in fiscal year 1987, and

(iii) $11,000,000, in fiscal year 1991, and

(B) fall below current-law revenues by—

(i) $21,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1988,

(ii) $21,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1989, and

(iii) $400,000,000 in fiscal year 1990;

(2) the Committee amendment satisfies revenue neutrality over a six-year period, but the revenue shortfalls in fiscal years 1988 and 1989 will make the attainment of the Gramm-Rudman deficit goals more difficult;

(3) numerous options for restraining yearly revenue fluctuations without affecting the fundamental fabric of the Committee amendment are available to the committee of conference on H.R. 3838, in the form of altering effective dates, phasing-in certain provisions, and resolving the major differences in the provisions for broadening the tax base contained in H.R. 3838 and the Committee Amendment;

(4) in some instances, leveling the revenue fluctuations could result in a further reduction in tax burdens on individuals and corporations in 1987; and

(5) altering the provisions of the Committee amendment to achieve a more stable revenue outlook would eliminate the need to resort to artificial accounting conventions, such as the use of a trust fund that would deviate from the actual cash flows to and from the Treasury.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the committee of conference on H.R. 3838 should report Federal tax reform legislation that produces a revenue path with minimal revenue fluctuations.

Mr. CHILES. I pretty well discussed what I think the amendment does. I hope it will be acceptable.

Mr. LONG. Madam President, I have no objection.

Mr. PACKWOOD. We have no objection on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment (No. 2163) was agreed to.

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. DIXON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FINAL PASSAGE OF H.R. 3838, THE TAX REFORM BILL

Mr. DIXON. Madam President, the upcoming vote on final passage represents a real landmark for the Senate. The Senate does not get very many opportunities to make real history—the vote we will cast on H.R. 3838, however, is truly historic.

The Senate bill is a fundamental overhaul and reform of the Internal Revenue Code. It meets the fundamental objectives of tax reform. It is simple, and it is fair. It ensures that wealthy taxpayers and profitable corporations will not be able to avoid paying taxes. It ensures that investments will be made for economic reasons, rather than tax reasons. It ensures that those making the same income are paying roughly the same tax, instead of the wildly varying levels that are possible today.

The Senate bill is not perfect, though. There are real problems. The bill does not adequately handle the issue of deductibility of State sales taxes. Ending the deductibility of individual retirement accounts for many taxpayers is also, in my view, a real mistake. Further, the bill does not provide as much tax relief for middle-income taxpayers as the House bill does. In fact, under the Senate bill, a significant number of middle-income taxpayers could end up paying higher taxes.

I have spoken on many of these subjects earlier in this debate, so I will not take the time of my colleagues to reiterate my concerns now. I continue to believe these issues must be addressed before we send any final legislation to the President for his signature.

There will therefore be a very heavy burden on the upcoming House-Senate conference on the tax bill, Mr. President. I believe we should have resolved many of these issues on the Senate floor, rather than passing resolutions urging the conferees to do so. Because of the Senate's failure to do so, the conference will be the body that determines whether the tax reform effort will produce final legislation that lives up to its early promise.

I am voting for final passage today because I support tax reform, because this bill has considerable merit, and because there is still an opportunity to address the serious issues that were not handled here on the Senate floor. I am confident that the conference committee can resolve the remaining issues in a way that will put to rest the lingering doubts that I and many others have about this bill. I look forward to seeing and voting for the improved conference bill.

I yield back my time, Madam President, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Madam President, the Senate has come to the end of a historic debate on a truly extraordinary tax reform bill. We have had so-called "Tax Reform Acts" before—1969, 1976, 1981, and—just 2 years ago—the Tax Reform Act of 1984.

As the amendment that was on the floor a few minutes ago by the Senator from Georgia indicated, maybe this place is getting tired of tax reform.

But I believe this bill is unlike any of its predecessors. It marks a fundamental shift in the philosophy of the Government of the United States and the role it plays in directing the resources and priorities of the Nation's and, inevitably, the world's economy.

Historians will judge this legislation a revolutionary step in the evolutionary process of reshaping how the Government taxes the earnings of its citizens.

The first phase of the tax reform process has focused almost exclusively on the question of what is the maximum percentage of income the Federal Government can demand from its citizens. The rate of income taxation has been the central question ever since the 1960's, when the top rate was reduced from 91 percent to 70 percent. It was in the 1960's when we used inflation and indexed income increases to drive the growth in Federal tax revenues.

But the tax reform rate revolution really got underway in 1978 when our late distinguished colleague in the House, Bill Stieger, of Wisconsin, fought almost singlehandedly to cut the captial gains rate to 28 percent.

It was since 1978 when the majority of the people, Madam President, in this body came to this Senate: BILL BRADLEY, who is also referred to as one of the fathers of this particular philosophy of tax rate; DICK GEPHARDT in the House; the occupant of the chair [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], myself, and others, having arrived here since 1978, and the Bill Steiger rate reduction tax reform.

The Economic Recovery Tax Act (ERTA) initiated by President Reagan in 1981 brought all income tax rates down not just capital gains. By enacting ERTA, we can all claim credit for reducing the top tax rate from 70 percent to 50 percent.

But, more importantly, we ended the tax policy that began in the 1960's of automatically increasing tax revenue to the Federal Government by increasing inflation.

ERTA reduced all individual rates by 25 percent over 3 years and ended the insidious "bracket creep" which forced every taxpayer in the country to pay higher taxes simply because of inflation.

Madam President, today we are at the end of the beginning of the second phase of the income tax resolution. In the span of a mere 5 years, we will have brought the top tax rate down from 70 to 27 percent. But this phase of the tax revolution is different because this bill recognizes that low rates can only be achieved with a broad base of income subject to tax. And the ultimate broad-based tax is a fair tax because it ensures that all Americans, except the poorest members of our society, pay some portion of their earnings in taxes.

The base broadening achieved in this bill, however, does not go far enough. There remain many "off limits" parts of the tax base that this bill does not address. This bill still favors certain types of consumption over others. It does nothing to address tax subsidies provided for health and welfare expenditures which benefit only certain groups of citizens.

I am certain that we will again seek to broaden the tax base and ultimately bring rates down even further, making the income tax system fairer and more equitable for all citizens.

It was for that reason that I opposed the amendment that was on this floor a short while ago. We can broaden the base further. We can reduce the rates further. This, Madam President, is but a start.

But even after we accomplish that goal, the tax revolution will not be complete until we restructure the payroll tax system which represents the most inequitable and unfair tax imposed by Federal and State Governments.

I am reminded at this time of the words of Thomas Jefferson who said that if our ideals are to survive, this society must undergo a succession of revolutions. Passage of this bill today is such a revolutionary event. However, the revolution has yet to be consummated; for, in the future, we must take a hard look at those portions of the tax base which in 1986 remain off limits.

□ 1230

This bill removes nearly 6 million of the working poor from the tax rolls—a staggering accomplishment. And that means 1 in 4 adults in America—44 million people will pay not a single dime in Federal income taxes. Although I applaud this accomplishment, I note with sadness that millions of these working poor are still required to pay more than 7 percent of their earnings in Social Security taxes.

That leaves only 33 million Americans out of 100-some million taxpayers who will find it necessary to file more than a simple one-page 1040A tax return.

Economic equity is an important element of this bill. This legislation adopts many of the concepts embodied in the Economic Equity Act which I have authored each year since 1981. Although the bill does not address all of the inequities that women still endure, it is a milestone in the annual battles we are winning in the war to eliminate legislated economic discrimination against women in America.

We broadened retirement plan coverage rules and cut in half the retirement plan vesting rules so that more younger workers and working women will have greater economic security in their retirement years. We have also preserved child care credits which are essential for today's women to remain in the job force.

All families in America will surely benefit from the higher standard deduction and an almost doubled personal and dependent exemption. I have assured that we maintain special tax benefits for those families who adopt special-needs children—those who grow up with certain disabilities. And this bill takes special notice of the farming families of rural America who are enduring a prolonged economic and psychological depression.

We have made several important tax changes that will help preserve the tradition of the family farm. Under this bill, financially troubled farmers will be able to renegotiate their bank loans and not pay taxes on the loan writedown. And for those troubled farmers who lost their land through foreclosure, we have extended tax-exempt bond financing so they can buy a new farm and some equipment and start their lives over again. When they turn the financial corner, they will get a break on their taxes because we have retained income averaging for farmers.

Farmers and other self-employed people will also be able to share in some of the tax-free fringe benefits that up until now have only been available to corporate employees.

For the first time, self-employed workers will be able to take a tax deduction for a portion of their health insurance costs. This is a badly needed reform that has been too long in coming.

This legislation injects a much needed element of fairness into our Tax Code. By drastically cutting rates, closing loopholes and limiting the ability to deduct paper losses, we have closed the door on the tax shelter merchants who have distorted economic decisionmaking, especially in agriculture and real estate. Small Minnesota farmers trying to eke out a living will no longer have to compete with tax shelter farmers whose only interest in farming is to generate tax losses.

This bill will make certain that hard-working Americans will no longer read stories in the press about how companies earning billions of dollars pay no taxes, and how millionaires wind up paying less in taxes then a middle-class family earning $25,000. Thanks to the alternative minimum tax provisions in this bill, every corporation and every wealthy individual will have to pay some tax.

The American tradition of charitable giving is strongly encouraged through this bill.

Although many of us would have preferred that we could continue the full nonitemizer charitable deduction, I believe this legislation will encourage even greater charitable giving by Americans because they will have more disposable income and because we have preserved full deductibility of charitable contributions for people who itemize. It is this latter group that accounts for more than 70 percent of charitable contributions. In addition, we ended a threat to hospitals, universities, and other nonprofit institutions that gifts of appreciated property would be included in the minimum tax.

In the area of fiscal federalism, we have taken some important steps forward in redefining what public policy goals we should strive to encourage through State and local government financing. Although I strongly oppose restricting the deductibility of sales taxes—the leading source of revenue to all State governments—I am encouraged that this inequity will be overturned in the conference committee.

We have made some tough public policy choices that will affect how State and local governments will deliver services to their citizens.

While a greater share of the cost of downtown redevelopment projects will be borne by private developers instead of taxpayers, cities and States will not be handcuffed in financing the rebuilding of their infrastructure that will provide lasting benefits for today's and future generations.

This legislation encourages greater reliance on public-private partnerships in delivering essential public services. In so doing, we have redefined public policy goals so that public financing will no longer be available for building more sports stadiums, trade show facilities, and parking lots.

We removed multifamily rental housing from State volume cap limits and gave such housing a shorter depreciation life than commercial real estate. And, for the first time, we will allow State and local governments to issue tax-exempt bonds for the construction of hazardous waste treatment facilities.

This bill represents a giant step in what I would call "industrial equity." For too long, the retail, high-tech, and service sector has been subsidizing tax breaks for traditional basic industries. We can no longer justify such cross-industry subsidies in an economy inevitably moving further and further toward less dependence on manufacturing. I believe that whatever future subsidies we provide our basic industries—and we must—must be financed more explicitly and more directly; therefore, more efficiently.

The current disparities between effective tax rates paid by different industries just is not fair. Is there any reason that utilities pay an effective U.S. tax rate of less than 11 percent while the pharmaceutical industry pays nearly 33 percent? The effective tax rate of the chemical industry, according to the Joint Tax Committee, is less than 4 percent. By contrast, the trucking industry pays more than a 38-percent rate. These disparities will significantly narrow as a result of this legislation.

Madam President, I represent the State of Minnesota—a State which is half basic industries and half high-tech, high-service business. It is half high tax rate and half low tax rate. Half love this revolution and half are hurt by it. The prolonged debate on the floor of the Senate these closing days has been over this conflict and over the transition into this new approach to taxation.

I do not mind saying to my colleagues that I have used my position on the Finance Committee to the advantage of the people of Minnesota, as I have done in the tax bills of 1981, 1982, and 1984. I have used my position to get special rules for my people that have saved and built hundreds and thousands of jobs in my State.

In so doing, I have helped to expand the availability of public facilities from stadiums, convention centers, and race tracks to district heating and cooling, alcohol fuel plants, and airlines. I have used these tax bills to provide low- and moderate-income housing at rates that would not otherwise have been affordable. And I am glad I did.

As with any revolutionary change, this legislation carries with it a certain degree of risk. It may serve to hasten the decline of our basic manufacturing and raw material industries. It may put additional stresses on rental housing.

The rules in this bill restricting deductions for contributions to individual retirement accounts may further discourage Americans from building up savings. And the elimination of the capital gains differential may discourage investors from taking risks in emerging sectors of the economy that would otherwise provide jobs and growth for the future.

I hope none of this happens. I hope the supply-siders are right. Only by following a compass that points somewhere can we get anywhere. This tax bill—unlike any of its predecessors—points in the direction of a new national policy on the taxation of income. It removes some incentives for debt-financed consumption. And that is an important first step toward the goal of evolving a system that taxes consumption not the savings and investment income that is vitally needed for continued economic prosperity.

Madam President, the revolutionary changes we have fashioned through this tax bill are but steps in an evolutionary process that began in 1776 and will be continuing into the 21st century. Our Tax Code reflects our changing values as a people in relation to their Government. And this legislation reflects a renewed confidence in our individual citizens, and a diminished reliance on a government and the membership of a tax-writing committee which substitutes its priorities for those of the governed.

Yet I believe the revolution that this bill represents is but a beginning, not the end, of our search to make the tax laws fairer and more equitable. For, as I mentioned earlier, this legislation addresses only a small part of the problems that we as a society must soon come to grips with.

The central question that will dominate the remainder of this century is inextricably tied to taxation: "What do we want from Government and how much are we willing to pay for it, and from what form of tax?" Despite the promises of economic growth by supply-side economists, this legislation does not really address that question. Until we do, our economy will continue to teeter on the edge of uncertainty.

□ 1240

We are kidding ourselves if we do not recognize the economic and social disaster we are courting with huge and hemorrhaging deficits. We will have to reexamine our tax laws, along with our spending priorities, and decide how much debt we are willing to pile on our children and grandchildren.

This bill does make the tax laws fairer for today's taxpayers. But how can we call a tax system "fair" which ensures that tomorrow's taxpayers will be forced to pay the ever-mounting interest on the debt we are accumulating at unheard of levels?

Before we can tell our constituents that we in Washington made the tax system fairer, we will have to take a long and hard look at the most onerous, regressive, discriminatory, and unfair tax that the Federal Government levies—the payroll tax.

Workers and businesses now must contribute more than $6,000 per worker per year to fund a Social Security system that will provide little, if any, retirement security for today's generation of young workers.

Under the current laws, payroll taxes are going in only one direction—up; while the chances that young workers today will see any Social Security benefits are going down, down, down.

The payroll tax system stands the concepts of fairness and equity on their head. There is nothing fair about a tax system where a young two-earner couple earning $45,000 a year pays $214 more in just Social Security payroll taxes than an executive earning $100,000. Add in their unemployment and workers compensation taxes and the inequity further widens. How can we justify a payroll tax system which requires of a worker earning $20,000 that he contribute 7.15 percent of his pay to Social Security, while an executive earning $300,000 contributes barely 1 percent?

The payroll taxes we levy on employees and employers are designed to afford income security to all Americans. Through payroll taxes we seek to provide retirement security through Social Security; health insurance for the elderly through Medicare; and unemployment compensation for workers in transition. At the State level, we add further tax burdens to pay for unemployment and workers compensation and for disability insurance.

If we can look into the future, I suspect we will integrate the payroll taxes for these social insurance programs and replace payroll taxes with a tax on consumption. A consumption tax will not only replace the payroll tax but can also be used to diminish the burden of income taxes and ultimately end the taxation of savings.

If we truly want to reform the tax on income, we must overcome our reluctance to look at the hidden tax subsidies of employee fringe benefits. Where is the equity, the fairness, and the justification for allowing million dollar executives of large corporations to receive tax free health benefits while a Minnesota farmer, who can barely survive, has to pay for health insurance out of his hard-earned after-tax income?

Now that we are headed for a two-bracket income tax, it will become more obvious to the small businessmen and the self-employed person that they are subsidizing too much of the excessive consumption of health and welfare benefits by the highest income Americans and the employees of the Fortune 500 companies.

Until we place a limit on the tax-free nature of employer-provided health insurance, and allow all citizens to get a tax deduction for their health insurance, it will be difficult to claim true fairness in the taxation of income.

Madam President, I have appreciated the opportunity to be part of this revolutionary process.

Madam President, we can pause for a time now and congratulate ourselves on what we have accomplished in this bill. But there is much more work we have to do if we are to achieve our goal of making the tax system of America the most equitable and fair in the world. President Reagan called tax reform "the second American revolution." I believe the second American revolution has just begun.

AMENDMENT NO. 2164

(Purpose: To extend the common paymaster rule for FICA taxes to partnerships, estates, and trusts)

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] proposes an amendment numbered 2164.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of title XVII, insert:

SEC. —. EXTENSION OF FICA AND FUTA COMMON PAYMASTER RULES.

(a) FICA.—Section 3121(s) (relating to concurrent employment by 2 or more employers) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of the preceding sentence, a partnership shall be treated as if it were a corporation."

(b) FUTA.—Section 3306(p) (relating to concurrent employment by 2 or more employers) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of the preceding sentence, a partnership shall be treated as if it were a corporation."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to wages paid or incurred after December 31, 1986

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Madam President, the amendment I have sent to the desk would correct an inequity in our existing Tax Code relating to the collection of employment taxes in the situation where an employee works concurrently for two related employers. It would also make a technical change to the general transition rule provided in the bill for hydroelectric energy generating facilities. Both portions of the amendment are very simple and straightforward.
